Roman Catholic Church. The juristic personality of the Roman Catholic Church, with the right to sue and to take and hold property has been recognized by all systems of European law from the fourth century. It was formally recognized between Spain and the Papacy and by Spanish laws from the beginning of the settlements in the Indies, also by our treaty with Spain in 1898, whereby its property rights were solemnly safeguarded. Municipality of Ponce v. Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico, 210 U.S. 296, 28 S.Ct. 338, 53 L.Ed. 599.

Roman law. In a general sense, comprehends all the laws which prevailed among the Romans, without regard to the time of their origin, including the collections of Justinian. In a more restricted sense, the Romans understand this term merely the law of Justinian, as adopted by them.

In England and America, it appears to be customary to use the phrase, indifferently with "civil law," to designate the whole system of Roman jurisprudence, including the Corpus Juris Civilis; or, if any distinction is drawn, the expression "civil law" denotes the system of jurisprudence obtaining in those countries of continental Europe which have derived their juridical notions and principles from the Justinian collection, while "Roman law" is reserved as the proper appellation of the body of law developed under the government of Rome from the earliest times to the fall of the empire. See Civil law.

Rood of land. The fourth part of an acre in square measure, or one thousand two hundred and ten square yards.

Roomer. A lodger; one who rents a room or rooms.

Root of descent. The same as "stock of descent."

Root of title. The document with which an abstract of title properly commences.

ROR. Release on Own Recognizance.

Rorschach test. Projective method of determining the structure of personality by noting the patient's reaction to a set of ten cards containing standardized ink blots; used in detecting neurotic and psychotic traits.

Roster. A roll or list of persons. A list of persons who are to perform certain duties when called upon in their turn.

Rota. Succession; rotation; e.g. "Rota of presentations;" "rota of the terms."
Royalty. Compensation for the use of property, usually of marine insurance to the effect that "if, on a regular survey, the ship shall be declared unseaworthy by reason of being rotten or unsound," the insurers shall be discharged.

Round lot. Unit of trading on N.Y. Stock Exchange. For stocks, it is 100 shares; for bonds, $1000 par value.

Route. Course, or line of travel from one place to another. Cities or towns between which common carriers or airlines are permitted by I.C.C., C.A.B., etc. to carry goods or passengers.

In railroad parlance, a designated course over a way or right of way, irrespective of the singleness or multiplicity of operation thereon. Regenhardt Const. Co. v. Southern Ry. in Kentucky, 297 Ky. 840, 181 S.W.2d 441, 444.

Routously. In old pleading, a technical word in indictments, generally coupled with the word "riotously."

Roy /rɔɪ/ As a preposition:
1. Of or pertaining to or proceeding from the king or sovereign in a monarchical government.
2. Of or pertaining to or proceeding from the king or sovereign in a monarchical government.

Royal prerogative. Those rights and capacities which the king enjoys alone in contradistinction to others and not to those which he enjoys in common with any of his subjects. It is that special pre-eminence which the sovereign has over all other persons, and out of the course of the common law by right of regal dignity. Aitna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Bramwell, D.C. Or., 12 F.2d 307, 309.

Royalty. Compensation for the use of property, usually copyrighted material or natural resources, expressed as a percentage of receipts from using the property or as an account per unit produced. A payment which is made to an author or composer by an assignee, licensee or copyright holder in respect of each copy of his work which is sold, or to an inventor in respect of each article sold under the patent. Royalty is share of product or profit reserved by owner for permitting another to use the property. In its broadest aspect, it is share of profit reserved by owner for permitting another the use of property. Alamo Nat. Bank of San Antonio v. Hurd, Tex.Civ.App., 485 S.W.2d 335, 338.

In mining and oil operations, a share of the product or profit paid to the owner of the property. Marias River Syndicate v. Big West Oil Co., 98 Mont. 254, 38 P.2d 599, 601.

See also Minimum royalty clause; Overriding royalty; Shut-in royalty.

Overriding royalty. A retained royalty by a lessee when the property is subleased. Common in oil and gas leases.

Royalty acres. That part of the oil that goes to landowner, whether it be in place or after production. Dickens v. Tisdale, 204 Ark. 838, 164 S.W.2d 990, 992.

Rule in Shelley's Case. See Shelley's Case, Rule in.

Rule nisi. A rule which will become imperative and final unless cause be shown against it. This rule commands the party to show cause why he should not be compelled to do the act required, or why the object of the rule should not be enforced. An ex parte order directing the other party to show cause why such a temporary order should not become permanent.

Rule of apportionment. Rule that, where subdivided tract contains more or less than aggregate amount called for, excess or deficiency is apportioned among several tracts.

Rule of four. Working rule devised by Supreme Court for determining if a case is deserving of review; the theory being that if four justices find that a legal question of general importance is raised, that is ample proof that the question has such importance. Rogers v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., Ill., 352 U.S. 521, 77 S.Ct. 459, 478, 1 L.Ed.2d 515.

Rule of law. A legal principle, of general application, sanctioned by the recognition of authorities, and usually expressed in the form of a maxim or logical proposition. Called a "rule," because in doubtful or unforeseen cases it is a guide or norm for their decision. The rule of law, sometimes called "the supremacy of law", provides that decisions should be made by the application of known principles or laws without the intervention of discretion in their application. See e.g. Rule against perpetuities, supra; also, Shelley's Case, Rule in.

Rule of lenity. Where the intention of Congress is not clear from the act itself and reasonable minds might differ as to its intention, the court will adopt the less harsh meaning. U. S. v. Callanan, D.C.Mo., 173 F.Supp. 98, 100. Under "rule of lenity," when it is unclear whether legislature intended multiple sentences for single act involving multiple victims, doubt will be resolved in favor of defendant. Davenport v. State, Alaska, 543 P.2d 1204, 1209.

Rule of necessity. While a judge should disqualify himself when called upon to decide a matter in which he has a direct interest, if he is the only judge with power to hear and determine the matter, the rule of necessity requires that he hear it. Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245, 40 S.Ct. 550, 64 L.Ed. 887.

Rule of presumption. Rule changes one of burdens of proof, that is, it declares that main fact will be inferred or assumed from some other fact until evidence to contrary is introduced. Barrett v. U. S., C.A.Ga., 322 F.2d 292, 294. See Presumption.

Rule of reason. Under the "rule of reason" the legality of restraints on trade is determined by weighing all the factors of the case such as the history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy and the purpose or end sought to be attained. U. S. v. National Soc. of Professional Engineers, D.C.D.C., 404 F.Supp. 457, 463.

To constitute a crime under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the defendant's conduct must result in an unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce. It is for the jury to determine from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances, including the economic conditions of the industry and the effect on competition, whether defendants' conduct creates an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 31 S.Ct. 502, 55 L.Ed. 619; Best Advertising Corp. v. Illinois Bell Tel. Co., C.A.III., 339 F.2d 1099; Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S.Ct. 347, 15 L.Ed.2d 247. The "rule of reason" test is not however applied in instances of per se antitrust violations; e.g. price-fixing.

Rule of road. See Right of way; Road.

Rule to show cause. A rule commanding the party to appear and show cause why he should not be compelled to do the act required, or why the object of the rule should not be enforced; a rule nisi (q.v.). See Show cause order.

Rulemaking power. Congress has from time to time conferred upon the Supreme Court power to prescribe rules of procedure to be followed by the lower courts of the United States. Pursuant to these statutes (28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2071-2076, re Civil, Appellate, Bankruptcy, Evidence Rules; 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3771, 3772, re Criminal Rules) there are now in force rules promulgated by the Court to govern civil and criminal cases in the district courts, bankruptcy proceedings, admiralty cases, copyright cases, appellate proceedings, and minor criminal offense proceedings before U.S. magistrates.

Rule of 78. Method of computing refunds of unearned finance charges on early payment of loan so that refund is proportional to the monthly unpaid balance. 78 is the sum of the digits of one to twelve, i.e., the number of months in a one-year installment contract.

Rules of court. Such regulate practice and procedure before the various courts; e.g. Rules of Civil, Criminal, or Appellate Procedure; Rules of Evidence. In most jurisdictions, these rules are issued by the court itself, or by the highest court in that jurisdiction, while in others, such are adopted or enacted by the legislature. See also Court rule; Rulemaking power.

Rules of Decision Act. Section 34 of the Judiciary Act of 1789—the famous Rules of Decision Act—provided that “the laws of the several states, except where the constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States shall otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States in cases where they apply.” The statute has remained substantially unchanged to this day.

Rule 10b–5. Rule 10b–5 of the Securities and Exchange Commission makes it unlawful, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security, to make any untrue statement of a material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of circumstances under which they were made, not misleading. See also Sec. 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78(j)(b). See also Insider; Material fact.

Ruling. A judicial or administrative interpretation of a provision of a statute, order, regulation, or ordinance; e.g. Revenue Rulings. May also refer to judicial determination of admissibility of evidence, allowance of motion, etc. See also Decree; Order; Rule.

Rumor. A current story passing from one person to another without any known authority for the truth of it. Such are not generally admissible in evidence.

Run, v. To have currency or legal validity in a prescribed territory; as, the writ runs throughout the county.

To have applicability or legal effect during a prescribed period of time; as, the statute of limitations has run against the claim.

To follow or accompany; to be attached to another thing in pursing a prescribed course or direction; as, the covenant runs with the land.

To conduct, manage, carry on.

Run, n. A watercourse of small size. In business, a continuous round of manufacturing. In banking, a widespread and sudden withdrawal of deposits from a bank because of fear of the bank’s collapse.

Runaway shop. An employer who moves his business to another location or temporarily closes his business for anti-union purposes.

Runner. Person who solicits business for attorney from accident victims. Also means a person employed by a bail bondsman for the purpose of assisting the bail bondsman in presenting the defendant in court when required, or to assist in apprehension and surrender of defendant to the court, or keeping defendant under necessary surveillance, or to execute bonds on behalf of the licensed bondsman when the power of attorney has been duly recorded. See also Ambulance chaser.

Running account. An open unsettled account, as distinguished from a stated and liquidated account. Running accounts mean mutual accounts and reciprocal demands between the parties, which accounts and demands remain open and unsettled. See also Charge account; Revolving credit.

Running at large. This term is applied to wandering or straying animals.

Running days. Days counted in their regular succession on the calendar, including Sundays and holidays.

Running of the statute of limitations. A metaphorical expression, by which is meant that the time mentioned in the statute of limitations is considered as having passed and hence the action is barred. United States v. Markowitz, D.C.Cal., 34 F.Supp. 827, 829.

Running policy. One which contemplates successive insurances, and which provides that the object of the policy may be from time to time defined, especially as to the subjects of insurance, by additional statements or indorsements.

Running with the land. Passing with transfer of the land. A covenant is said to run with the land when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that land. Usually concerned with easements and covenants.

Running with the reversion. A covenant is said to run with the reversion when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that reversion.

Rural. Concerning the country, as opposed to urban (concerning the city).

Rusticum judicium /rastakam juwdish(iy)am/. Lat. In maritime law, a rough or rude judgment or decision. A judgment in admiralty dividing the damages caused by a collision between the two ships.

Rustler. Cattle thief.

Rustling. Larceny of cattle.

Ruta /ruwda/. Lat. In the civil law, things extracted from land; as sand, chalk, coal, and such other matters.

Ruta et casa /ruwda èt siyza/. In the civil law, things dug (as sand and lime), and things cut (as wood, coal, etc.).

Rylands v. Fletcher case. The early English case which is the progenitor of the doctrine of absolute liability for abnormally dangerous things and activities. 3 H.L. 330.
S. As an abbreviation, this letter stands for “section,” “statute,” and various other words of which it is the initial.

Sabbath. One of the names of the first day of the week; more properly called “Sunday” (q.v.). The day of rest and religious worship. Named in the Ten Commandments as Saturday, the seventh day, and observed thereon by the Jews and some Christian sects; but observed on Sunday, the first day, by most Christian churches.

Sabbath-breaking. The offense of violating the laws prescribed for the observance of Sunday; i.e. violation of Sunday closing laws (Blue-laws).

Sabotage /səˈbətɑːʒ/. Term has reference to the wilful destruction or injury of, or defective production of, war material or national-defense material, or harm to war premises or war utilities. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2151 et seq. Term also refers to wilful and malicious destruction of employer's property during a labor dispute or interference with his normal operations. Burns v. U. S., 274 U.S. 328, 47 S.Ct. 650, 71 L.Ed. 1077.

Sac /sæk/. In old English law, a liberty of holding pleas; the jurisdiction of a manor court; the privilege claimed by a lord of trying actions of trespass between his tenants, in his manor court, and imposing fines and amercements in the same.

Sacaburth, sacabere, sakabere /sækəbərθ/ /sækəbər/ /sækəbər/. In old English law, he that was robbed, or by theft deprived of his money or goods, and put in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit.

Saccabor /sækəbər/. In old English law, the person from whom a thing had been stolen, and by whom the thief was freshly pursued.

Sacramentales /səˈkræməntəlz/. L. Lat. In feudal law, compurgators; persons who came to purge a defendant by their oath that they believed him innocent.

Sacramentum /səˈkræməntəm/. Lat. Common law. An oath. Roman law. An oath, as being a very sacred thing; more particularly, the oath taken by soldiers to be true to their general and their country.

In one of the formal methods of beginning an action at law (legis actiones) known to the early Roman jurisprudence, the sacramentum was a sum of money deposited in court by each of the litigating parties, as a kind of wager or forfeit, to abide the result of the suit. The successful party received back his stake; the losing party forfeited his, and it was paid into the public treasury, to be expended for sacred objects (in sacris rebus), whence the name.

Sacramentum decisionis /səˈkræməntəm dɛˈsɪʒənɪs/. The voluntary or decisive oath of the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his case, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, who is bound to accept or make the same offer on his part, or the whole is considered as confessed by him.

Sacramentum fidelitatis /səˈkræməntəm fəˈdɛlɪtətɪs/. In old English law, the oath of fealty.

Sacramentum habit in se tres comites,—veritatem, justitiam, et judicium; veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et justicum in iudice. An oath has in it three component parts,—truth, justice, and judgment; truth in the party swearing; justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath.

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium /səˈkræməntəm səˈfætjuəm fəˈfɑːlzuːm təˈmæn nɒn kəˈmɪtɪt pəˈdʒɜːriəriəm/. A foolish oath, though false, makes no perjury.

Sacrilege /səˈkrælɪdʒ/. In old English criminal law, larceny from a church. The crime of breaking a church or chapel, and stealing therein. The desecration of anything considered holy; the alienation to lay-men or to profane or common purposes of what was given to religious persons and to pious uses.

Sacrilegium /səˈkrælɪʃəm/. Lat. In the civil law, the stealing of sacred things, or things dedicated to sacred uses; the taking of things out of a holy place.

Sacrilegus /səˈkrælɪɡəs/. Lat. In the civil and common law, a sacrilegious person; one guilty of sacrilege.

Sacrilegus omnium prædonum cupiditatem et seclera superat /səˈkrælɪɡəs ɒmn(ɪ)əm præˈdɒnəm kjuˈwɪpliˈdɛtəm ət sɛˈklərə s(ə)ˈkwɪpəˈreɪt/. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupididity and wickedness of all other robbers.

Sacristan /səˈkrɛstən/. A sexton, anciently called “sagerson”, or “sagistun”, the keeper of things belonging to divine worship.

Sadism /ˈsɛdɪzəm/ /ˈsɛdəm/. A form of satisfaction, commonly sexual, derived from inflicting harm on another. It is a type of insanity or mental disease. The opposite of masochism (q.v.).

Semend. In old English law, an umpire, or arbitrator.
Safeguard /'sæ safeguard/ Fr. In old European law, a judge or officer to authorize a creditor to seize the property of his debtor in the district which the former inhabits. It has the effect of an attachment of property, which is applied to the payment of the debt due.

Sailors' Relief Act. See Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

Sailors' will. A nuncupative or oral will which the law allows in the case of a sailor at sea. It has the power to pass personal property at death but not real estate. See also Nuncupative will.

Saisle /seizl/. Fr. In French law, a judicial seizure or sequestration of property, of which there are several varieties. See infra.

Saisle-arrêt. An attachment of property in the possession of a third person.

Saisle-exécution. A writ resembling that of fieri facias; defined as that species of execution by which a creditor places under the hand of justice (custody of the law) his debtor's movable property liable to seizure, in order to have it sold, so that he may obtain payment of his debt out of the proceeds.

Saisle-forain. A permission given by the proper judicial officer to authorize a creditor to seize the property of his debtor in the district which the former inhabitats. It has the effect of an attachment of property, which is applied to the payment of the debt due.

Saisle-gagerie. A conservatory act of execution, by which the owner or principal lessor of a house or farm causes the furniture of the house or farm leased, and on which he has a lien, to be seized; similar to the distress of the common law.

Saisle-immobillère. The proceeding by which a creditor places under the hand of justice (custody of the law) the immovable property of his debtor, in order that the same may be sold, and that he may obtain payment of his debt out of the proceeds.

Sake. In old English law, a lord's right of amercing his tenants in his court.

Acquittance of suit at county courts and hundred courts.

Salable. Merchantable; fit for sale in usual course of trade, at usual selling prices. See Marketable title; Merchantability.
Salable value. Usual selling price at place where property is situated when its value is to be ascertained. Fort Worth & D. N. Ry. Co. v. Sugg, Tex.Civ.App., 68 S.W.2d 570, 572. See also Value.

Salarium /saˈləriəm/. Lat. In the civil law, an allowance of provisions. A stipend, wages, or compensation for services. An annual allowance or compensation.

Salary. A reward or recompense for services performed. In a more limited sense, a fixed periodical compensation paid for services rendered. A stated compensation paid periodically as by the year, month, or other fixed period, in contrast to wages which are normally based on an hourly rate. See also Fixed salary; Wages.

Sale. A contract between two parties, called, respectively, the “seller” (or vendor) and the “buyer” (or purchaser), by which the former, in consideration of the payment or promise of payment of a certain price in money, transfers to the latter the title and the possession of property. Transfer of property for consideration either in money or its equivalent. Wade-Corry Co. v. Moseley, 223 Ga. 474, 156 S.E.2d 64, 65. Passing of title from seller to buyer for a price. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).

The general law governing the sale of goods is the Uniform Commercial Code (Art. 2).

A contract whereby property is transferred from one person to another for a consideration of value, implying the passing of the general and absolute title, as distinguished from a special interest falling short of complete ownership.

An agreement by which one gives a thing for a price in current money, and the other gives the price in order to have the thing itself. Three circumstances concur to the perfection of the contract, to-wit, the thing sold, the price, and the consent. Civ.Code La. art. 2439.

To constitute a “sale,” there must be parties standing to each other in the relation of seller and buyer, their minds must assent to the same proposition, and a consideration must pass. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Freihofer, C.C.A.3, 102 F.2d 787, 789, 790.

A revenue transaction where goods or services are delivered to a customer in return for cash or a contractual obligation to pay. Term comprehends transfer of property from one party to another for valuable recompense. Herskovitz v. Vespico, 238 Pa.Super. 529, 362 A.2d 394, 396.

The term “sale” includes any contract to sell or otherwise dispose of. Securities Exchange Act, § 3.

“Sale,” “sell,” “offer to sell,” or “offer for sale” includes every contract of sale or disposition of, attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy, a security or interest in a security, for value. Any security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, any purchase of securities or any other thing, shall be conclusively presumed to constitute a part of the subject of such purchase and to have been sold for value. Investment Company Act, § 2.

Sale, as applied to relation between landowner and real estate broker working to secure purchaser of land, means procuring purchaser able, ready and willing to buy on terms fixed by seller.

See also Approval sale; Bargain and sale; Bargain sale or purchase; Bootstrap sale; Bulk sale; Buy and sell agreement; Cash sale; Casual sale; Consignment; Contract of sale; Credit sale; Fire sale; Forced sale; Installment sale; Isolated sale; Judicial sale; Scaler; Sheriff’s sale; Simulated sale; Symbolic delivery; Tax sale; Wash sale.

Other Terms Distinguished

The contract of “sale” is distinguished from “barter” (which applies only to goods) and “exchange” (which is used of both land and goods), in that both the latter terms denote a commutation of property for property; i.e., the price or consideration is always paid in money if the transaction is a sale, but, if it is a barter or exchange, it is paid in specific property susceptible of valuation. “Sale” differs from “gift” in that the latter transaction involves no return or recompense for the thing transferred. But an enormous gift sometimes approaches the nature of a sale, at least where the charge it imposes is a payment of money. “Sale” is also to be distinguished from “bailment” and the difference is to be found in the fact that the contract of bailment always contemplates the return to the bailor of the specific article delivered, either in its original form or in a modified or altered form, or the return of an article which, though not identical, is of the same class, and is equivalent. But sale never involves the return of the article itself, but only a consideration in money. This contract differs also from “accord and satisfaction;” because in the latter the object of transferring the property is to compromise and settle a claim, while the object of a sale is the price given.

The cardinal difference between the relation of seller and buyer and that of principal and factor is that in a “sale” title passes to the buyer, while in a “consignment” by principal to factor title remains in principal, and only possession passes to factor. Also, a “sale” is distinguished from a mortgage, in that the former is a transfer of the absolute property in the goods for a price, whereas a mortgage is at most a conditional sale of property as security for the payment of a debt or performance of some other obligation, subject to the condition that on performance title shall revert in the mortgagor.

An abandonment must be made without any desire that any other person shall acquire the thing abandoned, since if it is made for a consideration it is a “sale” or “barter,” and if made without consideration, but with an intention that some other person shall become the possessor, it is a “gift.” Del Giorgio v. Powers, 27 Cal.App.2d 668, 81 P.2d 1006, 1014.

General Classification

Absolute and conditional sales. An absolute sale is one where the property in chattels passes to the buyer upon the completion of the bargain. A conditional sale is one in which the transfer of title is made to depend on the performance of a condition, usually the payment of the price; it is a purchase for a price paid or to be paid, to become absolute on a particular event, or a purchase accompanied by an agreement to resell upon particular terms. Under a conditional sale the seller reserves title as security for payment for goods. See also Secured transaction.
Bill of sale. See Bill.

Bulk sale. The sale of all or a substantial part of the seller's materials, supplies, merchandise, other inventory or in some cases equipment not in the ordinary course of business. U.C.C. § 6-102. Statutes prescribe the procedure for such sales because of the danger of fraud on the creditors of the seller.

Cash sale. A transaction whereby payment is to be in full on receipt of the goods. A sale where title is not to pass until the price is paid, or where title has passed, but possession is not to be delivered until payment is made. Compare Sale on credit, infra.

Conditional sale. See Absolute and conditional sales, above.

Credit sale. See Sale on credit, infra.

Consignment sale. See Consignment.

Exclusive sale. With respect to a real estate broker, an agreement by the owner that he will not sell the property during the life of the contract to any purchaser not procured by the broker in question. See Exclusive agency listing; Listing.

Executed and executory sales. An executed sale is one which is final and complete in all its particulars and details, nothing remaining to be done by either party to effect an absolute transfer of the subject-matter of the sale. An executory sale is one which has been definitely agreed upon as to terms and conditions, but which has not yet been carried into full effect in respect to some of its terms or details, as where it remains to determine the price, quantity, or identity of the thing sold, or to pay installments of purchase-money, or to effect a delivery.

Execution sale. See Execution sale.

Fair sale. See Fair sale.

Forced sale. A sale made without the consent or concurrence of the owner of the property, but by virtue of judicial process, such as resulting from a writ of execution or an order under a decree of foreclosure. See Judicial sale; Sheriff's sale; Tax sale, infra.

Foreclosure sale. See Foreclosure.

Fraudulent sale. One made for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the owner of the property, by covering up or removing from their reach and converting into cash property which would be subject to the satisfaction of their claims. Such sales may be voided by Bankruptcy Court.

Gross sale. In accounting, the total sales before deduction for return sales and allowances.

Installment sale. A sale in which the buyer makes periodic payments and generally the seller reserves title until full payment has been made. See Retail installment sale; Sale on credit, infra.

Judicial sale. One made under the process of a court having competent authority to order it, by an officer duly appointed and commissioned to sell, as distinguished from a sale by an owner in virtue of his right of property. See also Sheriff's sale; Tax sale, infra.

Memorandum sale. That form of conditional sale in which the goods are placed in the possession of the vendee subject to his approval; the title remaining in the seller until they are either accepted or rejected by the vendee.

Net sale. Gross sales (q.v.) less returns and allowances.

Private sale. One negotiated and concluded privately between buyer and seller, and not made by advertisement and public notice or auction or through a broker or agent.

Public sale. A sale made in pursuance of a notice, by auction or sheriff. See also Judicial sale; Sheriff's sale; Tax sale.

Retail installment sale. Sale of goods or the furnishing of services by a retail seller to a retail buyer for a deferred payment price payable in installments.

Sale and return. A species of contract by which the seller (usually a manufacturer or wholesaler) delivers a quantity of goods to the buyer, on the understanding that, if the latter should desire to retain or use or resell any portion of such goods, he will consider such part as having been sold to him, and will pay their price, and the balance he will return to the seller, or hold them, as bailee, subject to his order. Sturm v. Boker, 150 U.S. 312, 14 S.Ct. 99, 37 L.Ed. 1093. Under "contract of sale and return" title vests immediately in buyer, who has privilege of rescinding sale, and until privilege is exercised title remains in him. See U.C.C. § 2-326.

Sale by sample. A sales contract in which it is the understanding of both parties that the goods exhibited constitute the standard with which the goods not exhibited correspond to which deliveries should conform. Any sample which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model. U.C.C. § 2-313. See also Sample, sale by.

Sale in gross. A sale by the tract, without regard to quantity; it is in that sense a contract of hazard. See also Gross sale, supra.

Sale-note. A memorandum of the subject and terms of a sale, given by a broker or factor to the seller, who bailed him the goods for that purpose, and to the buyer, who dealt with him. Also called "bought and sold notes."

Sale on approval. A species of conditional sale, which is to become absolute only in case the buyer, on trial, approves or is satisfied with the article sold. The approval, however, need not be express; it may be inferred from his keeping the goods beyond a reasonable time.

A sale is a sale on approval if the goods may be returned by the buyer though they conform to the contract and if they are primarily delivered for use. Generally, such goods are not subject to the claims of the creditors of the buyer until acceptance. U.C.C. § 2-326.

Sale on credit. A sale of property accompanied by delivery of possession, but where payment of the price is deferred to a future day. See Credit; also, Installment sale, supra.

Sale or return. A type of sale wherein the goods may be returned to the seller though they conform to the contract if the goods are delivered primarily for resale. U.C.C. § 2–326(1), (3). A contract for sale of Sale per aversionem. In the civil law, a sale where the goods are taken in bulk, or not by weight or measure, and for a single price, or where a piece of land is sold for a gross sum, to be paid for the whole premises, and not at a fixed price by the acre or foot. A sale per aversionem is sale of either distinct or separate immovable, such as a field enclosed or island in a river, or an immovable property sold by certain bounds or limits. Cornish v. Kinder Canal Co., La.App., 267 So.2d 625, 629.

Sale with all faults. Under what is called a "sale with all faults," or "sale as is," unless the seller fraudulently and inconsistently represents the article sold to be faultless, or contrives to conceal any fault from the purchaser, the latter must take the article for better or worse.

Sale with right of redemption. A sale in which vendor reserves right to take back property by returning price paid. See also Sale on approval; Sale or return, supra.

Sheriff's sale. A sale of property, conducted by a sheriff, or sheriff's deputy by virtue of his authority as an officer holding process. See Forced sale; Judicial sale, supra, also, Foreclosure; Sheriff's sale.

Short sale. See Short sale.

Tax-sale. A sale of land for unpaid taxes; a sale of property, by authority of law, for the collection of a tax assessed upon it, or upon its owner, which remains unpaid.

Voluntary sale. One made freely, without constraint, by the owner of the thing sold. Contrast Forced sale, supra.

Wash sale. In security trading, a spurious transaction in which the same stock is sold and bought by the same person to create the impression of market activity or to establish a market for the stock. Such transactions are forbidden.

Sale against the box. A species of short sale (q.v.) at a time when the taxpayer owns substantially identical shares.

Sale and leaseback. A sale of an asset to a vendee who immediately leases back to the vendor. The usual objectives are (1) to free cash in the amount of the purchase price for other uses by the vendor, (2) for benefits not otherwise available such a deduction by the vendor of the full value of the property for income tax purposes as rental payments over a period of time shorter than would be in depreciation where the base period is the allowable depreciable life. The rental payments total the purchase price plus interest less an estimated salvage value. Although the lease actually follows the sale, both are agreed to as part of the same transaction.

Sale of land. See Conveyance; Conveyancing.

Sale or exchange. Term used in taxation to qualify a disposition of property for capital gain or loss treatment. I.R.C. § 1222.

Sales agreement. A contract to sell goods. It may refer to a contract for sale which includes both a present sale and a contract to sell goods at a future time. U.C.C. § 2-106(1). Also, term used to describe a contract for the sale of real estate, including a contract for deed. See also Conditional sale contract; sales.

Sales contract. See Sales; Sales agreement.

Sales finance company. A business engaged primarily in the purchase of accounts receivable at a discount. The company then undertakes to collect them.

Sales invoice. See Invoice.

Salesman. See Commercial traveler; Dealer; Drummer; Hawker; Peddler.

Sales tax. A tax imposed by many states on sales of goods with certain statutory exceptions (e.g. food, drugs). It is a percentage of the purchase price and the seller is required to remit such tax to the state. State and local sales taxes are deductible for federal income tax purposes.

Salus /sælus/. Lat. Health; prosperity; safety.

Salus popull suprema lex /sæls póp(yl)əs lɔp sɔp(pr)əmləks/. The welfare of the people is the supreme law. Lingo Lumber Co. v. Hayes, Tex.Civ.App., 64 S.W.2d 835, 839.

Salvage. In general, that portion of goods or property which has been saved or remains after a casualty such as fire or other loss.

In business, any property which is no longer useful (e.g. obsolete equipment) but which has scrap value.

In insurance, that portion of property which is taken over by the insurance company after payment of a claim for the loss. The insurance company may deduct the salvage value from the amount of the claim paid and leave the property with the insured.

In maritime law, a compensation allowed to persons by whose assistance a ship or its cargo has been saved, in whole or in part, and that service rendered voluntarily rendered, when not required as existing duty, or from a special contract, and success in whole or in part, and that service rendered contributed to such success. Robert R. Sizer & Co. v. Chiarello Bros., D.C.N.Y., 32 F.2d 333, 335.

Equitable salvage. By analogy, the term "salvage" is sometimes also used in cases which have nothing to do with maritime perils, but in which property has been preserved from loss by the last of several advances by different persons. In such a case, the person making the last advance is frequently entitled to priority over the others, on the ground that, without his advance, the property would have been lost altogether. This right, which is sometimes called that of "equitable salvage," and is in the nature of a lien, is chiefly of importance with reference to payments made to prevent leases or policies of insurance from being forfeited, or to prevent mines and similar undertakings from being stopped or injured.

Salvage charges. This term includes all the expenses and costs incurred in the work of saving and preserving the property which was in danger. The salvage charges ultimately fall upon the insurers.

Salvage loss. That kind of loss which it is presumed would, but for certain services rendered and exertions made, have become a total loss. In the language of marine underwriters, this term means the difference between the amount of salvage, after deducting the charges, and the original value of the property insured.

Salvage service. A service voluntarily rendered to a vessel in need of assistance, and is designed to relieve her from distress or danger, either present or to be reasonably apprehended and for which a salvage reward is allowed by the maritime law. It is distinguished from “towage service,” in that the latter is rendered for the mere purpose of expediting a vessel’s voyage, without reference to any circumstances of danger, though the service in each case may be rendered in the same way. The Emanuel Stavroudis, D.C.Md., 23 F.2d 214, 216.

Salvage value. That value of an asset which remains after the useful life of the asset has expired. It is commonly equivalent to scrap value and must be deducted in computing depreciation. Actual or estimated selling price, net of removal or disposal costs, of a used plant asset to be sold or otherwise retired.

The value of a building or portion of a building to be moved from one location for use at another site. Occurs in condemnation, especially for highway purposes, where large tracts of land must be cleared.

Salvo /sálvow/. Lat. Saving; excepting; without prejudice to. Salvo me et horedibus meis, except me and my heirs. Salvo jure cujuslibet, without prejudice to the rights of any one.

Salvor /sálvər/. A person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of that ship.

Salvus plegius /sálvəs pliy(j)əs/. L. Lat. A safe pledge; called, also, “certus plegius,” a sure pledge.

Same. Identical, equal, equivalent. The word “same,” however, does not always mean “identical.” It frequently means of the kind or species, not the specific thing. When preceded by the definite article, means the one just referred to.

Two offenses are “the same” under the double jeopardy clause of the Federal Constitution unless each requires proof of an additional fact that the other does not. Ex parte Joseph, Tex.Cr.App., 558 S.W.2d 891, 893. See also Jeopardy; Same offense.

Same evidence test. The “same-evidence test” used in determining issue of double jeopardy is whether facts alleged in second indictment, if given in evidence, would have sustained a conviction under the first indictment or whether the same evidence would support a conviction in each case. State v. Ballard, 280 N.C. 479, 186 S.E.2d 372, 375.

Same invention. Within reissue statute, refers to what ever invention was described in original letters patent, and appears therein to have been intended to be secured thereby. Morgan v. Drake, Cust. & Pat.App., 36 F.2d 511, 512. It is not to be determined by the claims of the original patent but from the description and such other evidence as the commissioner may deem relevant. Detrola Radio & Television Corporation v. Hazeltine Corporation, C.C.A.Mich., 117 F.2d 238, 241.

Same offense. As used in Constitution, providing that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, does not signify the same offense eo nomine, but the same criminal act, transaction, or omission. Term “same offense” as used in statute relating to enhancement of punishment for subsequent conviction of same offense means a similar offense, one of the same character or nature. Cherry v. State, Tex. Cr.App., 447 S.W.2d 154, 158. See also Jeopardy; Same.

Sample. A specimen; a small quantity of any commodity, presented for inspection or examination as evidence of the quality of the whole; as a sample of cloth or of wheat.

Sample, sale by. A sale at which only a sample of the goods sold is exhibited to the buyer. Any sample or model which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model. U.C.C. § 2-313(1)(c). See also Sale.

Sancto /séntəko/. Lat. In old English law, of sound mind.

Sanctio /sæntʃi(ə)w/. Lat. In the civil law, that part of a law which is designed to enhance punishment for subsequent conviction.

Sanction, v. To assent, concur, confirm, reprimand, or ratify. U.S. v. Tillinghast, D.C.R.I., 55 F.2d 279, 283. Approval or ratification.

Sanction, n. That part of a law which is designed to secure enforcement by imposing a penalty for its violation or offering a reward for its observance. For example, Fed.R.C.Civ. P. 37 provides for sanctions for failure to comply with discovery orders. See also Contempt.

A punitive act taken by one nation against another nation which has violated a treaty or international law.

See Criminal sanctions.

Sanctuary. In old English law, a consecrated place which had certain privileges annexed to it, and to which offenders were accustomed to resort for refuge, because they could not be arrested there, nor the laws be executed. In general, any holy or consecrated place.

Sandwich lease. The first lease of land from lessor to lessee who releases to another.

Sanguis /sæŋgwɪs/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, blood; consanguinity. The right or power which the chief lord of the fee had to judge and determine cases where blood was shed.

Sanitary. That which pertains to health, with especial reference to cleanliness and freedom from infective and deleterious influences.

Sanitary code. Municipal ordinances regulating sanitary conditions of establishments which produce, distribute or serve food, or provide medical services.

Sanitation. Devising and applying of measures for preserving and promoting public health; removal or neutralization of elements injurious to health; practical application of sanitary science. See Sanitary code.

Sanity. Sound understanding; the normal condition of the human mind; the reverse of insanity (q.v.).

Sanity hearing. A preliminary inquiry into the mental competency of a person to stand trial, though it may be held at any time within the criminal proceeding. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.2.

A proceeding to determine whether one should be confined under a civil commitment to an institution.

Sanity trial. In some states the issues of sanity and guilt may be tried separately in a bifurcated trial.

Sans ceo que /sæn(ð)z siə kə/. L. Fr. Without this. See Absque hoc.

Sans frais /sæn fra/. Fr. Without expense.

Sans impeachment de wast /sæn(ð)z ɪmpləˈʃmənt ðə wɛʒt/. L. Fr. Without impeachment of waste. See Absque impetitione vasti.

Sans jour /sæn tʃuər sæn(ð)z jʊə/. Fr. Without day; sine die.

Sans recours /sæn rəkʊə sæn(ð)z ər/. Fr. Without recourse. See Indorsement.

Sap. A general term which, as applied to weapons, includes a “blackjack,” “slug shot,” “billy,” “sandbag,” or “brass knuckles” (see those terms). People v. Mulherin, 140 Cal.App. 212, 35 P.2d 174, 175, 176.

Sapiens omnia agit cum consilio /ˈsæpj(ə)n(ə) əɡɪt kʌm kɒnsɪˈliəʊ/. A wise man does everything advisedly.

Sapientia legis nummario pretio non est estimanda /sæpjəˈtɪə lɪdʒ ˈnʌmərəʊ prɛtɪəʊ nɔn ëst ëstɪmənˈdə/. The wisdom of the law cannot be valued by money.

Sapientia judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permisum, quantum commisum et creditum /sæpjəˈtɪə ˈdʒudɪs ɪst kəˈɡɪtərə tæntəm səbɪ əˈse pəmɪsəm ˈkwæntəm kəmɪˈsəm ət kəˈrɪdɪtəm/. It is the part of a wise judge to think that a thing is permitted to him, only so far as it is committed and intrusted to him. That is, he should keep his jurisdiction within the limits of his commission.

Satisdare /sætɪsdəˈriə/. Lat. In the civil law, to guarantee the obligation of a principal.

Satisdatio /sætɪsdəˈtʃiəʊ/ /ˈləʊ/ /ˌləʊ/. Lat. In the civil law, security given by a party to an action, as by a defendant, to pay what might be adjudged against him.

Satisfaction. Act of satisfying: the state of being satisfied. Seago v. New York Cent. R. Co., 349 Mo. 1249, 164 S.W.2d 336, 341. The discharge of an obligation by paying a party what is due to him (as on a mortgage, lien, or contract), or what is awarded to him, by the judgment of a court or otherwise. Thus, a judgment is satisfied by the payment of the amount due to the party who has recovered such judgment, or by his levying the amount. The execution or carrying into effect of an accord. Barber v. Mallon, Mo.App., 168 S.W.2d 177, 178; R. J. Bearings Corporation v. Warr, 192 Okl. 153, 194 P.2d 355, 377.

A legacy is deemed satisfied if the testator makes an inter vivos gift to the legatee with the intent that it be in lieu of the legacy.

An entry made on the record, by which a party in whose favor a judgment was rendered declares that he has been satisfied and paid.

See also Payment; Performance.

Accord and satisfaction. An “accord” is an agreement whereby one of parties undertakes to give or perform, and other to accept in satisfaction of liquidated or disputed claim arising in either contract or tort something different from what he is or considers himself entitled to; and “satisfaction” is execution or performance of agreement. Harris, Upham & Co., Inc. v. Ballantine, Tex.Civ.App., 538 S.W.2d 153, 158.

Equity. The doctrine of satisfaction in equity is somewhat analogous to performance in equity, but differs from it in this respect: that satisfaction is always something given either in whole or in part as a substitute or equivalent for something else, and not (as in performance) something that may be construed as the identical thing covenanted to be done.

Satisfaction, contracts to. A class of contracts in which one party agrees to perform his promise to the satisfaction of the other. A contract for construction work "to the entire satisfaction of the owners" imports that the construction be to the satisfaction of a reasonable man and not to the personal satisfaction of owners.
Satisfaction of judgment. A document such as an execution enforced by the judgment creditor and indicating that the judgment has been paid. See Execution.

Satisfaction of lien. Document signed by a lien holder in which he releases the property subject to the lien.

Satisfaction of mortgage. A discharge signed by the mortgagee or holder of the mortgage indicating that the property subject to the mortgage is released or that the mortgage debt has been paid and that all terms and conditions of the mortgage have been satisfied. See also Redemption.

Satisfaction piece. A memorandum in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that satisfaction is acknowledged between the parties, plaintiff and defendant. Upon this being duly acknowledged and filed in the office where the record of the judgment is, the judgment becomes satisfied, and the defendant discharged from it. See New York CPLR § 5020. Also referred to as “Certificate of Discharge.”

Satisfactory. Where a contract provides that it is to be performed in a manner “satisfactory” to one of the parties, the provision must be construed as meaning that the performance must be such that the party, as a reasonable person, should be satisfied with it.

Satisfactory evidence. Such evidence as is sufficient to produce a belief that the thing is true; credible evidence. Such evidence as, in respect to its amount or weight, is adequate or sufficient to justify the court or jury in adopting the conclusion in support of which it is adduced. Sometimes called “sufficient evidence,” means that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt. See Relevant evidence; Sufficient evidence.

Satisfied term. A term of years in land is thus called when the purpose for which it was created has been satisfied or executed before the expiration of the set period.

Satisfy. To answer or discharge, as a claim, debt, legal demand or the like. Swaner v. Union Mortg. Co., 99 Utah 298, 105 P.2d 342, 345. To comply actually and fully with a demand; to extinguish, by payment or performance. To convince, as to satisfy a jury. See also Satisfaction.

Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rívulos /síysh(i)yas ést pé’dzirí fóntíyiz kwárn sëktéray ríyalowa/. It is better to seek the source than to follow the streamlets.

Saunkefin /sånfén/. L. Fr. End of blood; failure of the direct line in successions.

Sauvagine /sóvéjyn/. L. Fr. Wild animals.

Save. To except, reserve, or exempt; as where a statute “saves” vested rights. To toll, or suspend the running or operation of; as to “save” the statute of limitations. See Saving clause.

Save harmless clause. A provision in a document by which one party agrees to indemnify and hold harmless another party as to claims and suits which may be asserted against him. In some states, such clauses in leases are deemed against public policy and, hence, void. See also Hold harmless agreement.

Saver default. L. Fr. In old English practice, to excuse a default.

Saving. Preservation from danger or loss; economy in outlay; prevention of waste; something laid up or kept from becoming expended or lost; a reservation. Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother, 186 Okl. 339, 97 P.2d 886, 892.

Saving clause. In a statute, an exception of a special thing out of the general things mentioned in the statute. Ordinarily a restriction in a repealing act, which is intended to save rights, pending proceedings, penalties, etc., from the annihilation which would result from an unrestricted repeal. That provision in a statute which rescues the balance of the statute from a declaration of unconstitutionality if one or more clauses or parts are invalidated. It is sometimes referred to as the severability clause. Such clause continues in force the law repealed as to existing rights. Dade County v. Wiseheart, Fla.App., 198 So.2d 94, 97. See also Separability clause; Severable statute.

Savings account. Accounts maintained in commercial and savings banks for purpose of accumulating money, in contrast to a checking account. Savings accounts generally yield interest on the deposited funds, though the trend is to also pay interest on checking account balances.

Savings account trust. An account opened in the name of one person in trust for another; e.g. A in trust for B. See also Trust (Totten Trust).

Savings and loan association. One of a number of types of mutually-owned, cooperative, savings associations, originally established for the primary purpose of making loans to members and others, usually for the purchase of real estate or homes. Such may be chartered by the state, or by the federal government, in which case it is known as a “Federal Savings and Loan Association”. The deposits are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. Such associations are also known as “Building and Loan Associations”, etc.

A bank chartered by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and engaged primarily in making home mortgages from the savings accounts of the depositors. Associations at the federal level are regulated by the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

Savings bank. See Bank.

Savings bank trust. See Trust.

Savings bond. See Bond.

Savings notes. Short term paper issued by a bank and bearing interest. The U.S. government issues such notes on a 90 day basis and for other periods of time.

Saving to suitors clause. That provision in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1333(1) which gives the U.S. District Courts original jurisdiction, “exclusive of the courts of the state” of any civil case of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction, “saving to suitors in all cases all other remedies to which they are otherwise entitled.” The “saving to suitors” clause of the section of the Judiciary Act implementing constitutional provision extending federal judicial powers to cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction means that a suitor asserting an in personam admiralty claim may elect to sue in a "common law" state court through an ordinary civil action, and in such actions, the state courts must apply the same substantive law as would be applied had the suit been instituted in admiralty in a federal court. Shannon v. City of Anchorage, Alaska, 478 P.2d 815, 818.

Savour /sévvar/. To partake the nature of; to bear affinity to.

Say about. This phrase, like "more or less," is frequently introduced into conveyances or contracts of sale, to indicate that the quantity of the subject-matter is uncertain, and is only estimated, and to guard the vendor against the implication of having warranted the quantity.

S.B. Abbreviation for "Senate Bill."

S.B.A. Small Business Administration.

S.C. Abbreviation for "same case." Inserted between two citations, it indicates that the same case is reported in both places. Also an abbreviation for "supreme court."

Sc. An abbreviation for "scilicet"; that is to say.

Scab. Person who works for lower wages than or under conditions contrary to those prescribed by a trade union; also one who takes the place of a workingman on a strike. Non-union workers who pass through a union picket line. A worker who works under non-union conditions.

Scabini /skábáyay/. In old European law, the judges or assessors of the judges in the court held by the count. Assistants or associates of the count; officers under the count. The permanent selected judges of the Franks. Judges among the Germans, Franks, and Lombards, who were held in peculiar esteem.

Scalam /skéylam/. At the scale; the old way of paying money into the exchequer.

Scale order. An order to buy (or sell) a security which specifies the total amount to be bought (or sold) and the amount to be bought (or sold) at specified price variations.

Scale tolerance. Nominal variation between different scales in respect of the mass or weight of the same goods.

Scaling laws. A term used to signify statutes establishing the process of adjusting the difference in value between depreciated paper money and specie. Such statutes were rendered necessary by the depreciation of paper money necessarily following the establishment of American independence. And, thereafter, to discharge those debts which were made payable in Confederate money. The statutes are now obsolete.

Scalper. In securities business, a small operator who takes his profits on slight fluctuations in the market. A small scale speculator. One who sells tickets to sporting, theatre and other entertainment events at prices in excess of face price (i.e. box office price) of ticket.

Scandal. Defamatory reports or rumors; aspersions or slanderous talk, uttered recklessly or maliciously. Scandalous matter may be ordered stricken from the pleadings by a motion to strike. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f). See also Defamation.

Scandalum magnatum /skændalum magnéydam/. In English law, scandal or slander of great men or nobles. Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm, for which an action lies, though it is now rarely resorted to. 3 Bl.Comm. 123. This offense has not existed in America since the formation of the United States.

Schedule. A sheet of paper annexed to a statute, deed, deposition, or other instrument, exhibiting in detail the matters mentioned or referred to in the principal document; e.g. schedule of assets and liabilities (debts) in bankruptcy proceeding.

Any list of planned events to take place on a regular basis such as a train schedule or a schedule of work to be performed in a factory.

Scheduled injures. In worker's compensation law, an injury for which a specific sum is payable by statute.

Scheduled property. In insurance, a list of property and the value of each piece of such property for which the insurer will pay in the event of loss or damage.

Scheme. A design or plan formed to accomplish some purpose; a system. Snider v. Leatherwood, Tex.Civ.App., 49 S.W.2d 1107, 1110. When used in a bad sense, term corresponds with "trick" or "fraud". "Scheme to defraud" within meaning of mail fraud statute is the intentional use of false or fraudulent representations for the purpose of gaining a valuable undue advantage or working some injury to something of value held by another. U. S. v. Mandel, D.C.Md., 415 F.Supp. 997, 1005. Plan reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension. U. S. v. Goldman, 439 F.Supp. 337, 343. See also Artifice.

Schism /sizam/. A division of a union into two factions resulting in one group leaving the union. In ecclesiastical law, a division or separation in a church or denomination of Christians, occasioned by a diversity of faith, creed, or religious opinions.

School. An institution or place for instruction or education.

Common schools. Schools maintained at the public expense and administered by a bureau of the state, district, or municipal government, for the gratuitous education of the children of all citizens without distinction. See also Public schools, infra.

Consolidated school district. A common school district where two or more existing schools have consolidated into one single district.

District school. A common or public school for the education at public expense of the children residing within a given district; a public school maintained by a "school district." See infra.

Private school. One maintained by private individuals, religious organizations, or corporations, not at public expense, and open only to pupils selected and admitted by the proprietors or governors, or to pupils of a certain religion or possessing certain qualifications, and generally supported, in part at least, by tuition fees or charges.

Public schools. Schools established under the laws of the state (and usually regulated in matters of detail by the local authorities), in the various districts, counties, or towns, maintained at the public expense by taxation, and open, usually without charge, to the children of all the residents of the city, town or other district. Schools belonging to the public and established and conducted under public authority.

School board or committee. A board of municipal officers charged with the administration of the affairs of the public schools. They are commonly organized under the general laws of the state, and fall within the class of quasi corporations, sometimes coterminous with a county or district, but not necessarily. The members of the school board or committee are usually elected by the voters of the school district. The circuit of their territorial jurisdiction is called a "school district," and each school district is commonly a separate taxing district for school purposes.

School directors. See School board.

School district. A public and quasi municipal corporation, organized by legislative authority or direction, comprising a defined territory, for the erection, maintenance, government, and support of the public schools within its territory in accordance with and in subordination to the general school laws of the state, invested, for these purposes only, with powers of local self-government and generally of local taxation, and administered by a board of officers, usually elected by the voters of the district, who are variously styled "school directors," "school boards," "school committees," "trustees," "commissioners," or "supervisors" of schools.

School lands. Public lands of a state set apart by the state (or by congress in a territory) to create, by the proceeds of their sale, a fund for the establishment and maintenance of public schools.

Scelentia. See School board.

School lands. Public lands of a state set apart by the state (or by congress in a territory) to create, by the proceeds of their sale, a fund for the establishment and maintenance of public schools.

School directors. See School board.

School district. A public and quasi municipal corporation, organized by legislative authority or direction, comprising a defined territory, for the erection, maintenance, government, and support of the public schools within its territory in accordance with and in subordination to the general school laws of the state, invested, for these purposes only, with powers of local self-government and generally of local taxation, and administered by a board of officers, usually elected by the voters of the district, who are variously styled "school directors," "school boards," "school committees," "trustees," "commissioners," or "supervisors" of schools.

School lands. Public lands of a state set apart by the state (or by congress in a territory) to create, by the proceeds of their sale, a fund for the establishment and maintenance of public schools.

Sclentia /scentia/. Lat. Knowingly. The term is frequently used to signify the defendant's guilty knowledge.

The term "sclentia," as applied to conduct necessary to give rise to an action for civil damages under Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and rule 10b-5 refers to a mental state embracing intent to deceive, manipulate or defraud. Ernst and Ernst v. Hochfelder, Ill., 425 U.S. 185, 96 S.Ct. 1375, 1381, 47 L.Ed.2d 668.

Scientia scolorum est mixta ignorantia /säyäntsh(iy)a säyläröram est miksta ignar*nsh(iy)a/. The knowledge of smatterers is diluted ignorance.

Scientia utrimumque par pares contrahentes facit /säyäntsh(iy)a yuurtümkwiy pér péryj kontrahentiy féysat/. Equal knowledge on both sides makes contracting parties equal. An insured need not mention what the underwriter knows, or what he ought to know.

Scienti et volenti non fit injuria /säyantay ét valentay nón fid anjúrìya/. An injury is not done to one who knows and wills it.

Sci. fa. /sáy féy/. An abbreviation for "scire facias" (q.v.).

Scilicet /sílysát/sílysát/. Lat. To-wit; that is to say.

A word used in pleadings and other instruments, as introductory to a more particular statement of matters previously mentioned in general terms.

Scintilla /sintilá/. Lat. A spark; a remaining particle; a trifle; the least particle.

Scintilla juris /síntilá júras/. In real property law, a spark of right or interest. By this figurative expression was denoted the small particle of interest, which, by a fiction of law, was supposed to remain in a feoffee to uses, sufficient to support contingent uses afterwards coming into existence, and thereby enable the statute of uses (27 Hen. VIII, c. 10) to execute them.

Scintilla of evidence /sintila av évaskan(t)as/. A spark of evidence. A metaphorical expression to describe a very insignificant or trifling item or particle of evidence; used in the statement of the common-law rule that if there is any evidence at all in a case, even a mere scintilla, tending to support a material issue, the case cannot be taken from the jury, but must be left to their decision.

Any material evidence that, if true, would tend to establish issue in mind of reasonable juror. Something of substance and relevant consequence and not vague, uncertain, or irrelevant matter not carrying quality of proof or having fitness to induce conviction. City of Houston v. Scanlan, 120 Tex. 284, 37 S.W.2d 718; Wigginton's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co., 256 Ky. 287, 75 S.W.2d 1046, 1051. Courts differ as to what constitutes a "scintilla," and some courts do not accept the rule. For example, it has been held that while the cogency of evidence is not dependent on its quantity, if the party with the burden of proof has introduced only a scintilla of evidence on an essential element of his case, a judge may direct a verdict against him. Such evidence is inadequate as a matter of law. It has also been held that it is the duty of trial court to instruct a verdict, though there is slight testimony, if its probative force is so weak that it only raises suspicion of existence of facts sought to be established, since such testimony falls short of being "evidence". Texas Pacific Coal & Oil Co. v. Wells, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 927, 929.

Scire debes cum quo contrahis /sáyriy díbyiy kám ków knatríy(h)as/. You ought to know with whom you deal.
Scire et scire debere àequiparantur in jure /sáryry èt sáryry dohriy dëkwaparëntar in jùriy/. To know a thing, and to be bound to know it, are regarded in law as equivalent.

Scire facias /sáryry féysh(y)as/. Lat. A judicial writ, founded upon some matter of record, such as a judgment or recognizance and requiring the person against whom it is brought to show cause why the party bringing it should not have advantage of such record, or (in the case of a scire facias to repeal letters patent) why the record should not be annulled and vacated. The name is used to designate both the writ and the whole proceeding. City of St. Louis v. Miller, 235 Mo.App. 987, 145 S.W.2d 504, 505. The most common application of this writ is as a process to revive a judgment, after the lapse of a certain time, or on a change of parties, or otherwise to have execution of the judgment, in which cases it is merely a continuation of the original action. It is used more rarely as a mode of proceeding against special bail on their recognizance, and as a means of repealing letters patent, in which cases it is an original proceeding. Under current rules practice in most states, this writ has been abolished; e.g. Mass.R.Civil P. 81.

Scire facias ad audilendum errores /sáryry féysh(y)as ëd òdiyëndam èròriy/. The name of a writ which is sued out after the plaintiff in error has assigned his errors.

Scire facias ad disprobandum debatum /sáryry féysh(y)as ëd disprobaðam dëitódam/. The name of a writ which lies by a defendant in foreign attachment against the plaintiff, in order to enable him, within a year and a day next ensuing the time of payment to the plaintiff in the attachment, to disprove or avoid the debt recovered against him.

Scire facias ad reahendam terram /sáryry féysh(y)as ëd rìyhebaðam téràm/. Lies to enable a judgment debtor to recover back his lands taken under an elegit when the judgment creditor has satisfied or been paid the amount of his judgment.

Scire facias quare restitutionem non /sáryry féysh(y)as kwëriy réstað(y)ì/wëhiyòwnam nòn/. This writ lies where execution on a judgment has been levied, but the money has not been paid over to the plaintiff, and the judgment is afterwards reversed in error or on appeal; in such a case a scire facias is necessary before a writ of restitution can issue.

Scire facias sur mortgage /sáryry féysh(y)as sár mórgaç/. A writ issued upon the default of a mortgagee to make payments or observe conditions, requiring him to show cause why the mortgage should not be foreclosed, and the mortgaged property taken and sold in execution.

Scire facias sur municipal claim /sáryry féysh(y)as sár myùwnisapì klëyém/. A writ authorized to be issued as a means of enforcing payment of a municipal claim (q.v.) out of the real estate upon which such claim is a lien.

Scire flet /sáryry fìysay/. Lat. The name given to the sheriff’s return to a writ of scire facias that he has caused notice to be given to the party or parties against whom the writ was issued.

Scire fieri inquiry /sáryry fìyaryy ankwáryy/*in-kwarìy/. In old English law, the name of a writ formerly used to recover the amount of a judgment from an executor.

Scire leges non hoc est verba eorum tenere, sed vdm ac potestatem /sáryry líljyjy nòn hòk èst vòmb éyéram tâniry sëd vîm ëk pòwdoðstëydam/. To know the laws is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power [that is, the essential meaning in which their efficacy resides].

Scire proprié est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere /sáryry prówpréiyè est rém réshiyòwnly êt pèr kòzam kagnòsàry/. To know properly is to know a thing in its reason, and by its cause. We are truly said to know anything, where we know the true cause thereof.

Scirewyrte /shàyrywàyt/. In old English law, a tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts.

Sele, or site /sàyt/. The sitting or standing on any place; the seat or situation of a capital message, or the ground whereon it stands.

Scold. At common law, a troublesome and angry person who, by brawling and wrangling among his or her neighbors, breaks the public peace, increases discord, and becomes a public nuisance to the neighborhood. A quarrelsome, brawling, vituperative person.

Scope of a patent. The boundaries or limits of the invention protected by the patent, which are not matters of metes and bounds and can never be defined in the definite sense employed in thinking of physical things, but must be determined by methods based upon established principles of patent law. Smith v. Mid-Continent Inv. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 106 F.2d 622, 624.

Scope of authority. Includes not only actual authorization conferred upon agent by his principal, but also that which has apparently or impliedly been delegated to agent. Angerosa v. White Co., 248 App.Div. 425, 290 N.Y.S. 204, 208. Under doctrine of respondeat superior (q.v.) a principal is liable for the contracts of his agent if the agent contracted within the scope of his actual or apparent authority. See also Authority; Scope of employment.

Scope of employment. Under doctrine of respondent superior (q.v.), a principal is liable for the torts of his agent committed within the scope, actual or apparent, of his employment.

An employee acts in scope of his employment, for purpose of invoking a doctrine of respondent superior, when he is doing something in furtherance of duties he owes to his employer and where employer is, or could be, exercising some control, directly or indirectly, over employee's activities. Lundberg v. State, 255 N.E.2d 177, 179, 25 N.Y.2d 467, 306 N.Y. S.2d 947. Employee is in "scope of employment," such that corporate employer is liable to third party for his torts, whenever he is engaged in activities that fairly and reasonably may be said to be incident of the employment or logically and naturally connected with it. Daughdrill v. Diamond M. Drilling Co., C.A. La., 447 F.2d 781, 785.
Scorn. To hold in extreme contempt; to reject as unworthy of regard; to despise, to contemn, to disdain.

Scot. In old English law, a tax, or tribute; one's share of a contribution.

Scotald /skótdéyl/. In old English law, an extortionate practice by officers of the forest who kept alehouses, and compelled the people to drink at their houses for fear of their displeasure. Prohibited by the Charter of the Forest, c. 7. See Charta (Charta de foresta).

Scoot and lot. In old English law, the name of a customary contribution, laid upon all subjects according to their ability.

Scotare /skatSriy/. To pay scot, tax, or customary dues.

Scoundrel /skáwndral/. An opprobrious epithet, implying rascality, villainy, or a want of honor or integrity. In slander, this word is not actionable per se.

Scrambling possession. See Possession.

Scratching the ticket. Exists where partisan voters support and vote for one or more of nominees of opposite political party. Swindall v. State Election Board, 168 Okl. 97, 32 P.2d 691, 696.

Scrawl. Scroll, which title see.

Scriber /skr&yba riyjas/, a king's secretary; a chanceller.

Scribe. A writer; a secretary. Scribe regis /skráyba ríyjas/, a king's secretary; a chancellor.

Scribere est agere /skr&ybariy fcst sejariy/. To write is to act. Treasonable words set down in writing amount to overt acts of treason.

Scrip. A document which entitles the holder to receive something of value. It is ultimately exchanged for money or some privilege. In corporations, when a stock dividend is declared, scrip is issued in place of fractional shares and when the holder has sufficient scrip he may exchange the scrip for a share.

Paper money issued for temporary use. The term has also formerly been applied to war money.

Scrip dividend. Type of deferred dividend commonly in the form of a promissory note which is redeemable in stock or cash at a future time. See also Dividend.

Script. Something written (e.g. manuscript). The original of an instrument or document. Where instruments are executed in part and counterpart, the original or principal is so called.

Scripta obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensu dissolvitur /skríptiy oblággéshiyówniyz skríptas tolóntar, ét n(y)úwdwy kan(t)sén(t)as oblággésh(by)ow kantrériyow kan(t)-sén(t)s(y)uwy dázóíuwaíar/. Written obligations are superseded by writings, and an obligation of naked assent is dissolved by assent to the contrary.

Scriptum /skríptam/. Lat. A writing; something written.

Scriptum indentatum /skríptam indentéydam/. A writing indented; an indenture or deed.

Scriptum obligatorium /skríptam óblággatóriyam/. A writing obligatory. The technical name of a bond in old pleadings. Any writing under seal.

Scrivener /skrív(a)nar/. A writer; a scribe; a conveyancer. One whose occupation is to draw contracts, write deeds and mortgages, and prepare other species of written instruments. Also an agent to whom property is intrusted by others for the purpose of lending it out at an interest payable to his principal, and for a commission or bonus for himself, whereby he gains his livelihood.

Money scrivener. A money broker. The name was also formerly applied in England to a person (generally an attorney or solicitor) whose business was to find investments for the money of his clients, and see to perfecting the securities, and who was often intrusted with the custody of the securities and the collection of the interest and principal.

Scroll. A mark intended to supply the place of a seal, made with a pen or other instrument of writing.

A paper or parchment containing some writing, and rolled up so as to conceal it.

Scrue-roll /skrúuwat rówl/. In old practice, a species of roll or record, on which the bail on habeas corpus was entered.

Scrutator /skruútéydar/. Lat. In old English law, a searcher or bailiff of a river; a water-bailiff, whose business was to look to the king's rights, as to his wrecks, his flotsam, jetsam, water-strays, royal fishes.

Scurrilous /skarálas/. Low and indecent language; low indecency or abuse; mean; foul; vile. Synonymous with vulgar, foul or foul-mouthed.

Scutage /sk(y)úwdaj/. In feudal law, a tax or contribution raised by those that held lands by knight's service, towards furnishing the king's army, at the rate of one, two or three marks for every knight's fee.

A pecuniary composition or commutation made by a tenant by knight-service in lieu of actual service.

A pecuniary aid or tribute originally reserved by particular lords, instead of in lieu of personal service, varying in amount according to the expenditure which the lord had to incur in his personal attendance upon the king in his wars.

Scutagio habendo /sk(y)átej(by)ow hábendowy/. A writ that anciently lay against tenants by knight's service to serve in the wars, or send sufficient persons, or pay a certain sum.

Scyra /shAyra/. In old English law, shire; county; the inhabitants of a county.

Scyregeome /sháyrgmowt/. In Saxon law, the meeting or court of the shire. This was the most important court in the Saxon polity, having jurisdiction of both ecclesiastical and secular causes. Its meetings were held twice in the year. Its Latin name was "curia comitatis".

Sea. The ocean; the great mass of water which surrounds the land. In marine insurance "sea" includes not only the high seas but the bays, inlets, and rivers as high up as the tide ebbs and flows. The navigable sea is divided into three zones: (1) nearest to the nation's shores are its internal or "inland waters"; (2) beyond the inland waters, and measured from their seaward edge, is a belt known as the marginal or "terrestrial sea"; and (3) outside the terrestrial sea are the "high seas". U. S. v. State of La., 89 S.Ct. 773, 781. See also Seaworthy.

High seas. The ocean; public waters. According to the English doctrine, the high sea begins at the distance of three miles from the coast of any country; according to the American view, at low-water mark, except in the case of small harbors and roadsteads inclosed within the fauces terrae. U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U.S. 249, 14 S.Ct. 109, 37 L.Ed. 1071. The open ocean outside of the fauces terrae, as distinguished from arms of the sea; the waters of the ocean without the boundary of any country. Any waters on the sea-coast which are without the boundaries of low-water mark. Waters outside of territorial jurisdiction of nation.

Main sea. The open, uninclosed ocean; or that portion of the sea which is without the fauces terrae on the sea-coast, in contradistinction to that which is surrounded or inclosed between narrow headlands or promontories. U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U.S. 249, 14 S.Ct. 109, 37 L.Ed. 1071.

Sea bed. All that portion of land under the sea that lies beyond the sea-shore.

Sea-brief. See Sea letter, infra.

Sea laws. Laws relating to the sea, as the laws of Oleron, etc.

Sea letter. A species of manifest, containing a description of the ship's cargo, with the port from which it comes and the port of destination. This is one of the documents necessary to be carried by all neutral vessels, in the merchant service, in time of war, as an evidence of their nationality. The last sea letter was issued at the Port of New York in 1806, and the use of sea letters was discontinued by proclamation of President Madison in 1815. 46 U.S.C.A. §§ 61, 62, note.

Sea-reeve. An officer in maritime towns and places who took care of the maritime rights of the lord of the manor, and watched the shore, and collected wrecks for the lord.

Sea-rovers. Pirates and robbers at sea.

Sea-shore. The margin of the sea in its usual and ordinary state. When the tide is out, low-water mark is the margin of the sea; and, when the sea is full, the margin is high-water mark. The sea-shore is therefore all the ground between the ordinary high-water mark and low-water mark. It cannot be considered as including any ground always covered by the sea, for then it would have no definite limit on the seashore. Neither can it include any part of the upland, for the same reason. Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. State of New York, 271 U.S. 65, 46 S.Ct. 357, 362, 70 L.Ed. 838. That space of land over which the waters of the sea are spread in the highest water during the winter season.

Seal. An impression upon wax, wafer, or some other tenacious substance capable of being impressed. In current practice, a particular sign (e.g. L.S.) or the word "seal" is made in lieu of an actual seal to attest the execution of the instrument.

As regards sealing of records, means to close by any kind of fastening that must be broken before access can be obtained. See Sealing of records. See also Contract under seal.

Corporate seal. A seal adopted and used by a corporation for authenticating its corporate acts and executing legal instruments.

Great seal. The United States and also each of the states has and uses a seal, always carefully described by law, and sometimes officially called the "great" seal, though in some instances known simply as "the seal of the United States," or "the seal of the state."

Private seal. The seal (however made) of a private person or corporation, as distinguished from a seal employed by a state or government or any of its bureaus or departments.

Public seal. A seal belonging to and used by one of the bureaus or departments of government, for authenticating or attesting documents, process, or records. An impression made of some device, by means of a piece of metal or other hard substance, kept and used by public authority. See also State seal.

Sealed. Authenticated by a seal; executed by the affixing of a seal.

Sealed and delivered. These words, followed by the signatures of the witnesses, constitute the usual formula for the attestation of conveyances.

Sealed bid. A method for submitting a bid to buy or to perform work on a proposed contract. In general, each party interested submits a bid in a sealed envelope, and all such bids are opened at the same time and the most favorable responsible bid is accepted.

Sealed instrument. An instrument of writing to which the party to be bound has affixed not only his name, but also his seal. See also Seal.

The affixing of a seal to a contract for sale or an offer to buy or sell goods does not make the writing a sealed instrument and the law of sealed instruments does not apply to such contract. U.C.C. § 2-203.

Sealed verdict. When the jury have agreed upon a verdict, if the court is not in session at the time, they are permitted (usually) to put their written finding in a sealed envelope, and then separate. The verdict they return when the court again convenes. The verdict thus returned has the same effect, and must be treated in the same manner, as if returned in open court before any separation of the jury had taken place.

directed to a sheriff, constable, or other officer, authorizing him to search for and seize any property that constitutes evidence of the commission of a crime, contraband, or things otherwise criminally possessed; or, property designed or intended for use or which is or has been used as the means of committing a crime. A warrant may be issued upon an affidavit or sworn oral testimony.

The Fourth Amendment to U.S. Constitution provides that "no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

See also Blanket search warrant; Exclusionary

Seashore. That portion of land adjacent to the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the ordinary flux and reflux of the tides.

Seasonable

An action is seasonable when taken within the time agreed or if no time is agreed within a reasonable time. U.C.C. § 1-204.

Seasonal employment. As used in compensation laws, as basis for determining amount of compensation, refers to occupations which can be carried on only at certain seasons or fairly definite portions of the year, and does not include such occupations as may be carried on throughout entire year.

Seated land. Land that is occupied, cultivated, improved, reclaimed, farmed, or used as a place of residence. Residence without cultivation, or cultivation without residence, or both together, impart to the character of being seated.

Seat of government. The state capitol or the town within a district or county where the principal government offices and officers are located; e.g., "county seat."

Seawan. The name used by the Algonquin Indians for the shell beads (or wampum) which passed among the Indians as money.

Seaworthy. This adjective, applied to a vessel, signifies that she is properly constructed, prepared, manned, equipped, and provided, for the voyage intended. A seaworthy vessel must, in general, be sufficiently strong and staunch and equipped with appropriate appurtenances to allow it to safely engage in trade for which it was intended. Texaco v. Universal Marine, Inc., D.C.La., 400 F.Supp. 311, 320. Reasonable fitness to perform or do the work at hand. In re Brown & Root Marine Operators, Inc., D.C.Tex., 267 F.Supp. 588, 592. Test of whether vessel or its equipment is seaworthy is whether ship or its appurtenances are reasonably fit for her intended service. Melancon v. I. M. C. Drilling Mud, La.App., 282 So.2d 532, 536.

In marine insurance, a warranty of seaworthiness means that the vessel is competent to resist the ordinary attacks of wind and weather, and is competent equipped and manned for the voyage, with a sufficient crew, and with sufficient means to sustain them, and with a captain of general good character and nautical skill.

A warranty of seaworthiness extends not only to the condition of the structure of the ship itself, but requires that it be properly laden, and provided with a competent master, a sufficient number of competent officers and seamen, and the requisite appurtenances and equipments, such as ballast, cables and anchors, cordage and sails, food, water, fuel, and lights, and other necessary or proper stores and implements for the voyage.

See, also Unseaworthy.

S.E.C. Securities and Exchange Commission.

Secession. The act of withdrawing from membership in a group. Certain states attempted unsuccessfully to secede from the United States at the time of the Civil War.

Seek. A want of remedy by distress. Want of present fruit or profit, as in the case of the reversion without rent or other service, except fealty. See Rent.

Second. This term, as used in law, may denote either sequence in point of time or inferiority or postponement in respect to rank, lien, order, or privilege. As to second Cousin; Deliverance; Distress; Mortgage; and Surcharge, see those titles.

Second Amendment. The Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides that a well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed. State and federal laws, however, regulate the sale, transportation and possession of firearms.

Secondary, n. In civil practice, an officer of the courts of king’s bench and common pleas; so called because he was second or next to the chief officer. In the king’s bench he was called “Master of the King’s Bench Office,” and was a deputy of the prothonotary or chief clerk. By St. 7 Wm. IV, and 1 Vict., c. 30, the office of secondary was abolished.

Secondary, adj. Of a subsequent, subordinate, or inferior kind or class; generally opposed to “primary.” As to secondary Conveyance; Easement; Evidence; Franchise; Meaning; Use; and Vein, see those titles.

Secondary boycott. Any combination if its purpose and effect are to coerce customers or patrons, or suppliers through fear of loss or bodily harm, to withhold or withdraw their business relations from employer who is under attack. Wright v. Teamsters’ Union Local No. 690, 33 Wash.2d 905, 207 P.2d 662, 665. Term refers to refusal to work for, purchase from or handle products of secondary employer with whom union has no dispute, with object of forcing such employer to stop doing business with primary employer with whom union has dispute. C. Cornella, Inc. v. United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, 33 Ohio App.2d 61, 292 N.E.2d 647, 656. See also Boycott; Secondary picketing.

Secondary distribution. In securities, the new distribution of stock after it has been sold by the issuing corporation. Also, the sale of a large block of stock after the close of business of the exchange. See also Offering; Secondary offering.

Secondary easement. An easement to accomplish the intended purposes of the primary easement. One which is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement.

Secondary evidence. That which is inferior to primary or best evidence. Thus, a copy of an instrument, or oral evidence of its contents, is secondary evidence of the instrument and contents. It is that species of evidence which becomes admissible, when the primary or best evidence of the fact in question is lost or inaccessible; as when a witness details orally the contents of an instrument which is lost or destroyed. See also Best evidence; Second-hand evidence.

Secondary liability. A liability which does not attach until or except upon the fulfillment of certain conditions; as that of a surety, or that of an accommodation indorser.

Secondary meaning. Doctrine of “secondary meaning,” for purposes of trademark laws, refers to protection afforded geographic or descriptive terms that producer has used to such an extent as to lead general public to identify producer or the product with the mark, and thus establishment of "secondary meaning" permits users to protect an otherwise unprotectable mark. Mushroom Makers, Inc. v. R. G. Barry Corp., D.C.N.Y., 441 F.Supp. 1220, 1226. Secondary meaning exists when a party through advertising or massive exposure has established its trademark in minds of consumers as an indication of origin from one particular source. FS Services, Inc. v. Custom Farm Services, Inc., C.A.Ill., 471 F.2d 671, 674. For purposes of unfair competition, term refers to association formed in the mind of the consumer which links an individual product with its manufacturer or distributor. J. Josephson, Inc. v. General Tire & Rubber Co., D.C.N.Y., 357 F.Supp. 1047, 1048.

Secondary offering. In securities, the offering for sale of a large block of stock by an investment underwriter. It is not a new issue but one which has been held by the corporation or by a large stockholder. See also Offering; Secondary distribution.

Secondary parties. In negotiable instruments, a drawer or endorser. U.C.C. § 3–102(1)(d).

Secondary picketing. A form of picketing in which pressure is put on one business establishment with which there is no dispute in order to induce such business to put pressure on the business establishment with which the employees have a primary dispute. See also Secondary boycott; Secondary strike.

Secondary strike. A strike against firms which supply goods and materials to the firm with which there is a primary dispute. See also Secondary boycott.

Second degree crime. A crime of lesser gravity than a first degree crime. Some states have first, second and third degree crimes and the punishment for each varies according to the degree. See e.g. Second degree murder.

Second degree murder. The unlawful taking of human life with malice but without the other aggravating elements of first degree murder; i.e. without deliberation or premeditation.

Second-hand evidence. Evidence which has passed through one or more media before reaching the witness; hearsay evidence. See also Secondary evidence.

Second lien. One which takes rank immediately after a first lien on the same property and is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds.

Second mortgage. A mortgage of property which ranks in priority below a first mortgage. In title states, it is the transfer of the mortgagor's equity of redemption to secure a debt.

Secrecy. The quality or condition of being concealed or secret, as the proceedings of a grand jury are to be held in secrecy.

Secret. Concealed; hidden; not made public; particularly, in law, kept from the knowledge or notice of persons liable to be affected by the act, transaction, deed, or other thing spoken of. Something known only to one or a few and kept from others.

As to secret Committee; Equity; Partnership, and Trust, see those titles. See also Secrete; Trade secret.

Secretary. In reference to a corporation or association, refers to an officer charged with the direction and management of that part of the business of the company which is concerned with keeping the records, the official correspondence, with giving and receiving notices, countersigning documents, etc.

Secret lien. A lien reserved by the vendor of chattels, who has delivered them to the vendee, to secure the payment of the price, which is concealed from all third persons.

Secret Service. The major responsibilities of the U.S. Secret Service are defined in section 3056, Title 18, United States Code. The investigative responsibilities are to detect and arrest persons committing any offense against the laws of the United States relating to coins obligations, and securities of the United States and of foreign governments; and to detect and arrest persons violating certain laws relating to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks, and Federal land bank associations. The protective responsibilities include protection of the President of the United States and the members of his immediate family; the President-elect and the members of his immediate family unless the members decline such protection; the Vice President or other officer next in the order of succession to the Office of the President, and the members of his immediate family unless the members decline such protection; the Vice President-elect, and the members of his immediate family unless the members decline such protection; a former President and his wife during his lifetime; the widow of a former President until her death or remarriage; the minor children of a former President until they reach 16 years of age, unless such protection is declined; a visiting head of a foreign state or foreign government and, at the direction of the President, other distinguished foreign visitors to the United States and official representatives of the United States performing special missions abroad. In addition, Pub.L. 90-331 authorizes the Secret Service to protect major Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, unless such protection is declined; the spouse of a major Presidential or Vice Presidential nominee, except that such protection shall not commence more than sixty days prior to the general Presidential election.

Sect. As applied to religious bodies, a party or body of persons who unite in holding certain special doctrines or opinions concerning religion, which distinguish them from others holding the same general religious belief.

Secta. In old English law, suit; attendance at court; the plaintiff's suit or following, i.e., the witnesses whom he was required, in the ancient practice, to bring with him and produce in court, for the purpose of confirming his claim, before the defendant was put to the necessity of answering the declaration. As a survival from this proceeding is seen in the formula, "and therefore he brings his suit" (et inde producit sectam). This word, in its secondary meaning, signifies suit in the courts; lawsuit.

Secta curiae. In old English law, suit of court; attendance at court. The service, incumbent upon feudal tenants, of attending the lord at his court, both to form a jury when required, and also to answer for their own actions when complained of.

Secta est pugna civilis; sic actores armantur actionibus, et quasi, gladiis accinguntur, ita rei munimentum exceptionibus, et defenduntur. In Roman law, purchasers are entitled, in respect of the land of divers heirs descended than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit for all the coparceners.

Secta facta per illam que habet encum partem /sékta fēšhiyēndā par ilam kwlī hēyōd anšh(i)yam pārdam/. A writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the co-heirs, to perform suit and services for all the coparceners.

Secta sequentia nitiitur a scripto variari non debet /sékta kwlī skrōptō ničadār ēy skrōptō vāriērāy nōn dēbāt/. A suit which is based upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing.

Secta regalis. In old English law, a suit so called by which all persons were bound twice in the year to attend in the sheriff's tourm, in order that they might be informed of things relating to the public peace. It was so called because the sheriff's tourm was the king's lect, and it was held in order that the people might be bound by oath to bear true allegiance to the king.

Sectarian. Denominational; devoted to, peculiar to, pertaining to, or promotive of, the interest of a sect, or sects. In a broader sense, used to describe the activities of the followers of one faith as related to those of adherents of another. The term is most comprehensive in scope. See also Sect.

Sectatores /sékta tōryei/. Suitors of court who, among the Saxons, gave their judgment or verdict in civil suits upon the matter of fact and law.

Secta unica tantum facienda pro pluribus hereditatibus /sékta ūwōnakā tēntam ēfshiyēndā prōw pl(y)yūrbās herēstēyēdās/. In old English law, a writ for a heir who was disentangled by the lord to do more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him.

Section. In text-books, codes, statutes, and other juridical writings, the smallest distinct and numbered subdivisions are commonly called "sections," sometimes "articles," and occasionally "paragraphs."

Section of land. A division or parcel of land, on the government survey, comprising one square mile or 640 acres. Each "township" (six miles square) is divided by straight lines into thirty-six sections, and these are again divided into half-sections and quarter-sections. See also Quarter section.

Sectis non faciendis /sékta nōn fēshiyēndās/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a dowress, or one in wardship, to be free from suit of court.

Sectores /sēktōriyz/. Lat. In Roman law, purchasers at auction, or public sales.

Secular. Not spiritual; not ecclesiastical; relating to affairs of the present (temporal) world.

Secular business. As used in Sunday closing laws, this term includes all forms of activity in the business affairs of life, the prosecution of a trade or employment, and commercial dealings, such as the making of promissory notes, lending money, and the like.

Secular clergy. In ecclesiastical law, the parochial clergy, who perform their ministry in seculo (in the world), and who are thus distinguished from the monastic or "regular" clergy.

Secundum /sakandam/. Lat. In the civil and common law, according to. Occurring in many phrases of familiar use, as follows:

Secundum quārum et bonum /sakandam ēykwan ōt bōwnam/. According to what is just and right.

Secundum allegata et probata /sakandam ālōgyēdu ōt prōbyēdu/. According to what is alleged and proved; according to the allegations and proofs.

Secundum artēm /sakandam ārdam/. According to the art, trade, business, or science.
Secured party. A lender, seller or other person in whose favor there is a security interest, including a person to whom accounts or chattel paper have been sold, when the holders of obligations issued under an indenture of trust, equipment trust agreement or the like are represented by a trustee or other person, to whom the disadvantages attach. See Formedon.

Secured transaction. A transaction which is founded on a security agreement. Such agreement creates or provides for a security interest. U.C.C. § 9-105(h).

Securities. Evidences of debts or of property. State v. Allen, 216 N.C. 621, 6, S.E.2d 844, 845, 847. Evidence of obligations to pay money or of rights to participate in earnings and distribution of corporate, trust, and other property. Oklahoma-Texas Trust v. Securities and Exchange Commission, C.C.A.10, 100 F.2d 888, 890. Stocks, bonds, notes, convertible debentures, warrants, or other documents that represent a share in a company or a debt owed by a company.

See also Bond; Consolidated securities; Convertible securities; Debenture; Distribution; Letter stock; Marketable securities; Municipal securities; Security; Stock. For marshaling of securities, see Marshalling.

Securities and Exchange Commission. The federal agency which administers such laws as the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 (q.v.). The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Securities Act.

Securities broker. See Broker.

Securities Exchange Act of 1934. A federal law which governs the operation of stock exchanges and over the counter trading. It requires, among other things, publication of information concerning stocks which are listed on these exchanges. 15 U.S.C.A. § 78 et seq. See also Securities Act of 1933.
Security. Protection; assurance; indemnification. The Offering; Securities offering. See Issue (Securities); Offering; Underwrite.

Security. Protection; assurance; indemnification. The term is usually applied to an obligation, pledge, mortgage, deposit, lien, etc., given by a debtor in order to assure the payment or performance of his debt, by furnishing the creditor with a resource to be used in case of failure in the principal obligation. Document that indicates evidence of indebtedness. The name is also sometimes given to one who becomes surety or guarantor for another.

Test for a "security" is whether the scheme involves an investment of money in a common enterprise with profits to come solely from the efforts of others so that whenever an investor relinquishes control over his funds and submits their control to another for the purpose and hopeful expectation of deriving profits therefrom he is in fact investing his funds in a security. Investment Co. Institute v. Camp, D.C.D.C., 274 F.Supp. 624, 642. "Security" under Securities Act of 1933, means investment in common enterprise in which investors are purchasing interest and where growth of that investment is to result from efforts of promoter, Neuwirth Inv. Fund, Ltd., v. Swanton, D.C.N.Y., 422 F.Supp. 1187, 1194; and the label attached to the transaction is not determinative. McGovern Plaza Joint Venture v. First of Denver Mortg. Investors, 562 F.2d 645, 646.

A "security" is an instrument which: (i) is issued in bearer or registered form; and (ii) is of a type commonly dealt in upon securities exchanges or markets or commonly recognized in any area in which it is issued or dealt in as a medium for investment; and (iii) is either one of a class or series or by its terms is divisible into a class or series of instruments; and (iv) evidences a share, participation or other interest in property or in an enterprise or evidences an obligation of the issuer. U.C.C. § 8-102(b)(a). "Security" includes any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in an oil, gas or mining title or lease or in payments out of production under such a title or lease, collateral trust certificate, transferable share, voting trust certificate or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a "security"; or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing; negotiable instrument; or money. I.R.C. § 6323(b).

As defined in the Bankruptcy Act (§ 101(35)), "security" includes: note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, collateral trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, voting trust certificate, certificate of deposit, investment contract or certificate of interest, etc.

See also Collateral; Equity security; Hybrid security; Internal security acts; Investment security; Lien; Listed security; Pledge; Securities; Stock.

Assessable security. A security on which a charge or assessment for the obligations of the issuing company may be made. In many instances, bank and insurance company stocks are assessable.

Collateral security. Property which has been pledged or mortgaged to secure a loan or a sale.

Convertible security. See Convertible securities.

Equity security. The term "equity security" means any stock or similar security; or any security convertible, with or without consideration, into such a security; or carrying any warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase such a security; or any such warrant or right; or any other security which the Securities and Exchange Commission shall deem to be of similar nature and consider necessary or appropriate, by such rules and regulations as it may prescribe in the public interest or for the protection of investors, to treat as an equity security. Securities Exchange Act, § 3.

(A) share in a corporation, whether or not transferable or denominated "stock", or similar security; (B) interest of a limited partner in a limited partnership; or (C) warrant or right, other than a right to convert, to purchase, sell, or subscribe to a share, security, or interest of a kind specified in subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(15).

Exempted security. A security which is not required to be registered under the provisions of the Securities Exchange Act.

Government security. Any security issued or guaranteed as to principal or interest by the United States, or by a person controlled or supervised by and acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States; or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing. Investment Company Act, § 2.
SECURITY INTEREST

Hybrid security. A security which combines features of both debt and equity; i.e. of both bond and stock. See also Hybrid security.

Listed security. A security which has been listed for trading on one of the stock exchanges or which has been listed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

 Marketable security. A security which is of reasonable investment caliber and which can be easily sold on the market.

Non-marketable security. A security which cannot be sold on the market such as certain government bonds and notes. It can only be redeemed by the holder. Also, a security which is not of investment quality.

Outstanding security. A security which is held by an investor and which has not been redeemed or purchased back by the issuing corporation.

Personal security. An obligation to repay a debt evidenced by a pledge, note or bond in contrast to collateral security. Evidences of debt which bind the person of the debtor, not real property. Merrill v. National Bank, 173 U.S. 131, 19 S.Ct. 360, 43 L.Ed. 640.

A person’s legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 Bl.Comm. 129.

Public security. Bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, and other negotiable or transferable instruments evidencing the public debt of a state or government.

Real security. The security of mortgages or other liens or encumbrances upon land. See Merrill v. National Bank, 173 U.S. 131, 19 S.Ct. 360, 43 L.Ed. 640. See also Collateral.

Redeemable security. Any security, other than short-term paper, under the terms of which the holder upon its presentation to the issuer or to a person designated by the issuer, is entitled (whether absolutely or only out of surplus) to receive approximately his proportionate share of the issuer’s current net assets, or the cash equivalent thereof. Investment Company Act, § 2.

Security for costs. See Security for costs.

Security for good behavior. A bond or recognizance which the magistrate exacts from a defendant brought before him on a charge of disorderly conduct or threatening violence, conditioned upon his being of good behavior, or keeping the peace, for a prescribed period, towards all people in general and the complainant in particular. A peace bond.

Short term security. A bond or note which matures in and is payable within a short span of time. Such securities are purchased by institutional investors for income rather than for growth potential.

Treasury securities. See Treasury securities.

Unlisted security. An over the counter security which is not listed on a stock exchange.

Voting security. Any security presently entitling the owner or holder thereof to vote for the election of directors of a company. Investment Company Act, § 2.

Security agreement. An agreement which creates or provides for a security interest. U.C.C. § 9-105(h); Bankruptcy Act § 101(36). An agreement granting a creditor a security interest in personal property, which security interest is normally perfected either by the creditor taking possession of the collateral or by filing financing statements in the proper public records. See Perfection of security interest; Purchase money security interest.

Security council. The executive body of the United Nations, charged with the duty of preventing or stopping wars by diplomatic, economic or military action. It is composed of five permanent members and six additional members elected at stated intervals.

Security deposit. Money deposited by tenant with landlord as security for full and faithful performance by tenant of terms of lease, including damages to premises. It is refundable unless the tenant has caused damage or injury to the property or has breached the terms of the tenancy or the laws governing the tenancy. Certain states also require the landlord to make a security deposit to cover essential repairs required on rental property.

Security for costs. Payment into court in the form of cash, property or bond by a plaintiff or an appellant to secure the payment of costs if such person does not prevail; e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(c) provides for security when restraining order or preliminary injunction is issued. See also Costs.

Security fund. See Client security fund.

Security Interest. A form of interest in property which provides that the property may be sold on default in order to satisfy the obligation for which the security interest is given. A mortgage is used to grant a security interest in real property. An interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation. U.C.C. §§ 1-201(37), 9-102. Lien created by an agreement. Bankruptcy Act § 101(37).

The term “security interest” means any interest in property acquired by contract for the purpose of securing payment or performance of an obligation or indemnifying against loss or liability. A security interest exists at any time, (A) if, at such time, the property is in existence and the interest has become protected under local law against a subsequent judgment lien arising out of an unsecured obligation, and (B) to the extent that, at such time, the holder has parted with money or money’s worth. I.R.C. § 6323(h).

Purchase money security interest. A secured interest which is created when a buyer uses the money of the lender to make the purchase and immediately gives to the lender a security interest. See Mortgage (Purchase money mortgage).

Securitus expedientur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus videnit occuli quam ocubus /aley darya eskyplisjesntar nagowysh(y)a kamis p(y)alok(y)alas, et plas vaydant ok(y)alay kwam okulas/. Matters intrusted to several are more securely dispatched, and eyes see more than eye [i.e., “two heads are better than one”].
Secus /slikas/. Lat. Otherwise; to the contrary. This word is used in the books to indicate the converse of a foregoing proposition, or the rule applicable to a different state of facts, or an exception to a rule before stated.

Sedato animo /sadeydom ânamow/. Lat. With settled purpose.

Se defendendo /sifendendow/. Lat. In defending himself; in self-defense. Homicide committed se defendendo is excusable.

Sedente curia /sidenty kyur(i)ya/. Lat. The court sitting; during the sitting of the court.

Sede plena /siydiy pliyna/. Lat. The see being filled, a foregoing proposition, or the rule applicable to a different state of facts, or an exception to a rule before stated.

Sedge flat /s6j flit/. A tract of land below high-water mark.

Seduction. The act of seducing. Act of man enticing woman to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promises, bribes, or other means without employment of force. A male is guilty of seduction if he induces a female of previously chaste character to indulge in sexual intercourse with him. Many statutes provide that a subsequent marriage is a bar to prosecution. Also, by statute in some states, actions for seduction of a person over age of legal consent are prohibited. See Heart Balm statutes.

Sed vide /sêd vádyiy/. Lat. But see. This remark, followed by a citation, directs the reader's attention to an authority or a statement which conflicts with or contradicts the statement or principle laid down.

Sed quiere /s£d kwiriy/. Lat. But inquire; examine this further. A remark indicating, briefly, that the particular statement or rule laid down is doubted or challenged in respect to its correctness.

Sed vide /sêd vádyiy/. Lat. See also Sedition.

Seigniory /sSynyaray/. In English law, a lordship; a manor, and therefore unable to keep a court, is termed a “seigniory,” i.e., a lordship. He who is a lord, but of no manor, and therefore unable to keep a court, is termed a “seignior in gross.”

Segregation. The act or process of separation. The unconstitutional policy and practice of separating people on the basis of color, nationality, religion, etc. in housing and schooling.

Seignior /séyn(i)yar/. In its general signification, means “lord,” but in law it is particularly applied to the lord of a fee or of a manor; and the fee, dominions, or manor of a seignior is thence termed a “seigniory,” i.e., a lordship. He who is a lord, but of no manor, and therefore unable to keep a court, is termed a “seignior in gross.”

Seigniorage /seynyaraj/. A royalty or prerogative of the sovereign, whereby an allowance of gold and silver, brought in the mass to be exchanged for coin, is claimed. Mintage; the charge for coining bullion into money at the mint.

A sum equivalent to the difference between interest payable upon a mortgage held by a title insurance and mortgage company at the rate named therein for any period and the interest payable for such period on securities issued by the company with respect to such mortgage, at the rate named in such securities. Commissioner of Insurance v. Conveyancers Title Ins. & Mortg. Co., 300 Mass. 457, 15 N.E.2d 820, 822.

Selgnloress /seynyaras/. A female superior.

Seduction. The act of seducing. Act of man enticing woman to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promises, bribes, or other means without employment of force. A male is guilty of seduction if he induces a female of previously chaste character to indulge in sexual intercourse with him. Many statutes provide that a subsequent marriage is a bar to prosecution. Also, by statute in some states, actions for seduction of a person over age of legal consent are prohibited. See Heart Balm statutes.

Sed quiere /s£d kwiriy/. Lat. But inquire; examine this further. A remark indicating, briefly, that the particular statement or rule laid down is doubted or challenged in respect to its correctness.
Seislna facit stipitem /sfyzww f£ysat stipdam/. Seisin in law where there is no seisln in fact; as where the state issues a patent to a person who never takes any sort of possession of the lands granted, he has constructive seisln of all the land in his grant, though another person is at the time in actual possession.

Constructive seisln. Seisin in fact and in possession. There is no seisln in fact, as where the state issues a patent to a person who never takes any sort of possession of the lands granted, he has constructive seisln of all the land in his grant, though another person is at the time in actual possession.

Covenent of seisln. See Covenant.

Equitable seisln. A seisln which is analogous to legal seisln; that is, seisln of an equitable estate in land. Thus a mortgagor is said to have equitable seisln of the land by receipt of the rents.

Livery of seisln. Delivery of possession; called, by the feudists, "investiture."

Primer seisln. In old English law, the right which the king had, when any of his tenants died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir, provided he were of full age, one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession; and half a year's profits, if the lands were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. 2 Bl.Comm. 66.

Quasi seisln. A term applied to the possession which a copyholder has of the land to which he has been admitted. The freehold in copyhold lands being in the lord, the copyholder cannot have seisln of them in the proper sense of the word, but he has a customary or quasi seisln analogous to that of a freeholder.

Seisin in deed. Actual possession of the freehold; the same as actual seisln or seisln in fact. Roetzell v. Beal, 196 Ark. 5, 116 S.W.2d 591, 593.

Seisin in fact. Possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest, the same as actual seisln.

Seisin in law. A right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. As the old doctrine of corporeal investiture is no longer in force, the delivery of a deed gives seisln in law.

SELF-DEFENSE

Seizure. The act of taking possession of property, e.g., for a violation of law or by virtue of an execution. Term implies a taking or removal of something from the possession, actual or constructive, of another person or persons. Molina v. State, 53 Wis.2d 662, 193 N.W.2d 874, 877.

The act performed by an officer of the law, under the authority and exigence of a writ, in taking into the custody of the law the property, real or personal, of a person against whom the judgment of a competent court has passed, condemning him to pay a certain sum of money, in order that such property may be sold, by authority and due course of law, to satisfy the judgment. Or the act of taking possession of goods in consequence of a violation of public law.

Seizure of an individual, within the Fourth Amendment, connotes the taking of one physically or constructively into custody and detaining him, thus causing a deprivation of his freedom in a significant way, with real interruption of his liberty of movement. People v. P. A. J. Theater Corp., 72 Misc.2d 354, 339 N.Y.S.2d 152, 155.

See also Capture; Confiscate; Forfeit; Impound; Levy.

"Search" distinguished. A "search" is a probing or exploration for something that is concealed or hidden from the searcher, whereas a "seizure" is a forcible or secretive dispossession of something against the will of the possessor or owner. U. S. v. Martt, D.C. N.Y., 321 F.Supp. 54, 58. See also Search.

Select. To take by preference from among others; to pick out; to cull.

Select council. The name given, in some states, to the upper house or branch of the council of a city.

Selecti judices /sal£ktay juwdasiyz/. Lat. In Roman law, judges who were selected very much like our juries. They were returned by the prætor, drawn by lot, subject to be challenged, and sworn. 3 Bl.Comm. 366.

Selectmen. The name of certain municipal officers, in the New England states, elected by the towns to transact their general public business, and possessing certain executive powers.

Self-dealing. Relates to transactions wherein a trustee, acting for himself and also as "trustee," a relation which demands strict fidelity to others, seeks to consummate a deal wherein self-interest is opposed to duty. Cestui que trust has in such case the election to affirm or disaffirm, unless countervailing equities have intervened.

Self-defense. The protection of one's person or property against some injury attempted by another. The right of such protection. An excuse for the use of force in resisting an attack on the person, and especially for killing an assailant. The right of a man to repel force by force even to the taking of life in defense of his person, property or habitation, or of a member of his family, against any one who manifests, intends, attempts or endeavors by violence or surprise, to commit a forcible felony. Essential elements of "self-defense" are that defendant does not provoke difficulty and that there must be impending peril without convenient or reasonable mode of escape. The law of "self-defense" justifies an act done in the reasonable belief of immediate danger, and, if an injury was done by defendant in justifiable self-defense, he can never be punished criminally nor held responsible for damages in a civil action. Baltimore Transit Co. v. Faulkner, 179 Md. 598, 20 A.2d 485, 487.

A person is justified in the use of force against an aggressor when and to the extent it appears to him and he reasonably believes that such conduct is necessary to defend himself or another against such aggressor’s imminent use of unlawful force. One who is not the aggressor in an encounter is justified in using a reasonable amount of force against his adversary when he reasonably believes: (a) that he is in immediate danger of unlawful bodily harm from his adversary and (b) that the use of such force is necessary to avoid this danger. It may be reasonable to use nondeadly force against the adversary’s nondeadly attack (i.e., one threatening only bodily harm), and to use deadly force against his deadly attack (an attack threatening death or serious bodily harm), but it is never reasonable to use deadly force against his nondeadly attack.

See also Imminent danger; Reasonable force.

Self-executing constitutional provision. Term has reference to provisions which are immediately effective without the necessity of ancillary legislation. Constitutional provision is “self-executing” if it supplies sufficient rule by which right given may be enjoyed or duty imposed enforced; constitutional provision is not “self-executing” when it merely indicates principles without laying down rules giving them force of law.

Self-executing judgments. Those requiring no affirmative action of the court or action under process issued by the court to execute them.

Self-help. Taking an action in person or by a representative with legal consequences, whether the action is legal or not; for example, a “self-help eviction” may be a landlord’s removing the tenant’s property from an apartment and locking the door against the tenant. Self-help repossession (i.e. without judicial process) of goods by creditor is permitted under U.C.C. § 9–503, if such can be done “without breach of the peace.”

Self-incrimination. Acts or declarations either as testimony at trial or prior to trial by which one implicates himself in a crime. The Fifth Amendment, U.S. Const., as well as provisions in many state constitutions and laws, prohibit the government from requiring a person to be a witness against himself involuntarily or to furnish evidence against himself. It is the burden of the government to accuse and to carry the burden of proof of guilt. The defendant cannot be compelled to aid the government in this regard. See also Compulsory self-incrimination; Link-in-chain; Privilege against self-incrimination.

Self-insurance. The practice of setting aside a fund to meet losses instead of insuring against such through insurance. A common practice of business is to self-insure up to a certain amount, and then to cover any excess with insurance. Worker’s compensation obligations may also be met through this method if statutory requirements are met.

Self-murder, self-destruction, or self-slaughter. See Felo de se; Suicide.

Self-serving declaration. A species of hearsay evidence consisting of an extrajudicial declaration by a party to an action, the import of which is to prove an essential element of his case. Such statements are inadmissible unless they fall under a recognized category of exception to the hearsay rule such as a business entry, declaration of a deceased party, etc., or unless they are offered for a non-hearsay purpose such as the fact that the party made the statement and not for the truth of the statement. Statement, oral or written, or equivalent act, by or on behalf of a party which if admitted would constitute evidence in his favor. Werdell v. Turzynski, 128 Ill.App.2d 139, 262 N.E.2d 833, 838.

Sell. To dispose of by sale (q.v.).

Seller. Vendor; one who has contracted to sell property. A person who sells or contracts to sell goods. U.C.C. § 2–103(d).

One who sells anything; the party who transfers property in the contract of sale. The correlative is “buyer,” or “purchaser.” These terms are, however, generally not applicable to the persons concerned in a transfer of real estate, it being more customary to use “vendor” and “purchaser,” or “vendee” in that case.

Test of whether a person is a “seller” of unregistered securities, so as to be liable to the buyer under the Securities Act, is whether such person is the “proximate cause” of the sale. Lewis v. Walston & Co., Inc., C.A.Fla., 487 F.2d 617, 621.

Selling stocks short. Term refers to selling stocks customer does not possess, customer borrowing the number of shares he has sold from some third person to deliver to his vendee expecting to be able to buy the stocks later at a lower price and return them to the person from whom he borrowed them. The agreement to deliver at a future date a security or commodity the seller does not own but which he hopes to buy later at a lower price.

Sembl. L. Fr. It seems; it would appear. This expression is often used in the reports to preface a statement by the court upon a point of law which is not directly decided, when such statement is intended as an intimation of what the decision would be if the point were necessary to be passed upon. It is also used to introduce a suggestion by the reporter, or his understanding of the point decided when it is not free from obscurity.

Semel civis semper civis /sēmēl sēvīs sēmpōr sēvīs/. Once a citizen always a citizen.

Semel malus semper presumitur esse malus in eodem genere /sēmēl mālus sēmpōr prāz(y)ūvnmādēr ēsī mālus in iyōwdm jēnariy/ . Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same kind of affairs.

Send. Term in connection with any writing or notice means to deposit in the mail or deliver for transmission by any other usual means of communication with postage or cost of transmission provided for and properly addressed and in the case of an instrument to an address specified thereon or otherwise agreed, or if there be none, to any address reasonable under the circumstances. The receipt of any writing or notice within the time at which it would have arrived if properly sent has the effect of a proper sending. U.C.C. § 1–201(38).

Seneschall /sɛnəskæl/. In old English law, a seneschal; a steward; the steward of a manor.

Seneschal /sɛnəshal/. In old European law, a title of the dukes and other great feudatories of the kingdom, and sometimes had the dispensing of justice and high military commands.

Senility /ˈsɛnɪləti/. Quality of being senile; an infirmity resulting from deterioration of mind and body experienced in old age. Feebleness of body and mind incident to old age; and an incapacity to contract arising from the impairment of the intellectual faculties by old age.

Senior. The elder. An addition to the name of the elder of two persons in the same family having the same name.

Senior counsel. Of two or more counsel retained on the same side of a cause, he is the "senior" who is the elder, or more important in rank or estimation, or who is charged with the more difficult or important parts of the management of the case. May also refer to "lead" counsel in a class or multi-district action.

Senior interest. An interest or right that takes effect or has preference over that of others; e.g. a person with a perfected security interest has a senior interest over other security holders in same property.

Seniority. Precedence or preference in position over others similarly situated. As used with reference to job seniority, worker with most years of service is first promoted within range of jobs subject to seniority, and is the last laid off, proceeding so on down the line to the youngest in point of service. Dooley v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. of Pennsylvania, 130 N.J.Eq. 75, 21 A.2d 334, 338, 339. Term may also refer to the receipt of a lien or encumbrance. See also Dovetail seniority; Priority.

Senior judge. Of several judges composing a court, the one who holds the oldest commission, or who has served the longest time under his present commission; e.g. senior judge of U.S. District Court or Court of Appeals.

Senior lien. A prior lien which has precedence as to the property under the lien over another lien or encumbrance.

Senior mortgage. A mortgage which is of superior priority; above those which are often referred to as junior mortgages.

Sensus /ˈsen(t)səs/. Lat. Sense, meaning, signification. Malo sensu, in an evil or derogatory sense. Mittiori sensu, in a milder, less severe, or less stringent sense. Sensu honesto, in an honest sense; to interpret words sensu honesto is to take them so as not to impute impropriety to the persons concerned.

Sensus verborum est anima legis /ˈsen(t)təs varˈbərəm ɛst ˈænɪmə lɛɡɪs/. The meaning of the words is the spirit of the law.

Sensus verborum est duplex—mitlis et asper; et verba semper accliplenda sunt in mittiori sensu /ˈsen(t)təs varˈbərəm ɛst ˈdɪplæks əɪt ˈæsər; ət ˈvɜːrba semˈpər æˈkəplɪpləndə sʌnt ɪn ˈmɪtliərɪ sɛnˈtu/. The meaning of words is twofold—mild and harsh; and words are always to be received in their milder sense.

Sensus verborum ex causa dieendi accliplendus est; et sermones semper accliplendi sunt secundum subjec¬tum materiam /ˈsen(t)təs varˈbərəm eks kəʊzə dɛˈdiːdən əkˈsəplɪpləndə ɛst; ət ˈsɛrəməʊnɪz semˈpər æˈkəplɪplɪndə sʌnt sekwəndəm ˈsəbjɛktəm mətərɪəm/. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them; and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject-matter.

Sentence. The judgment formally pronounced by the court or judge upon the defendant after his conviction in a criminal prosecution, imposing the punishment to be inflicted. Judgment formally declaring to accused legal consequences of guilt which he has confessed or of which he has been convicted. The word is properly confined to this meaning. In civil cases, the terms “judgment,” “decision,” “award,” “finding,” etc., are used. Archer v. Snook, D.C.Ga., 10 F.2d 567, 569.

For review of sentence of federal prisoner, see Post-conviction review.

See also Accumulative sentence; Commutation; Concurrent sentences; Consecutive sentences; Cumulative sentence; Definite sentence; Diversion program; Pardon; Pre-sentence hearing; Pre-sentence investigation; Pre-sentence report; Probation; Punishment; Reprive; Sentencing; Split sentence; Suspended sentence.

Concurrent sentence. A sentence imposed which is to be served at the same time as another sentence imposed earlier or at the same proceeding.

Consecutive sentence. See Cumulative sentences, infra.

Cumulative sentences. Separate sentences (each additional to the others) imposed upon a defendant who has been convicted upon an indictment containing several counts, each of such counts charging a distinct offense, or who is under conviction at the same time for several distinct offenses; one of such sentences being made to begin at the expiration of another. Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U.S. 365, 22 S.Ct. 181, 46 L.Ed. 236.

Deferred sentence. A sentence, the execution of which is postponed until a future time.

Determinate sentence. A sentence for a fixed period of time. See Fixed sentence.

Ecclesiastical sentence. In ecclesiastical procedure, analogous to “judgment” (q.v.) in an ordinary action.

Final sentence. One which puts an end to a case. Distinguished from interlocutory.
A definite sentence is one which puts an end to the suit, and regards the principal matter in question as concluded. An interlocutory sentence determines only some incidental matter in the proceedings.

Fixed sentence. Fixed sentencing statutes specify the exact penalty that will follow conviction of each offense. See Mandatory sentence, infra.

Indeterminate sentence. A form of sentence to imprisonment upon conviction of crime, authorized by statute in several states, which, instead of fixing rigidly the duration of the imprisonment, declares that it shall be for a period "not less than" so many years "nor more than" so many years, or not less than the maximum period prescribed by statute as the punishment for the particular offense nor more than the maximum period, the exact length of the term being afterwards fixed, within the limits assigned by the court or the statute, by an executive authority (the governor, board of pardons, etc.), on consideration of the previous record of the convict, his behavior while in prison or while out on parole, the apparent prospect of reformation and other such considerations. See also Presumptive sentence, infra.

A sentence to incarceration with a spread of time between a minimum date of parole eligibility and a maximum discharge date. A completely indeterminate sentence has a minimum of one day and a maximum of natural life.

Interlocutory sentence. In the civil law, a sentence on some indirect question arising from the principal cause.

Life sentence. The disposition of a serious criminal case (e.g. capital offenses) by which the convicted defendant is sentenced to spend the rest of his natural life in prison.

Mandatory sentence. Statutes in some jurisdictions require a judge to sentence a convicted defendant to a penal institution and furnish no room for discretion. These statutes generally provide that the sentence may not be suspended and that no probation may be imposed, leaving the judge with no alternative but commitment. See Fixed sentence, supra.

Maximum sentence. A maximum sentence sets the outer limit beyond which a prisoner cannot be held in custody.

Merger of sentences. See Merger.

Minimum sentence. The minimum time which an offender must spend in prison before becoming eligible for parole or release.

Presumptive sentence. Presumptive sentencing statutes specify a "normal" sentence for each offense but permit limited departures from the norm in atypical cases. See also Indeterminate sentence, supra.

Sentence in abscence. Sentencing of defendant in his absence.

Straight or flat sentence. Fixed sentence without a maximum or minimum.

Suspension of sentence. This term may mean either a withholding or postponing the sentencing of a prisoner after the conviction, or a postponing of the execution of the sentence after it has been pronounced. In the latter case, it may, for reasons addressing themselves to the discretion of the court, be indefinite as to time, or during the good behavior of the prisoner. See Suspended sentence.

Withheld sentence. Sentence not imposed.

Sentencing. The postconviction stage of the criminal justice process in which the defendant is brought before the court for imposition of sentence. Usually a trial judge imposes sentence, but in some jurisdictions sentencing is performed by jury or by sentencing councils.

Sentencing has been held to be a "critical stage" of a criminal proceeding requiring assistance of appointed counsel. Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254, 19 L.Ed.2d 336.

Imposition of sentence. Sentence shall be imposed without unreasonable delay. Before imposing sentence, the court shall afford counsel an opportunity to speak on behalf of the defendant and shall address the defendant personally and ask him if he wishes to make a statement in his own behalf and to present any information in mitigation of punishment. The attorney for the government shall have an equivalent opportunity to speak to the court. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(a).

Sentencing council. A panel of three or more judges which confines to determine a criminal sentence. Sentencing councils are not as commonly used as sentencing by a trial judge.

Sententia /sentənʃ(ɪ)ə/ Lat. In the civil law, sense; import; as distinguished from mere words. The deliberate expression of one's will or intention. The sentence of a judge or court.

Sententia contra matrimonium numquam transit in rem judicatam /sentənʃ(ɪ)ə kəntra mætrimən(ʌ)m nʌmkwəm trɛm(ɹ)dʒətəm in rɛm ju:dɪkətəm/. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one.

Sententia contra matrimonium numquam transit in rem judicatam /sentənʃ(ɪ)ə kəntra mætrimən(ʌ)m nʌmkwəm trɛm(ɹ)dʒətəm in rɛm ju:dɪkətəm/. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one.

Sententia contra matrimonium numquam transit in rem judicatam /sentənʃ(ɪ)ə kəntra mætrimən(ʌ)m nʌmkwəm trɛm(ɹ)dʒətəm in rɛm ju:dɪkətəm/. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /sentenʃ(ɪ)ə fəsət jəs, ët lɛɡɪs intərprətəʃ(ɪ)ə vɪm oʊbi:tɛnt/. Judgment creates right, and the interpretation of the law has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /sentenʃ(ɪ)ə fəsət jəs, ët lɛɡɪs intərprətəʃ(ɪ)ə vɪm oʊbi:tɛnt/. Judgment creates right, and the interpretation of the law has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /sentenʃ(ɪ)ə fəsət jəs, ët lɛɡɪs intərprətəʃ(ɪ)ə vɪm oʊbi:tɛnt/. Judgment creates right, and the interpretation of the law has the force of law.

Sententia (sentence) against marriage never becomes a matter finally adjudged, i.e., res judicata.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /sentenʃ(ɪ)ə fəsət jəs, ët lɛɡɪs intərprətəʃ(ɪ)ə vɪm oʊbi:tɛnt/. Judgment creates right, and the interpretation of the law has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /sentenʃ(ɪ)ə fəsət jəs, ët lɛɡɪs intərprətəʃ(ɪ)ə vɪm oʊbi:tɛnt/. Judgment creates right, and the interpretation of the law has the force of law.

Separability clause. A clause commonly found in contracts which provides that in the event that one or more provisions are declared void the balance of the contract remains in force. Such a provision is also commonly found in legislation. See also Saving clause.

Separable controversy. With respect to removal of case from state to federal court, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1441(c) provides: "Whenever a separate and independent claim or cause of action, which would be removable if sued upon alone, is joined with one or more otherwise non-removable claims or causes of action, the entire case may be removed and the district court may determine all issues therein, or, in its discretion, may remand all matters not otherwise within its original jurisdiction." See American Fire & Casualty Company v. Finn, 341 U.S. 6, 71 S.Ct. 534, 95 L.Ed. 702.

Separately /séparélyadər/. Lat. Separately. Used in indictments to indicate that two or more defendants were charged separately, and not jointly, with the commission of the offense in question.

Separate, v. To disunite, divide, disconnect, or sever. See Sever.

Separate. Individual; distinct; particular; disconnect ed. Generally used in law as opposed to "joint," though the more usual antithesis of the latter term is "several." Either of these words implies division, distribution, disconnection, or aloofness. As to separate Acknowledgment and Covenant, see those titles.

Separate action. As opposed to a joint action, an action brought for himself alone by each of several complainants who are all concerned in the same transaction, but cannot legally join in the suit. See also Jolnder; Separate trial.

Separate but equal doctrine. The doctrine first enunciated in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138, 41 L.Ed. 256, to the effect that equality of treatment is accorded when the races are provided substantially equal facilities even though these facilities be separate. This rule was declared to be unconstitutional with respect to educational facilities in Brown v. Board of Education, etc., 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, and as to other public facilities by other Supreme Court decisions and Civil Rights Acts.

Separate demise in ejectment. A demise in a declaration in ejectment used to be termed a "separate demise" when made by the lessor separately or individually, as distinguished from a demise made jointly by two or more persons, which was termed a "joint demise." No such demise, either separate or joint, is now necessary in this action.

Separate estate. The individual property of one of two persons who stand in a marital or business relation, as distinguished from that which they own jointly or are jointly interested in. See also Community property: Separate property.

Separate examination. The interrogation of a married woman, who appears before an officer for the purpose of acknowledging a deed or other instrument, conducted by such officer in private or out of the hearing of her husband in order to ascertain if she acts of her own will and without compulsion or constraint of the husband. Also the examination of a witness in private or apart from, and out of the hearing of, the other witnesses in the same cause.

Separate maintenance. Allowance granted to a wife for support of herself and children while she is living apart from her husband. Cohn v. Cohn, 4 Wash.2d 322, 103 P.2d 366, 367. Money paid by one married person to the other for support if they are no longer living as husband and wife. See also Alimony; Support.

Separate offenses. A person may be tried, convicted and sentenced for offenses which, though sharing many elements, are distinct. A particular act may offend more than one law and hence a person may be subjected to more than one punishment for acts arising out of the same event.

Separate property. Property owned by married person in his or her own right during marriage. The real and personal property, including wages and earnings, of a woman which she owns at the time of her marriage, and the real and personal property, and the rents, issues and profits thereof, of a married woman, which she receives or obtains in any manner whatever after her marriage, shall be separate property as if she were a feme sole. N.J.S.A. 37:2-12, 37:2-13.

Community property. In a community property jurisdiction, separate property is that property which belongs entirely to one of the spouses. Generally, it is property acquired before marriage or acquired after marriage by gift or inheritance. For purposes of community property settlement, "separate property" is that which either party brings into the marriage, acquires during the marriage with separate funds, or receives by inheritance or particular donation. Langelais v. David, La.App., 289 So.2d 343, 345. See also Community property.

Separate return. See Tax return.

Separate trial. The separate and individual trial of each of several persons jointly accused of a crime. Court may also order separate trials in civil actions (e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 42) in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice, or when separate trials will be conducive to expedition and economy.

Separation agreement. Written arrangements concerning custody, child support, alimony and property division made by a married couple who are usually about to get a divorce or legal separation.

Separation a mensa et thoro /séparéyshən ə mɛns(ə)sa ə ðərəʊ/. A partial dissolution of the marriage relation.

Separation from bed and board. A species of separation not amounting to a dissolution of the marriage. Same as separation a mensa et thoro (q.v.).

Separation of jury. After a case has been given to the jury for deliberation, they are not permitted to separate until a verdict is reached except under the control of the court through officers and sheriffs. In civil cases in some jurisdictions this rule is relaxed generally with admonition from the judge not to discuss the case with anybody. See also Sequester.

Separation of patrimony. In Louisiana probate law, the creditors of the succession may demand, in every case and against every creditor of the heir, a separation of the property of the succession from that of the heir. This is what is called the "separation of patrimony." The object of a separation of patrimony is to prevent property out of which a particular class of creditors have a right to be paid from being confounded with other property, and by that means made liable to the debts of another class of creditors.

Separation of powers. The governments of states and the United States are divided into three departments or branches: the legislative, which is empowered to make laws, the executive which is required to carry out the laws, and the judicial which is charged with interpreting the laws and adjudicating disputes under the laws. One branch is not permitted to encroach on the domain of another. See also Power (Constitutional).

Separation of spouses. A cessation of cohabitation of husband and wife by mutual agreement, or, in the case of "judicial separation," under the decree of a court. Separation of spouses for a statutorily prescribed period is a prerequisite to "no-fault" divorce in many states. See also Power (Constitutional).

Separation order. A decree or judgment of a court that requires two or more persons to separate and generally includes an order respecting custody of children and support.

Sequenmur vestigia patrum nostrorum /sakweymar vesti(y)ja pātram nostrōram/. Let us follow the footsteps of our fathers.

Sequatur sub suo periculo /sakweydar sāb s(y)ūwop par(y)slow/. In old English practice, a writ which issued where a sheriff had returned nihil, upon a summonneas ad warrantizandum, and after an alias and pluries had been issued. So called because the tenant lost his lands without any recovery in value, unless upon that writ he brought the vouchee into court.

Sequela /sakwiyla/. L. Lat. In old English law, suit; process or prosecution. Sequela cause, the process of a cause.

Sequela curie /sakwiyla kyūriyiy/. Suit of court.

Sequela villanorum /sakwiyla vilānōram/. The family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord.

Sequester, v. To separate or isolate; e.g. to sequester jurors is to isolate them from contact with the public during the course of a sessional trial. See Jury.

Civil law. To renounce or disclaim, etc.; as, for example, when a widow came into court and disclaimed having anything to do with her deceased husband's estate, she was said to sequester. The word more commonly signifies the act of taking in execution under a writ of sequestration.

To deposit a thing which is the subject of a controversy in the hands of a third person, to hold for the contending parties.

To take a thing which is the subject of a controversy out of the possession of the contending parties, and deposit it in the hands of a third person.

Equity practice. To take possession of the property of a defendant, and hold it in the custody of the court, until he purges himself of a contempt.

International law. To confiscate; to appropriate private property to public use; to seize the property of the private citizen of a hostile power, as when a belligerent nation sequesters debts due from its own subjects to the enemy.

Sequester, n. /sakwéstər/. Lat. In the civil law, a person with whom two or more contending parties deposited the subject-matter of the controversy.

Sequestered account. In accounting, an account which has been ordered separated and impounded by order of the court. No disbursements may be made from this account without order of the court.

Sequestrari facias /sēkwṣtrərəy ˈfēʃ(ə)ːz/. In English ecclesiastical practice, a process in the nature of a levare facias, commanding the bishop to enter into the rectory and parish church, and to take and sequester the same, and hold them until, of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof, and of the other ecclesiastical goods of a defendant, he having levied the plaintiff's debt. 3 Bl.Comm. 418.

Sequestratio /sēkwṣtrəˈʃiːən/. Lat. In the civil law, the separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both parties that contend for it. It is two-fold,—voluntary, done by consent of all parties; and necessary, when a judge orders it.

Sequestration /sēkwṣtrəˈʃiːən/sl. In general, the process by which property or funds are attached pending the outcome of litigation. See also Sequester.

Contracts. A species of deposit which two or more persons, engaged in litigation about anything, make of the thing in contest with an indifferent person who binds himself to restore it, when the issue is decided, to the party to whom it is adjudged to belong. Civ. Code La. art. 2973.

English ecclesiastical law. The act of the ordinary in disposing of the goods and chattels of one deceased, whose estate no one claims.

Equity practice. A writ authorizing the taking into the custody of the law of the real and personal estate (or rents, issues, and profits) of a defendant who is in contempt, and holding the same until he shall comply.

International law. The seizure of the property of an individual, and the appropriation of it to the use of the government. Expropriation.
Sequestrator /sékwstrèydar/siy*/. One to whom a sequestration is made. One appointed or chosen to perform a sequestration, or execute a writ of sequestration.

Sequestro habendo /sakwestrow habendow/. In English ecclesiastical law, a judicial writ for discharging of a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice, granted by the bishop at the sovereign's command, thereby to compel the parson to appear at the suit of another. Upon his appearance, the parson may have this writ for the release of the sequestration.

Sequel debet potentia justitiam non precedere /sfykway débat petysh(ly)a jastfish(ly)am non prasiydarly/. Power should follow justice, not precede it.

Serf. In the feudal polity, a class of persons whose social condition was servile, and who were bound to labor and perform onerous duties at the will of their lords. They differed from slaves only in that they were bound to their native soil, instead of being the absolute property of a master.

Sergeant. Noncommissioned officer in armed forces. Officer in police force with rank below captain or lieutenant.

Sergeant-at-arms. Officer appointed by, and attending on, a legislative body or court, whose principal duties are to preserve order during the sessions of such body.

Serial bonds. A serial bond issue consists of a number of bonds issued at the same time but with different maturity dates (serially due), usually with interest rates varying for the different maturity dates. To be distinguished from the series bonds (q.v.). An issue of bonds that mature in part on one date, another part on another date, and so on; the various maturity dates usually are equally spaced.

Serial note. A promissory note payable in installments.

Serial right. A right reserved in a publishing contract between author and publisher giving the author or publisher the right to have the manuscript published in installments in a magazine or periodical before or after the publication of the book.

Seriatim /siriýedam/. Lat. Severally; separately; individually; one by one.

Series bonds. Groups of bonds (for example, series A, series B) usually issued at different times and with different maturities but under the authority of the same indenture. To be distinguished from serial bonds (q.v.).

Serious. Important; weighty; momentous, grave, great, as in the phrases "serious bodily harm," "serious personal injury," etc.

Serious and willful misconduct. In worker's compensation law, the intentional doing of something with the knowledge that it is likely to result in a serious injury, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences.
Servant. One employed to perform service in master’s affairs, whose physical conduct in performance of the service is controlled or is subject to right to control by the master. Brenner v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 236 Mo.App. 524, 158 S.W.2d 171, 174, 175; Relling v. Missouri Ins. Co., 236 Mo.App. 164, 153 S.W.2d 79; Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2. A person in the employ of another and subject to his control as to what work shall be done and the means by which it shall be accomplished. Pantell v. Shriver Allison Co., 61 Ohio App. 119, 22 N.E.2d 497, 499. One who is employed to render personal service to another otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who, in such service, remains entirely under control and direction of employer. Henley v. State, 59 Ga.App. 595, 2 S.E.2d 139, 142. A person of whatever rank or position in employ and subject to direction or control of another in any department of labor or business. A servant, for purposes of doctrine of vicarious liability, is one who is employed to perform services for another, and who is subject to such other’s “control” or “right to control” as regards his physical conduct in the performance of such services. Gifford-Hill & Co. v. Moore, Tex.Civ.App., 479 S.W.2d 711, 714.

The term is often given special meanings by statutes and like other words is greatly influenced by context in wills and other documents.

See also Agent; Employee; Fellow servant; Subservant.

Servil/sərvil/. Lat. Slaves. In old English law, bondmen; servile tenants; persons over whom their masters had absolute dominion.

Service. This term has a variety of meanings, dependent upon the context or the sense in which used. Central Power & Light Co. v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 165 S.W.2d 920, 925.

Contracts. Duty or labor to be rendered by one person to another, the former being bound to submit his will to the direction and control of the latter. The act of serving the labor performed or the duties required. Occupation, condition, or status of a servant, etc. Performance of labor for benefit of another, or at another’s command; attendance of an inferior, hired helper, etc. Claxton v. Johnson County, 194 Ga. 43, 20 S.E.2d 606, 610. "Service" and "employment" generally imply that the employer, or person to whom the service is due, both selects and compensates the employee, or person rendering the service.

The term is used also for employment in one of the offices, departments, or agencies of the government; as in the phrases "civil service," "public service," "military service," etc.

Domestic relations. The "services" of a wife, for the loss of which occasioned by an injury to the wife, the husband may recover in an action against the tortfeasor include whatever of aid, assistance, comfort, and society the wife would be expected to render to bestow upon her husband in the circumstances in which they were situated. See Consortium.

Feudal law. The consideration which the feudal tenants were bound to render to the lord in recompense for the lands they held of him. The services, in respect of their quality, were either free or base services, and, in respect of their quantity and the time of exacting them, were either certain or uncertain. 2 Bl.Comm. 60.

Practice. The exhibition or delivery of a writ, summons and complaint, criminal summons, notice, order, etc., by an authorized person, to a person who is thereby officially notified of some action or proceeding in which he is concerned, and is thereby advised or warned of some action or step which he is commanded to take or to forbear. Fed.R.Civil Proc. 4 and 5; Fed.R.Crim.P. 4 and 49. Pleadings, motions, orders, etc., after the initial summons are normally served on the party’s attorney unless otherwise ordered by court. See Service of process, below.

General Classification

Civil service. See that title.

Salvage service. See Salvage.

Secular service. Worldly employment or service, as contrasted with spiritual or ecclesiastical.

Service of process. The service of writs, summonses, etc., signifies the delivering to or leaving them with the party to whom or with whom they ought to be delivered or left; and, when they are so delivered, they are then said to have been served. Usually a copy only is served and the original is shown. The service must furnish reasonable notice to defendant of proceedings to afford him opportunity to appear and be heard. Chemical Specialties Sales Corp. Industrial Div. v. Basic Inc., D.C.Conn., 296 F.Supp. 1106, 1107. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4; Fed.R.Crim.P. 4. The various types of service of process are as follows: Constructive service of process. Any form of service other than actual personal service. Notification of an action or of some proceeding therein, given to a person affected by sending it to him in the mails or causing it to be published in a newspaper. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(e). See also Service by publication; Substituted service, below.

Long arm statutes. Laws enacted in most states which permit courts to acquire personal jurisdiction of non-residents by virtue of activity within the state. See Foreign service; Long arm statutes; Minimal contacts.

Personal service. Actual delivery of process to person to whom it is directed or to someone authorized to receive it in his behalf. Green Mountain College v. Levine, 120 Vt. 332, 139 A.2d 822, 824. Personal service is made by delivering a copy of the summons and complaint to the person named or by leaving copies thereof at his dwelling or usual place of abode with some responsible person or by delivering a copy to an agent authorized to receive such. Special rules are also provided for service on infants, incompetents, corporations, the United States or officers or agencies thereof, etc. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(d); Fed.R.Crim.P. 4(d).

Proof of service. See Proof.

Service by publication. Service of a summons or other process upon an absent or nonresident defendant, by publishing the same as an advertise-
Service charge. That charge assessed by bank against the expense of maintaining a customer's demand deposit or checking account, and is calculated on basis of a formula whereby bank's cost of maintaining the account for customer is determined. U. S. v. First Nat. Bank of Jackson, D.C.Miss., 301 F.Supp. 1161, 1207.

“Credit service charge” means the sum of (1) all charges payable directly or indirectly by the buyer and imposed directly or indirectly by the seller as an incident to the extension of credit, including any of the following types of charges which are applicable: time price differential, service, carrying or other charge, however denominated, premium or other charge for any guarantee or insurance protecting the seller against the buyer's default or other credit loss; and (2) charges incurred for investigating the collateral or credit-worthiness of the buyer or for commissions or brokerage for obtaining the credit, irrespective of the person to whom the charges are paid or payable, unless the seller had no notice of the charges when the credit was granted. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 2.109.

Service establishment. Within Fair Labor Standards Act, an establishment which has ordinary characteristics of retail establishments except that services instead of goods are sold. An establishment the principal activity of which is to furnish service to the consuming public, and includes barber shops, beauty parlors, shoe shining parlors, clothes pressing clubs, laundrys and automobile repair shops. Fleming v. A. B. Kirschbaum Co., C.C.A.Pa., 124 F.2d 567, 572.

Service life. Period of expected usefulness of an asset; such may not necessarily coincide with depreciable life for income tax purposes.

Service mark. A mark used in the sale or advertising of services to identify the services of one person and distinguish them from the services of others. Titles, character names and other distinctive features of radio or television programs may be registered as service marks notwithstanding that they, or the programs, may advertise the goods of the sponsor. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.

Service occupation tax. Tax imposed on persons making sales of service and is computed as a percentage of net cost to servicemen of tangible personal property transferred as an incident to such sale. Hagerty v. General Motors Corp., 14 Ill.App.3d 33, 302 N.E.2d 678, 681.

Service of process. See Service.

Servicing. See Service charge.

Serviens narrator /servi(ly)n(d)ar/ A servant-at-law (q.v.).

Servient /sver(i)ent/ Serving; subject to a service or servitude. A servient estate is one which is burdened with a servitude.

Servient tenement /sver(i)ent tamen/ An estate in respect of which a service is owing, as the dominant tenement is that to which the service is due. Northwestern Improvement Co. v. Lowry, 104 Mont. 289, 66 P.2d 792, 795. An estate burdened with a servitude. Most commonly a parcel of land burdened by an easement for the benefit of another parcel (dominant tenement).

Servitio personalia sequuntur personam /sver(ish)io(ly)ns pers(ish)in(ly)n(d)ar/ Personal services follow the person.

Servitio acqueletandis /sver(ish)io as koukelstans/ A judicial writ for a man distrained for services to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services.

Servitio /sver(ish)io/ Lat. In feudal and old English law, the duty of obedience and performance which a tenant was bound to render to his lord, by reason of his fee.

Servitio feodale et pradiale /sver(ish)io am fyuwdelyly et pradelyly/ A personal service, but due only by reason of lands which were held in fee.

Servitio forinsecum /sver(ish)io am farin(d)zkam/ Foreign, foreign, or extra service; a kind of service that was due to the king, over and above (foris) the service due to the lord.

Servitio, in lege Anglice, regulariter accliptur pro servitio quod per tenentes domini sui debetur ratione feodis suis /sver(ish)io am, in ly(lish) ely(lish)y, regylarayler ayklypdar pruw sver(ish)io am krowd par tanentyjz doymas s(y)uwas daibydar ralyjowy niy fuywday s(y)uway/. Service, by the law of England, means the service which is due from the tenants to the lords, by reason of their fee.

Servitio Intrinsecum /sver(ish)io am intrin(d)zkam/ Intrinsic or ordinary service; the ordinary service due the chief lord, from tenants within the fee.

Servitio liberum /sver(ish)io am libaram/ A service to be done by feudatory tenants, who were called "liberi homines," and distinguished from vassals, as was their service, for they were not bound to any of the base services of plowing the lord's land, etc., but were to find a man and horse, or go with the lord into the army, or to attend the court, etc. See also Librum servitium.

Servitio regale /sver(ish)io am ragelyly/ Royal service, or the rights and prerogatives of manors which belong to the king as lord of the same, and which were generally reckoned to be six, viz.: Power of judicature, in matters of property; power of life and death, in felonies and murder; a right to waifs and strays; assessments; minting of money; and assise of bread, beer, weights, and measures.
Servitium scuti /sarvish(iy)am sk(y)uwday/. Service of the shield; that is, knight-service.

Servitium socæ /sarvish(iy)am sowisy/. Service of the plow; that is, scogage.

Servitors of bills /sravadarz av bflz/. In old English practice, servants or messengers of the marshal of the king's bench, sent out with bills or writs to summon persons to that court. Thereafter commonly called "tipstaves."

Servitude. The state of a person who is subjected, voluntarily or otherwise, to another person as his servant. A charge or burden resting upon one estate for the benefit or advantage of another; a species of incorporeal right derived from the civil law (see Servitus) and closely corresponding to the "easement" of the common-law, except that "servitude" rather has relation to the burden or the estate burdened, while "easement" refers to the benefit or advantage or the estate to which it accrues.

Classification

All servitudes which affect lands may be divided into two kinds,—personal and real. Personal servitudes are those attached to the person for whose benefit they are established, and terminate with his life. This kind of servitude is of three sorts,—usufruct, use, and habitation. Real servitudes, which are also called "predial" or "lanced" servitudes, are those which the owner of an estate enjoys on a neighboring estate for the benefit of his own estate. They are called "predial" or "lanced" servitudes because, being established for the benefit of an estate, they are rather due to the estate than to the owner personally. Frost-Johnson Lumber Co. v. Salling's Heirs, 150 La. 756, 91 So. 207, 245; Tide-Water Pipe Co. v. Bell, 280 Pa. 104, 124 A. 351, 354.

Real servitudes are divided, in the civil law, into rural and urban servitudes. Rural servitudes are such as are established for the benefit of a landed estate; such, for example, as a right of way over the servient tenement, or of access to a spring, a coalmine, a sand-pit, or a wood that is upon it. Urban servitudes are such as are established for the benefit of one building over another. (But the buildings need not be in the city, as the name would apparently imply.) They are such as the right of support, or of view, sewer, or the like.

Servitudes are also classed as positive and negative. A positive servitude is one which obliges the owner of the servient estate to permit or suffer something to be done on his property by another. A negative servitude is one which does not bind the servient proprietor to permit something to be done upon his property by another, but merely restrains him from making a certain use of his property which would impair the easement enjoyed by the dominant tenement. Rowe v. Nally, 81 Md. 367, 32 A. 198. Involuntary servitude. See that title.

Servitus /sravadas/. Lat. In the civil law, slavery; bondage; the state of service. An institution of the conventional law of nations, by which one person is subjected to the dominion of another, contrary to natural right.

Also a service or servitude; an easement.

Servitus actus /sravadas aiktas/. The servitude of walking, riding, or driving over another's ground. A species of right of way.

Servitus altius non tollendi /sravadas aklsh(iy)as non tolenday/. The servitude of not building higher. A right attached to a house, by which its proprietor can prevent his neighbor from building his own house higher.

Servitus aquæ ducendæ /sravadas akwiy d(y)uwswendiy/. The servitude of leading water; the right of leading water to one's own premises through another's land.

Servitus aquæ educendæ /sravadas akwiy lyd(y)uwswendiy/. The servitude of leading off water; the right of leading off the water from one's own onto another's ground.

Servitus aquæ hauriendæ /sravadas akwiy hohriwendiy/. The servitude of right of draining water from another's spring or well.

Servitus fumi immittendi /sravadas fyuummay lmvtenday/. The servitude or right of leading off smoke or vapor through the chimney or over the ground of one's neighbor.

Servitus itineris /sravadas aytinaras/. The servitude or privilege of walking, riding, and being carried over another's ground. A species of right of way.

Servitus luminum /sravadas l(y)uwmanam/. The servitude of lights; the right of having windows or other openings in a wall belonging to another, or in a common wall, in order to obtain light for one's building.

Servitus ne luminibus officiatur /sravadas nny l(y)unmabas afishiy6ydar/. A servitude not to hinder lights; the right of having one's lights or windows unobstructed or darkened by a neighbor's building, etc.

Servitus ne prospectus offendatur /sravadas nny prasp£ktas dfendSydor/. A servitude not to obstruct one's prospect, i.e., not to intercept the view from one's house.

Servitus oneris ferendi /sravadas awnaras far6nday/. The servitude of bearing weight; the right to let one's building rest upon the building, wall, or pillars of one's neighbor.

Servitus pascendi /sravadas paesSnday/. The servitude of pasturing; the right of pasturing one's cattle on another's ground; otherwise called "jus pascendi."

Servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsam /sravadas ed edkwan edpsism/. A right of driving one's cattle on a neighbor's land to water.

Servitus prædi rusticī /sravadas prydiyay rəstassay/. The servitude of a rural or country estate; a rural servitude.

Servitus prædi urbanī /sravadas prydiyay arbéynay/. The servitude of an urban or city estate; an urban servitude.

Servitus prædiorum /sravadas prydiy6y6m/. A predial servitude; a service, burden, or charge upon one estate for the benefit of another.

Servitus projiciendi /sravadas prjshiyenday/. The servitude of projecting; the right of building a projection from one's house in the open space belonging to one's neighbor.
Servitus prospectus /sárvadas praspéktas/. A right of prospect. This may be either to give one a free prospect over his neighbor's land or to prevent a neighbor from having a prospect over one's own land.

Servitus stllicldli /sSrvadas stibsidiyay/. The right of Session. The sitting of a court, legislature, council, Sessio /sesh(iy)ow/. Lat. In old English law, a sitting; Sess /s6s/. In English law, a tax, rate, or assessment.

Servitus vi* /sarvadas vayiy/. The servitude or right of The servitude of letting in a beam; the right of inserting beams in a neighbor's wall.

Servus /sárvas/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a slave; a bondman.

Sess /sés/. In English law, a tax, rate, or assessment.

Sessio /sesh(i)yow/. Lat. In old English law, a sitting; a session. Sessio parliamenti, the sitting of parliament.

Session. The sitting of a court, legislature, council, commission, etc., for the transaction of its proper business. Hence, the period of time, within any one day, during which such body is assembled in form, and engaged in the transaction of business, or, in a more extended sense, the whole space of time from its first assembling to its prorogation or adjournment sine die. Either a day or a period of days in which a court, legislature, etc. carries on its business.

Strictly speaking, the word "session," as applied to a court of justice, is not synonymous with the word "term." The "session" of a court is the time during which it actually sits for the transaction of judicial business, and hence terminates each day with the rising of the court. A "term" of court is the period fixed by law, usually embracing many days or weeks, during which it shall be open for the transaction of judicial business and during which it may hold sessions from day to day. But this distinction is not always observed, many authorities using the two words interchangeably.

See also Extra session; Extraordinary session; Lame duck session; Term.

Biennial session. See that title.

Joint session. Meeting together and commingling of the two houses of a legislative body, sitting and acting together as one body, instead of separately in their respective houses.

Quarter sessions. See Quarter session courts.

Regular session. An ordinary, general, or stated session (as of a legislative body), as distinguished from a special or extra session.

Session laws. The name commonly given to the body of laws enacted by a state legislature at one of its annual or biennial sessions. So called to distinguish them from the "compiled laws" or "revised statutes" of the state. Published laws of a state enacted at each assembly and separately bound for the session and for extra sessions. The session laws are normally published on a periodic basis, in a pamphlet for-
Settle up. A term, colloquial rather than legal, which is applied to the final collection, adjustment, and distribution of the estate of a decedent, a bankrupt, or an insolvent corporation. It includes the processes of collecting the property, paying debts and charges, and turning over the balance to those entitled to receive it.

Settlement. Act or process of adjusting or determining; an adjusting; an adjustment between persons concerning their dealings or difficulties; an agreement by which parties having disputed matters between them reach or ascertain what is coming from one to the other; arrangement of difficulties; composure of matters of accounts; the act by which parties who have been dealing together arrange their accounts and strike a balance. Also full and final payment or discharge of an account.

Equity of settlement. The equitable right of a wife, when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have the whole or a portion of such estate settled upon herself and her children. Also a similar right now recognized by the equity courts as directly to be applied to the final collection, adjustment, and liquidation. Sowers v. Robertson, 144 Kan. 273, 58 P.2d 1105, 1107. Payment or satisfaction. Ledbetter v. Hall, 191 Ark. 791, 87 S.W.2d 996, 999. In legal parlance, implies meeting of minds of parties to transaction or controversy. Ezmirlian v. Otto, 139 Cal.App. 486, 34 P.2d 774, 778. To fix or resolve conclusively; to make or arrange for final disposition. Wager v. Burlington Elevators, Inc., 116 N.J.Super. 390, 282 A.2d 437, 441.

Closing; the culmination of a particular transaction involving real property, such as the purchase and sale of the property, the execution of a lease or the making of a mortgage loan. See also Closing.

See also Adjust; Closing; Liquidate; Mary Carter agreement; Out-of-court settlement; Settle.

Contracts. Adjustment or liquidation of mutual accounts; the act by which parties who have been dealing together arrange their accounts and strike a balance. Also full and final payment or discharge of an account.

Equity of settlement. The equitable right of a wife, when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have the whole or a portion of such estate settled upon herself and her children. Also a similar right now recognized by the equity courts as directly to be asserted against the husband. Also called the "wife's equity."

Estates. The settlement of an estate consists in its administration by the executor or administrator carried so far that all debts and legacies have been paid and the individual shares of distributees in the corpus of the estate, or the residuary portion, as the case may be, definitely ascertained and determined, and accounts filed and passed, so that nothing remains but to make final distribution. "Settlement," in reference to a decedent's estate, includes the full process of administration, distribution and closing. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201. See also Final settlement, below.

Family settlement. See Family settlement.

Final settlement. This term, as applied to the administration of an estate, is usually understood to have reference to the order of court approving the account which closes the business of the estate, and which finally discharges the executor or administrator from the duties of his trust.

Voluntary settlement. A settlement of property upon a wife or other beneficiary, made gratuitously or without valuable consideration.

Settlement option. In life insurance, a provision for payment made by the insurer with the beneficiary or insured such as for lump sum, periodic payments, and the like.

Settlement statement. A statement prepared by an escrow agent or lender, giving a complete breakdown of costs involved in a real estate sale. A separate statement is prepared for the seller and buyer. Such statements are regulated by the federal Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act. See also Closing; RESPA.

Settler. A person who, for the purpose of acquiring a pre-emption right, has gone upon the land in question, and is actually resident there.

Settlor. The grantor or donor in a deed of settlement. Also one who creates trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 3(1).

One who furnishes the consideration for the creation of a trust, though in form the trust is created by another. Lehman v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.2, 109 F.2d 99, 100.

Set up. To bring forward or allege, as something relied upon or deemed sufficient. To propose or interpose, by way of defense, explanation, or justification; as, to set up the statute of limitations, i.e., offer and rely upon it as a defense to a claim.

Seventeenth Amendment. An Amendment of 1913 to the U.S. Constitution which transferred the election of U.S. Senators from the State legislature to the voters of the State, but provided that the legislature may empower the governor to make a temporary appointment to fill a vacancy until an election can be held.

Seventh Amendment. In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law. This constitutional right of trial by jury is preserved by Fed.R.Civil P. 38. See also Trial (Trial by jury).

Sever. To separate, as one from another; to cut off from something; to divide. To part in any way, especially by violence, as by cutting, rending, etc.; as, to sever the head from the body. To cut or break open or apart; to divide into parts. To cut through; to disjoin. In practice, to insist upon a plea distinct from that of other codefendants. To separate the cases of multiple defendants in such a way as to allow separate trials for each or for fewer than all.

Relief from prejudicial joinder. If it appears that a defendant or the government is prejudiced by a joinder of offenses or of defendants in an indictment or information or by such joinder for trial together, the court may order an election or separate trials of counts, grant a severance of defendants or provide whatever other relief justice requires. In ruling on a motion by a defendant for severance the court may order the attorney for the government to deliver to the court for inspection in camera any statements or confessions made by the defendants which the government intends to introduce in evidence at the trial. Fed.R.Crim.P. 14.
Severability clause. See Saving clause; Severable statute.

Severability doctrine. If promise sued on is related to an illegal transaction, but is not illegal in and of itself, "severability doctrine" applies, and recovery should not be denied, if aid of illegal transaction is not relied on or required, or if promise sued on is remote from or collateral to illegal transaction, or is supported by independent consideration. Sherwood & Roberts-Yakima, Inc. v. Cohan, 2 Wash.App. 703, 469 P.2d 574, 578, 582.

Severable. Admitting of severance or separation; capable of being divided; separable; capable of being severed from other things to which it was joined, and yet maintaining a complete and independent existence. Capable of carrying on an independent existence; for example, a severable statute is one that can still be valid even if one part of it is struck down as invalid by a court. It is common for statutes to have a severability or savings clause (q.v.).

Severable contract. A contract, the nature and purpose of which is susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts, in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent upon each other, or intended by parties as being dependent. Gross v. Maytex Knitting Mills of Cal., 116 C.A.2d 705, 254 P.2d 163, 167.

The usual test of "severability" of a contract is whether the consideration is so segregated that it may be severally applied to each independent covenant in the contract. Hospelhorn v. Circle City Coal Co., C.C.A.Ky., 117 F.2d 166, 168. One of the tests of "severability" of a contract is whether the consideration is expressly or by necessary implication apportionable. Read v. Gibson & Johnson, Tex.Civ., 12 S.W.2d 620, 623.

Severable statute. A statute if after an invalid portion of it has been stricken out, that which remains is self-sustaining and capable of separate enforcement without regard to the stricken portion, in which case that which remains should be sustained. See Saving clause; Separability clause.

Several. More than two, often used to designate a number greater than one. First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego v. Industrial Accident Commission, 213 Cal. 322, 2 P.2d 347, 351. Each particular, or a small number singly taken. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Marshall County, 161 Tenn. 236, 30 S.W.2d 268. Separate; individual; independent; severable. In this sense the word is distinguished from "joint." Also exclusive; individual; appropriated. In this sense it is opposed to "common.

As to several Count; Covenant; Demise; Fishery; Tail, and Tenancy, see those titles.

Several actions. Where a separate and distinct action is brought against each of two or more persons who are all liable to the plaintiff in respect to the same subject-matter, the actions are said to be "several." If all the persons are joined as defendants in one and the same action, it is called a "joint" action.

Several inheritance. An inheritance conveyed so as to descend to two persons severally, by moiety, etc.

Several liability. Liability separate and distinct from liability of another to the extent that an independent action may be brought without joinder of others.

Severally. Distinctly, separately, apart from others. When applied to a number of persons the expression severally liable usually implies that each one is liable alone.

Severally, estate in. An estate which is held by the tenant in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein. 2 Bl.Comm. 179.

Severally, a joint estate. See Severality of actions.

Severance. Act of severing, or state of being severed; partition; separation: e.g. a claim against a party may be severed and proceeded with separately. Fed. R.Civil P. 21. Severance divides lawsuit into two or more independent causes, each of which terminates in separate, final and enforceable judgment. Kansas University Endowment Ass'n v. King, 162 Tex. 599, 350 S.W.2d 11, 19. See also Severance of actions.

The destruction of any one of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed. Term may also refer to cutting of the crops, such as corn, wheat, etc., or the separating of anything from the realty.

Severance damage. Essence of severance damages is the loss in value to the remainder tract by reason of a partial taking of land and this is predicated on the enhanced value of the remainder tract because of its relationship to whole prior to the taking. U. S. v. 105.40 Acres of Land, More or Less in Porter County, State of Indiana, C.A.Ind., 471 F.2d 207, 211. If only part of single tract is taken, owner's compensation for taking includes any and all elements of value arising out of relation of part taken to entire tract and such damages are often called severance damages. U. S. v. 26.81 Acres of Land, More or Less, in Benton County, Ark., D.C.Ark., 244 F.Supp. 831, 839.

Severance of actions. An action of a court in separating the claims of multiple parties and permitting separate actions on each claim or on fewer than all claims at one time. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21. "Severance" divides lawsuit into two or more independent causes, each of which terminates in separate, final and enforceable judgment. Kansas University Endowment Ass'n v. King, 162 Tex. 599, 350 S.W.2d 11, 19.

Severance pay. Payment by an employer to employee beyond his wages on termination of his employment. Generally, it is paid when the termination is not due to employee's fault and many union contracts provide for it.
Shakedown. Extortion of money with threats of physical harm.

Seward, or seaward /s(y)ward/si'ward/. One who guards the sea-coast; custos maris.

Sex. The sum of the peculiarities of structure and function that distinguish a male from a female organism; the character of being male or female.

S.F.S. An abbreviation in the civil law for “sine fraude sua” (without fraud on his part).

Shack. In old English law, the straying and escaping of cattle out of the lands of their owners into other uninclosed land; an intercommonging of cattle.

Shakedown. Extortion of money with threats of physical harm or, in case of police officer, threat of arrest. See also Blackmail; Extortion.

Shall. As used in statutes, contracts, or the like, this word is generally imperative or mandatory. In common or ordinary parlance, and in its ordinary signification, the term “shall” is a word of command, and one which has always or which must be given a compulsory meaning, as denoting obligation. It has a peremptory meaning, and it is generally imperative or mandatory. It has the invariable significance of excluding the idea of discretion, and has the significance of operating to impose a duty which may be enforced, particularly if public policy is in favor of this meaning, or when addressed to public officials, or where a public interest is involved, or where the public or persons have rights which ought to be exercised or enforced, unless a contrary intent appears. People v. O’Rourke, 124 Cal.App. 752, 13 P.2d 989, 992.

But it may be construed as merely permissive or directory (as equivalent to “may”), to carry out the legislative intention and in cases where no right or benefit to any one depends on its being taken in the imperative sense, and where no public or private right is impaired by its interpretation in the other sense. Wisdom v. Board of Sup’rs of Polk County, 236 Iowa 669, 19 N.W.2d 602, 607, 608.

Sham. False. A transaction without substance that will be disregarded for tax purposes. See also Dummy.

Sham pleading. Those which are inherently false and must have been known by interposing party to be untrue. Pentecostal Holiness Church, Inc. v. Mauney, Fla.App., 270 So.2d 762, 769. A “sham pleading” subject to motion to strike (Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f)), is one that is good in form, but false in fact, and not pleaded in good faith. Scott v. Meek, 228 S.C. 29, 88 S.E.2d 768, 769. A pleading is “sham” only when it is so clearly false that it does not raise any bona fide issue. Fontana v. Town of Hempstead, 219 N.Y.S.2d 383, 384.

Shanghai /shápháy/. Practice of drugging, tricking, intoxicating or otherwise forcing persons to become sailors—usually to secure advance money or a premium.

Under federal law, the offense of procuring or inducing, or attempting to do so, by force, or threats, or by representations which one knows or believes to be untrue, or while the person is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to go on board of any vessel, or agree to do so, to perform service or labor thereon, such vessel being engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, on the high seas or any navigable water of the United States, or knowingly to detain on board such vessel such person, so procured or induced, or knowingly aiding or abetting such things. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2194.

Share, v. To partake; enjoy with others; have a portion of.

Share, n. A part or definite portion of a thing owned by a number of persons in common and contemplates something owned in common by two or more persons and has reference to that part of the undivided interest which belongs to some one of them. A unit of stock representing ownership in a corporation. See also Distributive share; Share of corporate stock; Stock.

Share and share alike. In equal shares or proportions. The words commonly indicate per capita division; and they may be applied to a division between classes as well as to a division among individuals. See Per capita.

Share certificate. An instrument of a corporation certifying that the person therein named is entitled to a certain number of shares; it is prima facie evidence of his title thereto. Document which evidences participation in a voting trust of shares of a corporation.

Sharecropper. Type of tenant farmer who lives on and works the land of another, his compensation being a portion of the crops minus any advances for seed, food, tools, etc.

Sharecropping. Type of agricultural arrangement in which the landlord leases land and equipment to tenant or sharecropper who, in turn, gives to the landlord a percentage of the crops as rent.

Shareholder. See Stockholder.

Share of corporate stock. A proportional part of certain rights in a corporation during its existence, and in the assets upon dissolution, and evidence of the stockholder’s ratable share in the distribution of the assets on the winding up of the corporation’s business. Department of Treasury of Indiana v. Crowder, 214 Ind. 252, 15 N.E.2d 89, 91. See Share certificate; Stock.

Share split. See Stock (Stock split).

Share-warrant to bearer. A warrant or certificate of a corporation, stating that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to a certain number or amount of fully paid up shares or stock. Coupons for payment of dividends may be annexed to it. Delivery of the share-warrant operates as a transfer of the shares or stock.

Sharp. A “sharp” clause in a mortgage or other security (or the whole instrument described as “sharp”) is...
SHARP

Shave. Sometimes used to denote the act of obtaining the property of another by oppression and extortion. Also used in an innocent sense to denote the buying of existing notes and other securities for money, at a discount. Hence to charge a man with using money for shaving is not libelous per se.

Shelley's Case, Rule in. "When the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, taketh an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, 'the heirs' are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase." 1 Co.Rep. 93b (1581). This rule has also been expressed as follows: "Where a person takes an estate of freehold, legally, or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of any interest of the same legal or equitable quality to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate." In re Thorne's Estate, 344 Pa. 503, 25 A.2d 811, 819.

Intimately connected with the quantity of estate which a tenant may hold in reality is the antique feudal doctrine generally known as the "Rule in Shelley's Case," which is reported by Lord Coke in 1 Coke, 93b (23 Eliz. in C.B.). This rule was not first laid down or established in that case, but was then simply admitted in argument as a well-founded and settled rule of law, and has always since been quoted as the "Rule in Shelley's Case." The rule was adopted as a part of the common law of this country, though it has long since been abolished by most states.

Shelter. In statutes relating to the provision of food, clothing, and shelter for one's children, term generally refers to a home with proper environments, as well as protection from the weather.

Sheriff. The chief executive and administrative officer of a county, being chosen by popular election. His principal duties are in aid of the criminal courts and of a county, being chosen by popular election. His principal duties are in aid of the criminal courts and of the county jail in most states. See also Deputy; Marshal.

Deputy sheriff. See Deputy.

Sheriff's deed. A document giving ownership rights in property to a buyer at a sheriff's sale (i.e., a sale held by a sheriff to pay a court judgment against the owner of the property). Deed given at sheriff's sale in foreclosure of a mortgage. The giving of said deed begins a statutory redemption period.

Sheriff's sale. A sale, commonly by auction, conducted by a sheriff or other court officer to carry out a decree of execution or foreclosure issued by a court. Examples include sales pursuant to attachments, liens and mortgages. See also Judicial sale.

Sherman Antitrust Act. Such Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1–7) prohibits any unreasonable interference, by contract, or combination, or conspiracy, with the ordinary, usual and freely-competitive pricing or distribution system of the open market in interstate trade. See also Clayton Acts; Restraint of trade; Robinson-Patman Act; Rule (Rule of reason).

Shield laws. State statutes which afford privilege to journalists to not disclose information (i.e., notes and other materials) obtained during course of their newsgathering.

Shifting. Changing; varying; passing from one person to another by substitution.

Shifting clause. In a settlement at common law, a clause by which some other mode of devolution is substituted for that primarily prescribed. Examples of shifting clauses are: The ordinary name and arms clause, and the clause of less frequent occurrence by which a settled estate is destined as the foundation of a second family, in the event of the elder branch becoming otherwise enriched. These shifting clauses take effect under the statute of uses.

Shifting income. Device used by taxpayers in high tax brackets to move income from themselves to their children and others who are in a lower bracket. Short term or Clifford trusts, as well as gifts to minors, are among the devices used to accomplish this purpose.

Shifting risk. In insurance, a risk created by a contract of insurance on a stock of merchandise, or other similar property, which is kept for sale, or is subject to change in items by purchase and sale; the policy being conditioned to cover the goods in the stock at any and all times and not to be affected by changes in its composition.

Shifting severality. See Severality.

Shifting stock of merchandise. A stock of merchandise subject to change from time to time, in the course of trade by purchases, sales, or other transactions.

Shifting the burden of proof. Transferring it from one party to the other, or from one side of the case to the other, when he upon whom it rested originally has made out a prima facie case or defense by evidence, of such a character that it then becomes incumbent upon the other to rebut it by contradictory or defensive evidence.

Shifting use. See Use.

Shilling. Slang term for the act of posing as an innocent bystander at a confidence game but giving aid and assistance to the perpetrators of the scheme as a decoy.

Shinney /shiniy/. A local name for a homemade whisky. Moonshine.

Shin-plaster. Formerly, a jocose term for a bank-note or combination, or conspiracy, with the ordinary, usual and freely-competitive pricing or distribution system of the open market in interstate trade. See also Clayton Acts; Restraint of trade; Robinson-Patman Act; Rule (Rule of reason).

Ship, v. To put on board a ship; to send by ship. Harrison v. Fortlage, 161 U.S. 57, 16 S.Ct. 488, 490, 40 L.Ed. 616. To place (goods) on board a vessel for the purchaser or consignee, to be transported at his risk. In a broader sense, to transport; to deliver to a carrier (public or private) for transportation. To send away, to get rid of. To send by established mode of transportation, as to "carry," "convey," or "transport," which are synonymous and defined, respectively, as "to bear or cause to be borne as from one place to another," and "to carry or convey from one place to another." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Petroleum Refining Co., D.C.Ky., 39 F.2d 629, 630. See also Send; Shipment; Shipping.

Ship, n. A vessel of any kind employed in navigation.

General ship. Where a ship is not chartered wholly to one person, but the owner offers her generally to carry the goods of all comers, or where, if chartered to one person, she offers her to several subfreighters for the conveyance of their goods, she is called a "general" ship, as opposed to a "chartered" one. One which is employed by the charterer or owner on a particular voyage, and is hired to a number of persons, unconnected with each other to convey their respective goods to the place of destination. Alexander Eccles & Co. v. Strachan Shipping Co., D.C.Ga., 21 F.2d 653, 655.

Ship broker. An agent for the transaction of business between shipowners and charterers or those who ship cargoes.

Ship-master. The captain or master of a merchant ship, appointed and put in command by the owner, and having general control of the vessel and cargo, with power to bind the owner by his lawful acts and engagements in the management of the ship.

Ship's husband. In old maritime law, a person appointed by the several part-owners of a ship, and usually one of their number, to manage the concerns of the ship for the common benefit. Generally understood to be the general agent of the owners in regard to all the affairs of the ship in the home port.

Ship's papers. The papers which must be carried by a vessel on a voyage, in order to furnish evidence of her national character, the nature and destination of the cargo, and of compliance with the navigation laws. The ship's papers are of two sorts: Those required by the law of a particular country; such as the certificate of registry, license, charter-party, bills of lading and of health and the like. Those required by the law of nations to be on board neutral ships, to vindicate their title to that character; these are the pass-port, sea-brief, or sea-letter, proofs of property, the muster roll or rôle d'équipage, the charter-party, the bills of lading and invoices, the log-book or ship's journal, and the bill of health.

Shipment. The delivery of goods to a carrier and his issuance of a bill of lading therefor. The transportation of goods. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Carolina Portland Cement Co., C.C.A.S.C., 16 F.2d 760, 761. Also, the property which is the subject of transportation. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Carolina Portland Cement Co., C.C.A.S.C., 16 F.2d 760, 761. An order. A consignment of goods as delivered by the carrier. See also Ship; Shipping.

Ship Mortgage Act. Federal statute regulating mortgages on ships registered as U.S. vessels. It provides for enforcement of maritime liens in favor of those who furnish supplies or maintenance to such vessels. 46 U.S.C.A. § 911 et seq.

Shipper. One who transports goods for a charge; a common carrier; e.g. motor carrier, railroad, air freight carrier, freight forwarder.

Shipping. Ships in general; ships or vessels of any kind intended for navigation. Relating to ships; as, shipping interests, shipping affairs, shipping business, shipping concerns. Putting on board a ship or vessel, or receiving on board a ship or vessel.

Law of shipping. A comprehensive term for all that part of the maritime law which relates to ships and the persons employed in or about them. It embraces such subjects as the building and equipment of vessels, their registration and nationality, their ownership and inspection, their employment (including charter-parties, freight, demurrage, towage, and salvage), and their sale, transfer, and mortgage; also, the employment, rights, powers, and duties of masters and mariners; and the law relating to ship-brokers, ship-agents, pilots, etc. See Maritime; Jones Act; Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act; Maritime.

Shipping articles. A written agreement between the master of a vessel and the mariners, specifying the voyage or term for which the latter are shipped, and the rate of wages. 46 U.S.C.A. § 564.

Shipping document. Generic term to describe all papers which cover a shipment in foreign or inland trade such as bill of lading, letter of credit, certificate of insurance and the like. See also Ship (Ship's papers).

Shipping order. Copy of bill of lading which carries shipper's instructions to carrier as to the disposition of the goods.

Shipping papers. See Shipping document.

Shipwreck. The demolition or shattering of a vessel, caused by her driving ashore or on rocks and shoals in the midseas, or by the violence of winds and waves in tempests.

Shire /'ʃaɪ(r)/. A Saxon word which signified a division; it was made up of an indefinite number of hundreds—later called a county (Comitatus).

In England, a county. So called because every county or shire is divided and parted by certain metes and bounds from another.

Knights of the shire. See that title.

Shire-clerk. He that keeps the county court.

Shire-gemot, scire-gemote, scir-gemot. (From the Saxon scir or scyre, county, shire, and gemote, a court, an assembly.) Variants of scyregemot (q.v.). See, also, Shire-mote, infra.

Shire-man, or scyre-man. Before the Conquest, the judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined.

Shiremote. The assize of the shire, or the assembly of the people, was so called by the Saxons. It was nearly if not exactly, the same as the scyregemote, and in most respects corresponded with what were afterwards called the "county courts."
Shock. A sudden agitation of the physical or mental sensibilities. A sudden depression of the vital forces of the entire body, or a part of it, marking some profound impression produced upon the nervous system, as by severe injury, a surgical operation, profound emotion, or the like, or a prostration of the bodily functions, as from sudden injury or mental disturbance. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 18 Tenn.App. 452, 79 S.W.2d 292, 295. See also Trauma.

Mental shock. A sudden agitation of the mind; startling emotion, as the shock of a painful discovery, a shock of grief or joy. Provident Life and Accident Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 18 Tenn.App. 452, 79 S.W.2d 292, 295.

Physical shock. A blow, impact, collision, concussion, or violent shake or jar, or a violent collision of bodies, or the concussion caused by it; a sudden striking or dashing together or against something. Provident Life and Accident Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 18 Tenn.App. 452, 79 S.W.2d 292, 295.

Shoot. To strike with something shot; to hit, wound, or kill, with a missile discharged from a weapon. The term generally implies the use of firearms.

Shop-books. Books of original entry kept by trademen, shop-keepers, mechanics, and the like, in which are entered their accounts and charges for goods sold, work done, etc., commonly called “account-books,” or “books of account.”

Shoplifting. Larceny of merchandise from a store or business establishment. Essential constituents of “shoplifting” are (1) willfully taking possession of merchandise offered for sale in mercantile establishment, (2) with intention of converting merchandise to taker’s own use without paying purchase price thereof. Yearwood v. State, 2 Tenn.Cr.App. 552, 455 S.W.2d 612, 617.

Shop right rule. In patent law, the right of an employer to use employee’s invention in employer’s business without payment of royalty. The “shop right” doctrine is that, where an employee during his hours of employment working with his employer’s materials and appliances conceives and perfects an invention for which he obtains a patent, he must accord his employer a nonexclusive right to practice the invention. The employer, however, is not entitled to a conveyance of the invention, this remains the right of the employee-inventor. U. S. v. Dubilier Condenser Corp., 289 U.S. 178, 189, 53 S.Ct. 554, 558, 177 L.Ed. 1114.

Shop steward. A union official elected to represent members in a particular department. His duties include collection of dues, recruitment of new members and initial negotiations for settlement of grievances.

Shore. Strictly and technically, lands adjacent to the sea or other tidal waters. The lands adjoining navigable waters, where the tide flows and refloWS, which at high tides are submerged, and at low tides are bare. Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 548, 38 L.Ed. 331. The space bounded by the high and low water marks. Borax Consolidated v. City of Los Angeles, Cal., 296 U.S. 10, 56 S.Ct. 23, 80 L.Ed. 9. And this is also true even though the lands may lie along nonnavigable bodies of water.

Under the civil law the “shore line” boundary of lands adjoining navigable waters is the line marked by the highest tide.

In connection with salvage, “shore” means the land on which the waters have deposited things which are the subject of salvage, whether below or above ordinary high-water mark.

Shore lands. Those lands lying between the lines of high and low water mark. Lands bordering on the shores of navigable lakes and rivers below the line of ordinary high water.

Short. Not long; of brief length or duration; not coming up to a measure, standard, requirement, or the like.

A term of common use in the stock and commodity markets. To say that one is “short,” in the vernacular of the exchanges, implies only that one has less of a commodity than may be necessary to meet demands and obligations. It does not imply that commodity cannot or will not be supplied upon demand.

In finance and commodity futures, a person is short when he has sold securities or commodities which he does not own at the time of the sale, though he expects to buy them back at a lower price than that at which he sold them. See also Short sale.

Short covering. Buying stock to return stock previously borrowed to make delivery on a short sale.

Short interest. A short sale is the sale of borrowed stock. The seller expects a price decline that would enable him to purchase an equal number of shares later at a lower price for return to the lender. The “short interest” is the number of shares that haven’t been purchased for return to lenders. See also Short sale.

Short lease. A term applied colloquially, but without much precision, to a lease for a short term (as a month or a year), as distinguished from one running for a long period.

Shortly after. In point of time, a relative term, meaning in a short or brief time or manner; soon; presently; quickly.

Short position. A short position maybe created when an investor borrows a stock in order to sell it, figuring the price of the stock will decline. The investor is in a “short position” until he purchases stock to repay the lender. See Short sale.
Short sale. A contract for sale of shares of stock which the seller does not own, or certificates for which are not within his control, so as to be available for delivery at the time when, under rules of the exchange, delivery must be made. Provost v. U. S., 269 U.S. 443, 46 S.Ct. 152, 153, 70 L.Ed. 332. A short sale occurs where a taxpayer sells borrowed property (usually stock) and repays the lender with substantially identical property either held on the date of the short sale or purchased after the sale. No gain or loss is recognized until the short sale is closed and such gain or loss is generally short term. I.R.C. § 1233. See also Short interest; Short position.

Short summons. A process, authorized in some of the states, to be issued against an absconding, fraudulent, or nonresident debtor, which is returnable within a less number of days than an ordinary writ of summons.

Short swing profits. Profits made by insider through any note, draft, bill of exchange, or short term paper. Short-term debt. Debt evidenced by notes or drafts which are payable on demand or within a year of issuance. See Insider.

Show cause order. An order to a person or corporation to appear in court and explain why the court should not take a particular order, decree, etc., or as the case may be. An order to a person or corporation to appear in court and explain why the court should not take a proposed action. If the person or corporation fails to appear or to give sufficient reasons why the court should take no action, the court will take the action.

Show-up. One-to-one confrontation between suspect and witness to crime. A type of pre-trial identification procedure in which a suspect is confronted by or exposed to the victim of or witness to a crime. It is less formal than a lineup but its purpose is the same. Commonly, it occurs within a short time after the crime or under circumstances which would make a lineup impracticable or impossible. Due process standards must be met if evidence of such identification is to be admissible in court. Stovall v. Denno, 388 U.S. 293, 87 S.Ct. 1967, 18 L.Ed.2d 1199; Neil v. Biggers, 409 U.S. 188, 93 S.Ct. 375, 34 L.Ed.2d 401.

Shut down. To stop work; usually said of a factory, etc.

Shut-in royalty. In oil and gas leases, a royalty payment made to keep the lease in force though there is no production.

Shyster. A trickish knave; one who carries on any business or profession in a deceitful, tricky or dishonest way.

Sic actio /sák eksh(i)yow/. Lat. The conclusion of a proceeding to an action when the defendant demands judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have his action, etc. Obsolete.

Si a jure discedas, vagus eris, et erunt omnia omnibus incerta /sá ey juriy dasiydvas, veygas ehras, ød ehrant ômn(i)ya ômnabas insärda/. If you depart from the law, you will go astray, and all things will be uncertain to everybody.

Si aliquus rei societas sit et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas /sá ëskiywiyas riyay sašayats sid øt fáynas nagówsh(i)yow impózadas ést, finadór sašáyatsës/. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases.

Si aliquid ex solemnibus deficit, cum aequitas poscit, subveniendum est /sá yëlakkwod ëks salémnabas dáfíshiyat, kâm ëkwaòtas pósat, sávéniyénådám ést/. If any one of certain required forms be wanting, where equity requires, it will be aided. The want of some of a neutral vessel’s papers is strong presumptive evidence against the ship’s neutrality, yet the want of any one of them is not absolutely conclusive.

Si aliquid sapit /sá yëlakkwod sêyapt/. Lat. If he knows anything; if he is not altogether devoid of reason.

Si assetis mederi possis, nova non sunt tentanda /sáy swiwiydas módìray póssas, nówva nón sánt tentánda/. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. If an old wall can be repaired, a new one should not be made.

Si a tutela removendus est /sáy ëy t(ý)uwtyyla ríymówvénås ést/. If a guardian do fraud to his ward, he shall be removed from his guardianship.

Sib /sib/. Sax. A relative or kinsman. Used in the Scotch tongue, but not now in English.

Slc /slk/. Lat. Thus; so, in such manner.

Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere ne viicini detersorem faciat /sik emam débírìy kwêm mýl(i)yórem ágram s(y)ùwam fásartì nìy vásáñay.
Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu. [A statute] is to be so interpreted that the words may be taken with effect.

Sick leave. Period allowed by an employer to an employee for the employee’s sickness either with or without pay but with no loss of seniority or other benefits.

Sickness. Illness; disease. An ailment of such a character as to affect the general soundness and health; not a mere temporary indisposition, which does not tend to undermine and weaken the constitution.

Si constet de persona. Lat. If it be certain who is the person meant.

Si contingat. Lat. If it happen. Words of condition in old conveyances.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non bedas. Lat. Every one ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor’s. A rule of the Roman law.

Side. The margin, edge, verge, or border of a surface; any one of the bounding lines of the surface.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non bedas. Lat. Use your own property in such a manner as not to injure that of another. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed.

Sidewalk. That part of a public street or highway designed for the use of pedestrians, being exclusively reserved for them, and constructed somewhat differently than other portions of the street.

Sidemen. In ecclesiastical law, these were originally persons whom, in the ancient episcopal synods, the bishops were wont to summon out of each parish to give information of the disorders of the clergy and people, and to report heretics. In process of time they became standing officers, under the title of “synods,” “sidemen,” or “questmen.” The whole of their duties devolved by custom upon the churchwardens of a parish.

Side lines. In commercial usage, lines of goods sold or businesses followed in addition to one’s principal articles or occupation.

In mining law, the side lines of a mining claim are those which measure the extent of the claim on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface. They are not necessarily the side lines as laid down on the ground or on a map or plat; for if the claim, in its longer dimension, crosses the vein, instead of following it, the platted side lines will be treated in law as the end lines, and vice versa. Argentine Min. Co. v. Terrible Min. Co., 122 U.S. 478, 7 S.Ct. 1356, 30 L.Ed. 1140; Del Monte Min. Co. v. Last Chance Min. Co., 171 U.S. 55, 18 S.Ct. 895, 43 L.Ed. 72.

Side reports. A term sometimes applied to unofficial volumes or series of reports, as contrasted with those prepared by the official reporter of the court, or to collections of cases omitted from the official reports.

Side-bar rules. In English practice, there are some rules which the courts authorize their officers to grant as a matter of course without formal application being made to them in open court, and these are technically termed “side-bar rules,” because formerly they were moved for by the attorneys at the side bar in court; such, for instance, was the rule to plead, which was an order or command of the court requiring a defendant to plead within a specified number of days. Such also were the rules to reply, to rejoin, and many others, the granting of which depended upon settled rules of practice rather than upon the discretion of the courts, all of which have been rendered unnecessary by statutory changes.

Sight. The power of seeing; the faculty of vision or of perceiving objects; or the act of seeing, and perception of objects through the eyes.

Bills of exchange are frequently drawn payable at sight or certain number of days or months after sight. U.C.C. § 3-109(1)(b).

A demand for payment drawn by a person to whom money is owed. The draft is presented to the borrower’s (the debtor’s) bank in expectation that the borrower will authorize its bank to disburse the funds.

Sigil /sijal/. In old English law, a seal, or a contracted or abbreviated signature used as a seal.

Sigillum /sijillum/. Lat. In old English law, a seal; originally and properly a seal impressed upon wax.
Signatory /signat(o)riy/. A term used in diplomacy to signify a nation which is a party to a treaty. In civil law, a signet-ring; a seal-ring.

Signatory /signat(o)riy/. A term used in diplomacy to indicate a nation which is a party to a treaty. In general, a person who signs a document personally or through his agent and who becomes a party thereto.

Signature. The act of putting one's name at the end of a writing or instrument, by any word or mark used in lieu of a written signature; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one's own handwriting. To make any mark, as upon a document, in token of knowledge, approval, acceptance, or obligation. See also Execution; Mark; Signature.

Sign /signa/. The plural of signum (q.v.).

Significance. The act of putting one's name to a writing or instrument, for the purpose of authenticating or executing it, or to give it effect as one's act. To attach a name or cause it to be attached to a writing by any of the known methods of impressing a name on paper. To affix a signature to; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one's own handwriting. To make any mark, as upon a document, in token of knowledge, approval, acceptance, or obligation. See also Execution; Mark; Signature.

Sign /signa/. The term used in diplomacy to signify a nation which is a party to a treaty. In civil law, a signet-ring; a seal-ring.

Signatory /signatoriyss senyslss/. Lat. In Roman law, marks or signs of a signature. The act of putting one's name at the end of a writing or instrument, by any word or mark used in lieu of a written signature; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one's own handwriting. To make any mark, as upon a document, in token of knowledge, approval, acceptance, or obligation. See also Execution; Mark; Signature.

Si judicas, cognosce /say juwdakas kognosiy/. If you judge, understand.

Si ita est /sây ayda est/. Lat. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the fact alleged be truly stated (si ita est), to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions.

Si judicas, cognosce /say jûwdakas kognósiy/. If you judge, understand.

Signify. To make known by signs or words; express; communicate; announce; declare.

Signating judgment. See Sign.

Signum /signum/. Lat. Roman and civil law. A sign; a mark; a seal. The seal of an instrument.

A species of proof. By "signum" were meant those species of indicia which come more immediately under the cognizance of the senses; such as stains of blood on the person of one accused of murder, indications of terror at being charged with the offense, and the like.

Saxon law. The sign of a cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed.

Si ingratum dixeris, omnâ dixeris /sây ingreydâm diksâras, âm(n)î/yos diksâras/. If you affirm that one is ungrateful, in that you include every charge. A Roman maxim.

Si ita est /sây âyda est/. Lat. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the fact alleged be truly stated (si ita est), to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions.

Si judicas, cognosce /sây jûwdakas kognósîy/. If you judge, understand.

Silence. The state of a person who does not speak, or of one who refrains from speaking. In the law of estoppel, "silence" implies knowledge and an opportunity to act upon it.

Silence, estoppel by. Such estoppel arises where person is under duty to another to speak or failure to speak is inconsistent with honest dealings.

Silence of accused. A person under arrest may maintain silence as to all matters connected with the arrest and crime except that he must furnish his correct name, permit fingerprinting, as well as voice and writing exemplars. His silence may not be commented upon at trial nor may any inference be drawn from the fact of his silence. If a defendant refuses to plead, the court will enter a plea of not guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a).

Silentiarius /sãlĩnshîlîrîyâs/. In English law, one of the privy council; also an usher who keeps good order in court.

Silent leges inter arma /sâyîlant liyîlyîyînt arâmã/. The power of law is suspended during war.

Silent partner. An investor in a firm who takes no active part in its management but who shares in its profits and losses. A dormant partner; one whose name does not appear in the firm, and who takes no active part in the business, but who has an interest in the concern, and shares the profits, and thereby becomes a partner, either absolutely, or as respects third persons.

Silver certificates. Species of paper money formerly in circulation in this country and which was redeemable in silver. Silver certificates have been replaced by federal reserve notes.

Silver platter doctrine. Evidence obtained illegally by state officials was formerly admissible in federal prosecutions because no federal official had participated in the violation of the defendant's rights. However, this rule no longer obtains. Elkins v. U. S., 364 U.S. 206, 80 S.Ct. 1437, 4 L.Ed.2d 1669.

Si meliores sunt quos ductit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor /sâyî mîlîlyîrîyîz sânt kwôsw d(y)ûwswd éyîmôr, pl(y)ûrîyîz sânt kwôw kôrjast taymôr/. If those who are better are led by love, those are the greater number who are corrected by fear.

Similar. Nearly corresponding; resembling in many respects; somewhat like; having a general likeness, although allowing for some degree of difference. Gangl v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 33 Conn.Sup. 81, 360 A.2d 907, 908. Word "similar" is generally interpreted to mean that one thing has a resemblance in many respects, nearly corresponds, is somewhat like, or has a general likeness to some other thing but is not identical in form and substance, although in some cases "similar" may mean identical or exactly alike. It is a word with different meanings depending on context in which it is used. Guarantee Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Harrison, Tex.Civ.App., 358 S.W.2d 404, 406.

Similar happenings. In law of evidence, generally things that happened at a time different from the time in dispute in the suit are not admissible because they are not material or relevant to what occurred at the disputed time. Where such happenings are admissible, the proof is limited to such issues as control of premises, or conditions which may have persisted.

Similar sales. In law of evidence, when market value is in issue, sales of similar property is admissible to prove value.

There is no specific rule to determine the degree of similarity necessary for evidence of a sale of other property to be admissible in a condemnation action. "Similar" does not mean "identical," and other sales need be only sufficiently similar in character and locality to provide the jury some reasonable basis for comparison. Lake County Forest Preserve Dist. v. Reliance Standard Life Ins. Co., 29 Ill.App.3d 145, 329 N.E.2d 344, 349. "Similarity" necessary to permit evidence of sale of one property to establish market value of another does not mean identical, but does require reasonable resemblance taking into consideration such factors as location, size and sale price; conditions surrounding sale, such as date and character of sale; business and residential advantages or disadvantages; and unimproved, improved or developed nature of land. Arkansas State Highway Commission v. Witkowski, 236 Ark. 66, 364 S.W.2d 309, 311.

Similiter /sâmilîdôr/. Lat. In common law pleading, means likewise; the like. The name of the short form used either at the end of pleadings or by itself, expressly of the acceptance of an issue of fact tendered by the opposite party; otherwise termed a "joinder in issue." The plaintiff's reply, that, as the defendant has put himself upon the country, he, the plaintiff, does the like. It occurs only when the plea has the conclusion to the country, and its effect is to join the plaintiff in the issue thus tendered by the defendant.

Similutudo legallis est casuum diversorum inter se colla- torum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, vale¬ bit in altero. Dissimilium, dissimilis est ratio /sâmilitûdôwâdôg jêlîyôs àt kêsîwysûwam dâvôstôrûm ìntar sîj kôlôtôrûm sîmîlûs rêyîsh(y)ôw(y); kwôdîn èn yûnow sâmîlîyîm wâlîst, v álîyôd bôd èn òltaròw. dissîmilîyîm dîsîmîlîm ès rêyîsh(y)ôw(y). Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other; for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar.

Simonia est voluntas sive desiderium emendi vel vendendi spiritualia vel spiritualibus adhaerentia. Contractus ex turpi causa et contra bonos mores /sâmôwniyia ès valantsâ sâyiwiy dezâdîriyîm amenday vêl vendênday spîrîtyûyewîl(y)ô vêl spîrîtyûyewîl(y)abas àdharénsiy(y)â. kantraktsâ èks tîrpôy kôzô èt kôntra bôwïnow ând zôrîyâ/. Simony is the will or desire of buying or selling spiritualities, or things pertaining thereto. It is a contract founded on a bad cause, and against morality.

Simony /sîmôniy/. In English ecclesiastical law, the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money, gift, or reward. 2 Bl.Comm. 278. An unlawful contract for procuring a clergyman to a benefice. The buying or selling of ecclesiastical pre¬ ferments or of things pertaining to the ecclesiastical order. An unlawful agreement to receive a temporal reward for something holy or spiritual. Giving or receiving any material advantage in return for spiritual promotion, whether such advantage be actually received or only stipulated for.

Simpia /sîmpla/. Lat. In the civil law, the single value of a thing.
Simple. Pure; unmixed; not compounded; not aggravated; not evidenced by sealed writing or record.

As to simple Assault; Average; Battery; Blockade; Bond; Confession; Contract; Deposit; Imprisonment; Interest; Larceny; Obligation; and Trust, see those titles.

Simple kidnapping. A statutory form of unlawful imprisonment of a person which is not aggravated as in the case of child stealing or kidnapping for ransom.

Simple negligeence. Such consists of failure to exercise for protection of others that degree of care and caution that would, under prevailing circumstances, be exercised by ordinarily prudent person. Pettingell v. Moede, 129 Colo. 484, 271 P.2d 1038, 1042, 1043. See Negligence.

Simple robbery. Gist of crime is the putting in fear and taking of property of another by force or intimidation. People v. Small, 177 Colo. 118, 493 P.2d 15, 19.

Simplex /simpleks/. Lat. Simple; single; pure; unmixed; not compounded; not aggravated; not evidenced by sealed writing or record.

Simplest. A species of feigned disease, in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated, and greater sickness is pretended than really exists.

In the civil law, misrepresentation or concealment of the truth; as where parties pretend to perform a transaction different from that in which they really are engaged. A feigned, pretended act; one which assumes the appearance without the reality and, being entirely without effect, it is held not to have existed, and, for that reason, it may be disregarded or attacked collaterally by any interested person. Free man v. Woods, La.App., 1 So.2d 134, 136. See also Simulate.

Simulatlo la tens / sim(y)aleysh(iy)ow l£yten(d)z/. Lat. Together with. In cases of riots, it was usual to charge that A B, together with others unknown, did the act complained of.

Simul et pura donatio dici poterit, ubi nulla est adjectio venti modus /simpleks et pyurs danéysh(iy)ow dáysay póödst, yuwbay nala ést æještka kandish(iy)ow nék mówdas/. Agift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed.

Simplicita est legibus amica; et nimirum substantia in jure reprobatur /simpłisdá ét lijiabas ámáyka, ét nímiya sábítłitas in jùriy røpbéydar/. Simplicity is favorable to the laws; and too much subtlety in law is to be reprobated.

Simplicter /simpısadar/. Lat. Simply; without ceremony; in a summary manner.

Directly; immediately; as distinguished from inferentially or indirectly.

By itself; by its own force; per se.

Simulate. To assume the mere appearance of, without the reality; to assume the signs of or indications of, falsely; to counterfeit; feign; imitate; pretend. To engage, usually with the co-operation or connivance of another person, in an act or series of acts, which are apparently transacted in good faith, and intended to be followed by their ordinary legal consequences, but which in reality conceal a fraudulent purpose of the party to gain thereby some advantage to which he is not entitled, or to injure, delay, or defraud others.

Simulated contract. One which, though clothed in concrete form, has no existence in fact. It may at any time and at the demand of any person in interest be declared a sham and may be ignored by creditors of the apparent vendor.

Simulated fact. In the law of evidence, a fabricated fact; an appearance given to things by human device, with a view to deceive and mislead.

Simulated judgment. One which is apparently rendered in good faith, upon an actual debt, and intended to be collected by the usual process of law, but which in reality is entered by the fraudulent contrivance of the parties, for the purpose of giving to one of them an advantage to which he is not entitled, or of defrauding or delaying third persons.

Simulated sale. One which has all the appearance of an actual sale in good faith, intended to transfer the ownership of property for a consideration, but which in reality covers a collusive design of the parties to put the property beyond the reach of creditors, or proceeds from some other fraudulent purpose. It results when parties execute a formal act of sale of a thing for which no price is paid or is intended to be paid, and such sale has no legal effect and no title is transferred thereby. If there exists an actual consideration for transfer evidenced by alleged act of sale, no matter how inadequate it be, the transaction is not a "simulated sale", and, even though it be charged to be in fraud of vendor's creditors, such transfer cannot be set aside as a simulation although it may be subject to annulment on the ground of fraud or the giving of undue preference.

Simulatlo latens /sim(y)aleysh(iy)ow lfwten(d)z/. Lat. A species of feigned disease, in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated, and greater sickness is pretended than really exists.

In the civil law, misrepresentation or concealment of the truth; as where parties pretend to perform a transaction different from that in which they really are engaged. A feigned, pretended act; one which assumes the appearance without the reality and, being entirely without effect, it is held not to have existed, and, for that reason, it may be disregarded or attacked collaterally by any interested person. Free man v. Woods, La.App., 1 So.2d 134, 136. See also Simulate.

Simul cum /sáymal kám/. Lat. Together with. In actions of tort and in prosecutions, where several persons united in committing the act complained of, some of whom were known and others not, it was usual to allege in the declaration or indictment that the persons therein named did the injury in question, "together with (simul cum) other persons unknown." In cases of riots, it was usual to charge that A B, together with others unknown, did the act complained of.

Simul et semel /sáymal et sáymal/. Lat. Together and at one time.

Simultaneous. A word of comparison meaning that two or more occurrences or happenings are identical in time.

Simultaneous Death Act. A Uniform State Law (adopted by most states) which provides that where passage of title to property depends upon the time of one's death, if there is insufficient evidence that persons have died otherwise than simultaneously, the property of each person shall be disposed of as if he had survived unless the Act provides otherwise. See also Uniform Probate Code, § 2–104.

Simultaneous death clause. A clause in a will which provides for the disposition of property in the event that there is no evidence as to the priority of time of death of the testator and another, commonly the testator's spouse. See Uniform Probate Code, § 2–104.
Since. This word’s proper signification is “after,” and in its apparent sense it includes the whole period between the event and the present time. “Since” a day named, does not necessarily include that day.

Sine /sáyniy/. Lat. Without.

Sine animo revertendi /sáyniy énámoniy ríwáryántíday/. Without the intention of returning.

Sine assensu capituli /sáyniy sséntis(y)uw kápičáláy/. Without the consent of the chapter. In old English practice, a writ which lay where a dean, bishop, prebendary, abbot, prior, or master of a hospital aliened the lands holden in the right of his house, abbey, or priory, without the consent of the chapter; in which cases his successor might have this writ.

Sine consideratione curia /sáyniy kwáryá wáy kayríyuy/. Without the judgment of the court.

Sine curae /sáynkyár/síná/. An office which yields a revenue to the incumbent, but makes little or no demand upon his time or attention.

Sine dare /sáyniy dáríyiy/. Without a judge.

Sine die /sáyniy dáy(l)y/. Without day; without assigning a day for a further meeting or hearing. Hence, a legislative body adjourns sine die when it adjourns without appointing a day on which to appear or assemble again. State ex rel. Jones v. Atterbury, Mo., 300 S.W.2d 806, 811.

A final adjournment; final dismissal of a cause. Quod est sine die, that he go without day; the old form of a judgment for the defendant, i.e., a judgment discharging the defendant from any further appearance in court.

Sine hoc quod /sáyniy hók kwód/. Without this, that. A technical phrase in old pleading, of the same import with the phrase “absque hoc quod.”

Sine numero /sáyniy n(y)ówmarw/. Without stint or limit. A term applied to common.

Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest /sáyniy pséshíiyowy núysywykéiy(l)yow práslydary nón pówday/. There can be no prescription without possession.

Sine prole /sáyniy prówly/. Without issue. Used in genealogical tables, and often abbreviated into “s.p.”

Sine qua non /sáyniy kwéy nón/. Without which not. That without which the thing cannot be. An indispensable requisite or condition.

Single. One only, being an individual unit; alone; one which is abstracted from others. State ex rel. Nelson v. Board of Com’rs of Yellowstone County, 111 Mont. 395, 109 P.2d 1106, 1107. Unitary; detached; individual; affecting only one person; containing only one part, article, condition, or covenant. Unmarried; the term being also applicable to a widow, and occasionally even to a married woman living apart from her husband. Sometimes, principal; dominating.

As to single Adultery; Bill; Bond; Combat; Demise; Entry; Escheat; Obligation; Original; and Tract, see those titles.

Single creditor. One having a lien only on a single fund; distinguished from double creditor, who is one having a lien on two funds.

Single juror charge. The charge that, if there is any juror who is not reasonably satisfied from the evidence that plaintiff should recover a verdict against the defendant, jury cannot find against defendant.

Singular. Each; as in the expression “all and singular.” Also, individual. In grammar, the singular is used to express only one. In law, the singular frequently includes the plural. As to singular Successor; and Title, see those titles.

Singular in solidum tenetur /síngyaláy ín sóldáyntáy/. Each is bound for the whole.

Sinking fund. Assets and their earnings earmarked for the retirement of bonds or other long-term obligations. A fund (usually invested), which will be used to replace improvements as needed. Most commonly set aside from the income of income producing property.

A fund arising from particular taxes, imposest duties, which is appropriated toward the payment of the interest due on a public loan, and for the payment of the principal. Talbott v. City of Lyons, 171 Neb. 186, 105 N.W.2d 918, 925.

In general accounting, segregated assets that are being accumulated for a specific purpose. In governmental accounting, a fund established to accumulate resources for the retirement of bonds but not for the payment of interest, which is handled through the general fund or a special revenue fund.

Sinking fund debenture. A type of debenture which is backed by a provision for sinking fund (q.v.).

Sinking fund method of depreciation. The periodic charge is an amount so that when the charges are considered to be an annuity, the value of the annuity at the end of depreciable life is equal to the acquisition cost of the asset. In theory, the charge for a period ought also to include interest on the accumulated depreciation at the start of the period as well. A fund of cash is not necessarily, or even usually, accumulated.

Si non appareat quid actum est, erit consequens ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est frequenter tur /sáy nón sápyrây kvíd éktam ést, éhrat kansiykwán(d)z id íd sáwyém kvíd ín rílyjówíny ín kwéy áktam ést fríkwyntéydar/. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made.

Si non omnes /sáy nón ómnílyz/. Lat. In English practice, a writ of association of justices whereby, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more may proceed with the business.

Si nulla sit conjectura quae ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu /sáy nála sit kónjek(t)yúra kwy lá d(y)úiý wkadj éyl(y)ow, várb éntéjájéndá sánt éks prapráyátédyí, nón gráméjéka séd popyaléray éks yúýsuyw. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense.

Si paret /sáy pérat/. Lat. If it appears. In Roman law, words used in the formula by which the praetor appointed a judge, and instructed him how to decide the cause.

SIPC. Securities Investor Protection Act.

Spessouca. In old English law, a franchise, liberty, or privilege.

Si plures conditions ascript* fuerunt donation! con- junctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem co- munis est utraque pars sit vera, si distinctim, sufficet alteram partem esse veram /sáy pl(y)úirijz kandishiyównlyñz askrípty fyúriránt danélyshiyównay kánjíghtí, ómnás óst parénám, ód ód véntrénydám köypatálywíy rákwyhrádér kwód yÚytrénykwíy párí sít vírá, sáy dáyázam, kwayázat vél óltaray fóram sénydas óst óbtemprérríy, ód in disjúngktíyas, sáfás óltaray párám éslí yírám/. If several conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singull in solidum tenentur /sáy pl(y)úirîyz sint fáydyásýírîyz kwótkwot éhránt n(y)yúýmarow, sîngylyay in sóldám tãñtérér/. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole.

Si prús /sáy préyas/. Lat. In old practice, if before. Formal words in the old writs for summoning juries.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prénomine legataríy testator erraverit, cum de persona constat, nihilomi- nus valet legatum /sáy kwy lá d(y)úiý wkd yúýnvarýsátédyí dabydýar, sýngylyay nóó dabydýar, nél kwód débät yúýnvarýsáte sýngylyay débánt/. If anything be owing to an entire body [or to a corporation], it is not owing to the individual members; nor do the individuals owe that which is owing by the entire body. 1 Bl.Comm. 484.

Si quis /sáy kwís/. Lat. In the civil law, if any one. Formal words in the pratorian edicts. The word “quis,” though masculine in form was held to include women.

Si quis cum totum petisset partem petat, exceptio rel judicatae vocet /sáy kwís kám tóódám pédyjáset párám pédat, ákýséps(h)íow fíyay júydsékýdédý véyowvat/. If a party, when he should have sued for an entire claim, sues only for a part, the judgment is res judicata against another suit.

Si quis custos fraudem pupilio fecerit, a tutela removendus est /sáy kwís kásts frédám pyúuyhîow fíyay, éy tyúywíy yé mówvendus éss/. If any guardian should perform a fraudulent act against a ward, he must be removed from his charge.

Si quis pregnaventem uxorém relliquit, non videtur slne liberalis deceasit /sáy kwís prégnaventám áksóarum rállíkt, nóó vádýyar séányíy libíras dálýsíyisíy/. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered to have died without children. A rule of the civil law.

Si quis, unum perscrutet, cum allum perciturere vellet, in felonia tenetur /sáy kwís, yúúwman párkáátsár, kám éyl(y)am párkýuywóíríy vélád, in félónw(l)úa tányíyár/. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony.

Si recognoscat /sáy rékagnóskat/. Lat. If he acknowledge. In old practice. A writ which lay for a creditor against his debtor for money numbered (pecunia numerata) or counted; that is, a specific sum of money, which the debtor had acknowledged in the county court, to owe him, as received in pecunia numerata.

Sister. A woman who has the same father and mother with another, or has one of them only. In the first case, she is called sister, simply; in the second, half-sister. The word is the correlative of "brother."

Sister-in-law. Sister of one’s spouse; wife of one’s brother; wife of one’s spouse’s brother.

Si suggestio non sit vera, ltere patentes vacuum sunt /sáy ségiýs(h)ch(h)íow nóó sit vírá, lídáríy péntéýíy vásíýuwyíy sánt/. If the suggestion be not true, the letters patent are void.

Sitt. To hold court; to do any act of a judicial nature. To hold a session, as of a court, grand jury, legislative body, etc. To be formally organized and proceeding with the transaction of business.

Sit-down strike. A strike in which the workers stay in the plant but refuse to work.

Site /sáyt/. A plot of ground suitable or set apart for some specific use. A seat or ground plot. The term does not of itself necessarily mean a place or tract of land fixed by definite boundaries. See also Place; Selte; Situs.

Si te fecerit securum /sáy tíy fészarat sékyúyár/. If he make you secure. See Si fecerit securum.
Sithcundam. In Saxon law, the high constable of a hundred.

Sitting. The part of the year in which judicial business is transacted. A session or term of court; usually plural. See Session.

Sitting in bank or banc. A session of the court in which all judges or at least a quorum of judges sit and hear cases. Under current practice, the term is reserved almost exclusively for appellate courts and in this connection it is contrasted with single justice sitting.

Sittings in camera. See Chamber.

Situate. To give a specific position to; fix a site for; to place in certain position.

Situation of danger. Within the meaning of the last clear chance rule as applicable to a plaintiff operating a moving vehicle, is reached only when plaintiff, in moving toward path of an on-coming train or vehicle has reached a position from which he cannot escape by ordinary care, and it is not enough that plaintiff was merely approaching a position of danger.

Situs /sáýdás/. Lat. Situation; location; e.g. location or place of crime or business. Site; position; the place where a thing is considered, for example, with reference to jurisdiction over it, or the right or power to tax it. It imports fixedness of location. Situs of property, for tax purposes, is determined by whether the taxing state has sufficient contact with the personal property sought to be taxed to justify in fairness the particular tax. Town of Cady v. Alexander Const. Co., 12 Wis.2d 236, 107 N.W.2d 267, 270.

Generally, personal property has its taxable "situs" in that state where owner of it is domiciled. Smith v. Lummu, 149 Fla. 660, 6 So.2d 625, 627, 628. Situs of a trust means place of performance of active duties of trustee. Campbell v. Albers, 313 Ill.App. 152, 39 N.E.2d 672, 676.

For business situs, see Business. See also Place.

Solve tota res evincatur, sive pars, habet regressum empor in venditore /sáývi tówda ríyé̄ iyvínkýédar, sáý-vi̮ párz, hénȳ̄ bragésam é̄m(p)tar in vëndtô̄m/. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor.

Sixteenth Amendment. An amendment to the U.S. Constitution which permits Congress to tax incomes "from whatever source derived," thus nullifying the Supreme Court's decisions in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., which had declared that an income tax was a direct tax, which would be constitutionally valid only if apportioned among the States according to population.

Sixth Amendment. The Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution includes such rights as the right to speedy and public trial by an impartial jury, right to be informed of the nature of the accusation, the right to confront witnesses, the right to assistance of counsel and compulsory process.

Sixty-day notice. Under Taft-Hartley Act, notice which must be given by either party to a collective bargaining agreement for reopening or terminating the contract. During such period, strikes and lockouts are prohibited. See 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(d).

Skeleton bill. One drawn, indorsed, or accepted in blank.

Skill. Practical and familiar knowledge of the principles and processes of an art, science, or trade, combined with the ability to apply them in practice in a proper and approved manner and with readiness and dexterity.

Skilled witnesses. One possessing knowledge and experience as to particular subject which are not acquired by ordinary persons. Such witness is allowed to give evidence on matters of opinion and abstract fact. See also Expert witness.

Skinpop. An intramuscular injection of narcotic drug.

Skiptracing. Service which assists creditors in locating delinquent debtors. Also, such services may include location of missing heirs, witnesses, stockholders, bondholders, assets, bank accounts, or the like.

S.L. Abbreviation for "session [or statute] laws."

Slains. See Letters of slains.

Slander. The speaking of base and defamatory words tending to prejudice another in his reputation, office, trade, business, or means of livelihood. Little Stores v. Isenberg, 26 Tenn.App. 357, 172 S.W.2d 13, 16; Harbison v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 327 Mo. 440, 37 S.W.2d 609, 616. Oral defamation; the speaking of false and malicious words concerning another, whereby injury results to his reputation. Johnston v. Savings Trust Co. of St. Louis, Mo., 66 S.W.2d 113, 114; Lloyd v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.7, 55 F.2d 842, 844. The essential elements of slander are: (a) a false and defamatory statement concerning another; (b) an unprivileged communication; (c) fault amounting at least to negligence on the part of the publisher; and (d) either actionability of the statement irrespective of harm or the existence of special harm. Restatement, Second, Torts § 558.

"Libel" and "slander" are both methods of defamation; the former being expressed by print, writing, pictures, or signs; the latter by oral expressions or transitory gestures. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 568.

See also Actionable per quod; Actionable per se; Per quod; Per se; Slanderous per se.

Slanderer. One who commits slander. See Slander.

Slavery. The condition of a slave; that civil relation in which one man has absolute power over the life, fortune, and liberty of another. The 13th Amendment abolished slavery.

Slave. A person who is wholly subject to the will of another; one who has no freedom of action, but whose person and services are wholly under the control of another. One who is under the power of a master, and who belongs to him; so that the master may sell and dispose of his person, of his industry, and of his labor, without his being able to do anything, have anything, or acquire anything, but what must belong to his master. The 13th Amendment abolished slavery.

Slave-trade. The traffic in slaves, or the buying and selling of slaves for profit.

Slay. This word, in an indictment, adds nothing to the force and effect of the word "kill," when used with reference to the taking of human life. It is particularly applicable to the taking of human life in battle; and, when it is not used in this sense, it is synonymous with "kill."

Sleeping or silent partner. See Silent partner.

As to slight Care; Evidence; Fault and Negligence, see those titles.

Slip law. A legislative enactment which is separately and promptly published in pamphlet or in single sheet format after its passage.

Slip law print. An annotated pamphlet print (called a slip law print) of each public and private law enacted by Congress is issued shortly after being signed by the President. Slip laws are cumulated into the U.S. Statutes at Large. See Statutes (Statutes at large).

Slip opinion. An individual court decision published separately soon after it is rendered.

Slot machine. Within statute prohibiting operation of slot machines or similar gambling device, an apparatus by which a person depositing money therein may, by chance, get directly or indirectly money or articles of value worth either more or less than the money deposited. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622, 624.

Slugg. An arm of a river, flowing between islands and the main-land, and separating the islands from one another. Sloughs have not the breadth of the main river, nor does the main body of water of the stream flow through them.

Slowdown. An organized effort by workers in a plant by which production is slowed to bring pressure on the employer for better terms and conditions of working.

Sluiceway. An artificial channel into which water is let by a sluice. Specifically, a trench constructed over the bed of a stream, so that logs or lumber can be floated down to a convenient place of delivery.

Slum. A squalid, run-down section of a city, town or village, ordinarily inhabited by the very poor and destitute classes; overcrowding is usually a prevailing characteristic.

Slush fund. Money collected or spent for corrupt purposes such as illegal lobbying or the like. Boehm v. United States, C.C.A.Mo., 123 F.2d 791, 812.

Small Business Administration. The fundamental purposes of the Small Business Administration (SBA) are to: aid, counsel, assist, and protect the interests of small business; insure that small business concerns receive a fair proportion of Government purchases, contracts, and subcontracts, as well as of the sales of Government property; make loans to small business concerns, State and local development companies, and the victims of floods or other catastrophes, or of certain types of economic injury; license, regulate, and make loans to small business investment companies; improve the management skills of small business owners, potential owners, and managers; conduct studies of the economic environment; and guarantee leases entered into by small business concerns as well as surety bonds issued to them.

Small business corporation. A corporation which satisfies the definition of I.R.C. § 1371(a), § 1244(c)(2) or both. Satisfaction of I.R.C. § 1371(a) permits a Subchapter S election, while satisfaction of § 1244 enables the shareholders of the corporation to claim an ordinary loss on the worthlessness of the stock.

Small Business Investment Act. Federal legislation enacted in 1958 under which investment companies may be organized for supplying long term equity capital to small businesses.

Small Claims Court. A special court (sometimes also called "Conciliation Court") which provides expeditious, informal, and inexpensive adjudication of small claims. Jurisdiction of such courts is usually limited to collection of small debts and accounts. Proceedings are very informal with parties normally representing themselves. These courts are often divisions or departments of courts of general jurisdiction.

Small estate probate. See Estate.

Small loan acts. Statutes in effect in nearly all the States fixing the maximum legal rate of interest and other terms on short-term loans by banks and finance companies.
Smart-money. Vindictive, punitive or exemplary damages given by way of punishment and example, in cases of gross misconduct of defendant. See Damages.

Smith Act. Federal law which punishes, among other activities, the advocacy of the overthrow of the government by force or violence. An anti-sedition law. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2385.

Smuggling. The offense of importing or exporting prohibited articles without paying the duties chargeable upon them. The fraudulent taking into a country, or out of it, merchandise which is lawfully prohibited. Quoted and approved by Brewer, J., in Dunbar v. U.S., 156 U.S. 185, 15 S.Ct. 325, 39 L.Ed. 390.

“Smuggle” has well-understood meaning at common law, signifying bringing on shore, or carrying from shore, of goods, wares, and merchandise for which duty has not been paid, or goods the importation or exportation whereof is prohibited. Williamson v. U.S., C.A.Cal., 310 F.2d 192, 195. See also Contraband.

Smut. See Obscene.

So. In the same manner as has been stated; under this circumstance; in this way, referring to something which is asserted. Sometimes the equivalent of "hence," or "therefore," and it is thus understood whenever what follows is an illustration of, or conclusion from, what has gone before.

In connection with time, it suggests a period of indefinite duration. Thus, an agreement to pay rent "within a week or so".

Soakage /sōˈwəkij/. As used in the laws and regulations relating to withdrawal of liquors from bonded warehouses, the spirits which in course of time in the warehouse had been absorbed by the staves of the barrel containing it.

Sober. Moderate in, or abstinent from, the use of intoxicating liquors.

Sobrin* and sobrina /səbˈrɛnə, -ˈbrɛnə/. Lat. In the civil law, the children of cousins, german in general.

Soc, sok, or soka. In Saxon law, jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute the laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory.

Soca /səˈwəkə/. A seigniory or lordship, enfranchised by the king, with liberty of holding a court of his socmen or socagers, i.e., his tenants.

Socage /səˈwəkə/. A species of tenure, in England, whereby the tenant held certain lands in consideration of certain inferior services of husbandry to be performed by him to the lord of the fee. In its most general and extensive signification, a tenure by any certain and determinate service. And in this sense it is by the ancient writers constantly put in opposition to tenure by chivalry or knight-service, where the render was precarious and uncertain. Socage is of two sorts,—free socage, where the services are not only certain, but honorable; and villein socage, where the services, though certain, are of baser nature. Such as hold by the former tenure are also called in Glanvil and other authors by the name of "liberi sokemanni," or tenants in free socage. By the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, all the tenures by knight-service were, with one or two immaterial exceptions, converted into free and common socage.

Socager /səˈwəkər/. A tenant by socage.

Socagium idem est quod servitum socie; et soca, idem est quod caruca /ʃəˈkeɪ(i)əm ˈɑːdəm əst sərvɪʃəm/iəm sōwsiy, et sōwka, ādəm əst kwəd kəˈruːkə/. Socage is the same as service of the soc; and soc is the same thing as a plow.

Socer /ˈsəʊsər/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife's father; a father-in-law.

Social contract, or compact. In political philosophy, a term applied to the theory of the origin of society associated chiefly with the names of Hobbes, Locke and Rousseau, though it can be traced back to the Greek Sophists. Rousseau (Contract Social) held that in the pre-social state man was unwarlike and timid. Laws resulted from the combination of men who agreed, for mutual protection, to surrender individual freedom of action. Government must therefore rest on the consent of the governed.

Social insurance. See Insurance.

Social Security Administration. The Social Security Administration, under the direction of the Commissioner of Social Security, administers a national program of contributory social insurance whereby employees, employers, and the self-employed pay contributions which are pooled in special trust funds. When earnings stop or are reduced because the worker retires, dies, or becomes disabled, monthly cash benefits are paid to replace part of the earnings the person or family has lost. In addition to making social security payments, the SSA also administers cash assistance programs such as Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), and Supplementary Security Income (SSI).

Soclda /səˈsəldə/. In civil law, the name of a contract by which one man delivers to another, either for a small recompense or for a part of the profits, certain animals on condition that if any of them perish they shall be replaced by the bailee or he shall pay their value.

A contract of hiring, with the condition that the bailee takes upon him the risk of the loss of the thing hired.

Sociedad /soˈsjesiˈeda/. In Spanish law, partnership.

Sociedad anónima /soˈsjesiˈeda anˈonima/. In Spanish and Mexican law, a business corporation.

Societas /soˈsjaˌtaːs/. Lat. In the civil law, partnership; a partnership; the contract of partnership. A contract by which the goods or labor of two or more are united in a common stock, for the sake of sharing in the gain.

Societas leonina /sasayatæs liyanayna/. That kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits belong to some of the partners, in exclusion of the rest. So called in allusion to the fable of the lion, who, having entered into partnership with other animals for the purpose of hunting, appropriated all the prey to himself.

Societas navalis /sasayatas navælyas/. A naval partnership; an association of vessels; a number of ships pursuing their voyage in company, for purposes of mutual protection.

Société anonyme /sowsiyetey ænowniym/. In French law originally a partnership conducted in the name of one of the members; the others were strictly secret partners. To creditors of the firm they came into no relation and under no liability. An association where the liability of all the partners is limited. It had in England until lately no other name than that of "chartered company," meaning thereby a joint-stock company whose shareholders, by a charter from the crown, or a special enactment of the legislature, stood exempted from any liability for the debts of the concern, beyond the amount of their subscriptions.

Société d'accuits. A written contract between husband and wife to regard as community property only those things which are acquired during the marriage.

Société en commandite /sowsiyetey ön kõmondìyt/. In Louisiana, a partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another partner or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or her own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished and no more.

Société en nom collectif /sowsiyetey ön nówm kolektif/. A partnership in which all the members are jointly and severally liable.

Société en participation /sowsiyetey ön partesípyasyówn/. A joint adventure.

Société par actions /sowsiyetey par åks(i)yówn/. A joint stock company.

Society. An association or company of persons (generally unincorporated) united together by mutual consent, in order to deliberate, determine, and act jointly for some common purpose. In a wider sense, the community or public; the people in general. Gilmer v. Stone, 120 U.S. 586, 7 S.Ct. 689, 30 L.Ed. 734.

Term "society," loss of which is recoverable element in death action under general maritime law, embraces broad range of mutual benefits each family member receives from other's continued existence, including love, affection, care, attention, companionship, comfort and protection; thus, widow, parent, brother, sister, or child may be compensated for loss of society. Consolidated Machines, Inc. v. Protein Products Corp., D.C.Fla., 428 F.Supp. 209, 228.

Within rule that husband is entitled to damages for loss of wife's "society" through wrongful injury, means such capacities for usefulness, aid, and comfort as a wife as she possessed at the time of the injuries. Homan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 335 Mo. 30, 70 S.W.2d 869. See also Consortium.

Civil society—usually, a state, nation, or body politic.

Socci mei soclus meus socius non est /sowshiyatay miyay sówsh(i)yos sówsh(i)yos nón èst/. The partner of my partner is not my partner.

Sochor /sowsh(i)yor/. Lat. In the civil law, a partner.

Socman /sökman/. A socager.

Free socmen. In old English law, tenants in free socage.

Socmanry /sökmanriy/. Free tenure by socage.

Socna /sókna/. A privilege, liberty, or franchise.

Sodomite /sódsmayt/. One who has been guilty of sodomy.

Sodomy. A carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast. State v. Young, 140 Or. 228, 13 P.2d 604, 607. Sodomy is oral or anal copution between persons who are not husband and wife or consenting adult members of the opposite sex, or between a person and an animal, or coitus with an animal. Kansas Criminal Code.

So help you God. The words commonly at the end of a common oath.

Soil bank. A federal program of conservation, under which farmers are paid for not growing crops, or growing noncommercial vegetation, in order to preserve the quality of the soil, as well as to avoid surpluses.

Solt /swá/swěy/. Fr. Let it be; be it so. A term used in several law; French phrases employed in English law, particularly as expressive of the will or assent of the sovereign in formal communications with parliament or with private suitors.

Solt baile aux commons /swà běyl ów kóman(d)z/. Let it be delivered to the commons. The form of indorsement on a bill when sent to the house of commons.

Solt baile aux seigneurs /swà běyl ów seenyùr/. Let it be delivered to the lords. The form of indorsement on a bill in parliament when sent to the house of lords.

Solt droit falt al partie /swà dróyt fèyt ál partly/. In English law, let right be done to the party. A phrase written on a petition of right, and subscribed by the king.

Solt fait comme il est desire /swà fèyt kóm iyl deziréy/. Let it be as it is desired. The royal assent to private acts of parliament.

Sojourning /sajamig/. This term means something more than "traveling," and applies to a temporary, as contradistinguished from a permanent, residence. In re Gahn’s Will, 110 Misc. 96, 180 N.Y.S. 262, 266.

Sokemanries /s6(w)km3nriyz/. Lands and tenements of the lord’s rent gatherer in Soke-reeve /s6(w)kman(d)z/.

In old English law, those who held their lands in socage.

Sole /s3ley(iy)am/. Compensation. Damages allowed for injury to the feelings.

Sole actor doctrine. Under this doctrine a principal is charged with the knowledge of his agent. It contemplates that an agent must have ostensibly endeavored to benefit his principal, and even though he did not do so and his acts were for his personal benefit, possibly through defalcation, the third party who obligated himself must have been under the impression that he was dealing with the principal. General American Life Ins. Co. v. Anderson, D.C.Ky., 46 F.Supp. 189, 195, 196, 198. It is based on the presumption that by reason of the relationship between an agent and his principal the principal is presumed to have been told everything the agent has done and presumed to have known of his actions and promises. Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v. Pendleton, D.C.Ky., 29 F.Supp. 779, 782, 783.

Sole and unconditional owner. See Owner.

Sole cause. As respects negligence of plaintiff or third party as the sole cause of injury so as to relieve defendant from liability, means the act or negligence of plaintiff or a third party directly causing the injury without any concurring or contributory negligence of defendant. Dixon v. Wabash R. Co., Mo.App., 198 S.W.2d 395, 398. Term means the act or negligence of the plaintiff or a third party directly causing the injury without any concurring or contributory negligence of defendant. Jurgens v. Thompson, 350 Mo. 914, 169 S.W.2d 353, 357. See also Proximate cause.

Solemn /sóləm/. Formal; in regular form; with all the forms of a proceeding. As to solemn “Form,” see Probate. As to solemn oath, see Corporal oath; as to solemn war, see War.

Solemnitas legum /sóləmniyz liygam formyaliy/. The solemnities of law are the sources of the unwritten law of Rome.

Solemnitas juris sunt observanda /sóləmniyz dzyg long formyaliy/. The solemnities of law are to be observed.

Solemnity /sóləmniy/. A rite or ceremony; the formality established by law to render a contract, agreement, or other act valid.

Solemnize /sóləmnayz/. To enter marriage publicly before witnesses in contrast to a clandestine or common law marriage.

Solemn occasion. Within constitutional provision empowering the Legislature to require the opinion of the Justices on important questions of law means occasion when such questions of law are necessary to be determined by the body making the inquiry in the exercise of the power intrusted to it by the Constitution or laws.

Sole proprietorship. A form of business in which one person owns all the assets of the business in contrast to a partnership and corporation. The sole proprietor is solely liable for all the debts of the business.

Solicit. To appeal for something; to apply for obtaining something; to ask earnestly; to ask for the purpose of receiving; to endeavor to obtain by asking or pleading; to entreat, implore, or importune; to make petition to; to plead for; to try to obtain; and though the word implies a serious request, it requires no particular degree of importunity, entreaty, imploitation, or supplication. People v. Phillips, 70 Cal.
Asking; enticing; urgent request. Any solicitation of bribe.

Chief law officer of city, town, or other governmental body or department; see e.g. Solicitor General.

In England, to become a solicitor a person must be articled to a practicing solicitor, pass the necessary examinations conducted by the Law Society, and be admitted by the Master of the Rolls. A solicitor may practice in the Bankruptcy Court, county courts, petty sessions, certain proceedings in the Crown Court, most inferior courts, and also in chambers of the Supreme Court. See also Barrister.

Solicitor General. The Solicitor General of the United States is in charge of representing the Government in the Supreme Court. He decides what cases the Government should ask the Supreme Court to review and what position the Government should take in them. He supervises the preparation of the Government's Supreme Court briefs and arguments in the Court and argues most of the important cases himself. The Solicitor General's duties also include deciding whether the United States should appeal in all cases it loses before the lower courts.

Solvency. In the civil law, when several persons bind themselves towards another for the same sum, at the same time, and in the same contract; and so obligate themselves that each may be compelled to pay the whole debt, and that payment made by one of them exonerates the others towards the creditor; and the obligation thus contracted is one, in solido, although one of the debtors be obliged differently from the others to the payment of one and the same thing; as if the one be but conditionally bound, while the engagement of the others is pure and simple, or if the one is allowed a term which is not granted to the others.

Solidary. A term of civil-law origin, signifying that the right or interest spoken of is joint or common. A "solidary obligation" corresponds to a "joint and several" obligation in the common law; that is, one for which several debtors are bound in such wise that each is liable for the entire amount, and not merely for his proportionate share. But in the civil law the term also includes the case where there are several creditors, as against a common debtor, each of whom is entitled to receive the entire debt and give an acquittance for it.

Solidum /sólədəm/. Lat. In the civil law, a whole; an entire or undivided thing.

Solium /soləynəm/. In old English law, two plow-lands, and somewhat less than a half.

Solitary confinement. In a general sense, the separate confinement of a prisoner, with only occasional access of any other person, and that only at the discretion of the jailer. In a stricter sense, the complete isolation of a prisoner from all human society, and his confinement in a cell so arranged that he has no direct intercourse with or sight of any human being, and no employment or instruction. Medley, Petitioner, 134 U.S. 160, 10 S.Ct. 384, 33 L.Ed. 835.

Solo cedit quod solo implantatur /sówlow síydst kwód sówlow implaentbagai/. That which is planted in the soil belongs to the soil. The proprietor of the soil becomes also the proprietor of the seed, the plant, and the tree, as soon as these have taken root.

Solo cedit quod solo inedificatur /sówlow síydst kwód sówlow inédafėkjayder/. That which is built upon the soil belongs to the soil. The proprietor of the soil becomes also proprietor of the building erected upon it.

Solum provinciale /sówlow pravinhʃiyɛtv/. Lat. In Roman law, the solum italicum (an extension of the old Ager Romanus) admitted full ownership, and of the application to it of usucapio; whereas the solum provinciale (an extension of the old Ager Publicus) admitted of a possessory title only, and of longi temporis possessio only. Justinian abolished all distinctions between the two, sinking the italicum to the level of the provinciale.

Solum rex hoc non facere potest, quod non potest injuste agere /sówlaw réks hok nón fésarì pówdst, kwód nón pówdst injustì əʃərì/. This alone the king cannot do, he cannot act unjustly.

Solus deus facit heredom, non homo /sówlaw diyas fésat hariydam, nón hówmow/. God alone makes the heir, not man.

Solutio /sal(y)wɪʃ(ɪ)yow/. Lat. In civil law, payment, satisfaction, or release; any species of discharge of an obligation accepted as satisfactory by... the creditor. The term refers not so much to the counting out of money as to the substance of the obligation.

Solutio indebiti /saldywehshiyow indébdāday/. In the civil law, payment of what was not due. From the payment of what was not due arises an obligation quasi ex contractu. When one has erroneously given or performed something to or for another, for which he was in no wise bound, he may redeem it, as if he had only lent it. The term "solutio indebiti" is here used in a very wide sense, and includes also the case where one performed labor for another, or assumed to pay a debt for which he was not bound, or relinquished a right or released a debt, under the impression that he was legally bound to do so.

Solutione feodi militis parlamenti, or feodi burgensis parlamentum /sal(diy)uwdiyówniy fyÝwydaw madas para-l(iy)aményay/*bajarjentisas para-l(iy)aményay/. Old writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses might have recovered their wages or allowance if it had been refused.

Solutio preti emptio loco habetur /sal(y)uwshiyowniy fwyday madidas para-l(iy)aményay. The payment of the price of a thing is held to be in place of a purchase [operates as a purchase].

Solutus /sal(y)uωδας/. In the civil law, loosed; freed from confinement; set at liberty.

Solvabilité /sołvabilité/. Fr. In French law, ability to pay; solvency.

Solvency. Ability to pay debts as they mature. Ability to pay debts in the usual and ordinary course of business. Jeck v. O'Meara, 343 Mo. 559, 122 S.W.2d 897, 903. Present ability of debtor to pay out of his estate all his debts. Excess of assets over liabilities. Akin v. Hull, 222 Mo.App. 1022, 9 S.W.2d 688, 690. Also such status of a person's property as that it may be reached and subjected by process of law, without his consent, to the payment of such debts. Graf v. Allen, 230 Mo.App. 721, 74 S.W.2d 61, 68. "Solvency" within Bankruptcy Act presupposes ability to make ultimate payment of obligations then owed from assets then owned. Mossier Acceptance Co. v. Martin, C.A.Fla., 322 F.2d 183, 186. The opposite of insolvency (q.v.). Kennedy v. Burr, 101 Wash. 61, 171 P.2d 1022, 1024.

Solvendo esse /solvendowy esiy/ Lat. To be in a state of solvency; i.e., able to pay.

Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui solidum potest solvere /solvendowy esiy nýwmo intálijdaw náyssay kwáy sóldáam pówdst sólvary/. No one is considered to be solvent unless he can pay all that he owes.

Solvendum in futuro /solvendawm in fyweytrów/ Lat. To be paid in the future. Used of an indebtedness which is said to be debitum in presenti (due now) and solvendum in futuro (payable in the future). An interest in an estate may be rested in presenti, though it be solvendum in futuro, enjoyable in the future.

Solvent. See Solveny.

For "solvent debt" and "solvent partner" see Debt and Partner.

Solvere /sólvari/. Lat. To pay; to comply with one's engagement; to do what one has undertaken to do; to release one's self from obligation, as by payment of a debt.

Solvit /sólvat/. Lat. He paid; paid.

Solvit ad diem /sólvdar æd dáyám/. He paid at the day. The technical name of the plea, in an action of debt on bond, that the defendant paid the money on the day mentioned in the condition.

Solvit ante diem /sólvdar ænityl dáyám/. A plea that the money was paid before the day appointed.

Solvit post diem /sólvat pówst dáyám/. He paid after the day. The plea in an action of debt on bond that the defendant paid the money after the day named for the payment, and before the commencement of the suit.

Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii /solviðdaw æð-framework eòyiwdámérdiy sówshiyay/. A partnership is moreover dissolved by the death of a partner.

Solvitur eo ligamine quo ligatur /solviððar iyow lagéymani kwów lagéydar/. In the same manner that a thing is bound it is unloosed.

Somersett’s Case. A celebrated decision of the English king's bench, in 1771 (20 How.St.Tr. 1), that slavery no longer existed in England in any form, and could not for the future exist on English soil, and that any person brought into England as a slave could not be thence removed except by the legal means applicable in the case of any free-born person.

Somnambulism /sómnambyalism/ Sleep-walking. Whether this condition is anything more than a cooperation of the voluntary muscles with the thoughts which occupy the mind during sleep is not settled by physiologists. Such condition may be a defense to a crime committed while in such state. Fain v. Com., 78 Ky. 183. See also Somnolentia.

Somnolentia /sómnaménsiyow/ A condition of incomplete sleep resembling in its effects drunkenness and in which part of the faculties are abnormally excited while the others are in repose. It destroys moral agency and is therefore a defense to a crime. Fain v. Com., 78 Ky. 183.

Somepfor /sómfor/ In ecclesiastical law, an officer of the ecclesiastical courts whose duty was to serve citations or process.

Son. Male offspring. An immediate male descendant. The word may be applied also to a distant male descendant. In a broad use, term may be employed as designating any young male person, as a pupil, a ward, an adopted male child or dependent. The word may be applied also to a distant male descendant. In a broad use, term may be employed as designating any young male person, as a pupil, a ward, an adopted male child or dependent. The description son in wills, means prima facie legitimate son. In re Flood's Estate, 217 Cal. 763, 21 F.2d 579.

Son /sówn/ Fr. His. Civ.Code La. art. 3556.

Son assault demesne. His own assault. A plea which occurs in the actions of trespass and trespass on the case, by which the defendant alleges that it was the plaintiff's own original assault that occasioned the trespass for which he has brought the action, and that what the defendant did was merely in his own defense.

Son-in-law. The husband of one's daughter. Diebold v. Diebold, 235 Mo.App. 83, 141 S.W.2d 119, 125.

Sonticus /sontikus/ Lat. In the civil law, hurtful; injurious; hindering; excusing or justifying delaying. Morus sonticus is any illness of so serious a nature as to prevent a defendant from appearing in court and to give him a valid excuse.

Soon. Within a reasonable time; as soon as practicable; as soon as; as soon as may be. Phrase "soon as practicable" means within a reasonable time. Miller v. Zurich General Acc. & Liability Ins. Co., 36 N.J. Super. 288, 115 A.2d 597, 600.

Soror /s6ror/. Lat. Sister.

Sororicide /s6r6risaide/ The killing or murder of a sister; one who murders his sister. This is not a technical term of the law.

Sors /s6rs/. Lat. In old English law, a principal lent on interest, as distinguished from the interest itself. A thing recovered in action, as distinguished from the costs of the action.

In the civil law, lot; chance; fortune; hazard; a lot, made of wood, gold, or other material. Money borrowed, or put out at interest. A principal sum or fund, such as the capital of a partnership.

Sortitio /sortlsh(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a drawing of lots. Sortitio judicum was the process of selecting a number of judges, for a criminal trial, by drawing lots.

Sound, v. To have reference or relation to; to aim at. An action is technically said to sound in tort or damages where it is brought not for the specific recovery of a thing, but for damages only. See Sounding in damages.

Sound, adj. Whole; in good condition; marketable. See Warranty.

Free from disease; healthy; physically and mentally fit. The term may also mean free from danger to the life, safety, and welfare.

Sound and disposing mind and memory. Testamentary capacity. Such mind and memory as enables testator to know and understand business in which he is engaged at time of making will. Farmers' Union Bank of Henning v. Johnson, 27 Tenn.App. 342, 181 S.W.2d 369, 374. See also Capacity, and Sound mind, infra.

Sound health. In insurance law, means that the applicant has no grave impairment or serious disease, and is free from any ailment that seriously affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system. A state of health unimpaired by any serious malady of which the person himself is conscious. National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Ware, 169 Okl. 618, 37 P.2d 905.

Sound judicial discretion. Discretion exercised on full and fair consideration of the facts presented to the judge by the well-known and established mode of procedure. Caldwell v. State, 164 Tenn. 325, 48 S.W.2d 1087, 1089. Discretion exercised not arbitrarily or willfully but with regard to what is right and equitable under the circumstances. Cornwell v. Cornwell, 73 App.D.C. 233, 118 F.2d 596, 598.

Sound mind. The normal condition of the human mind,—that state in which its faculties of perception and judgment are ordinarily well developed, and not impaired by mania, insanity, or other mental disorder. In the law of wills means that testator must have been able to understand and carry in mind, in a general way, nature and situation of his property, his relations to those having claim to his remembrance, and nature of his act. The "sound mind" necessary to execute a will means ability of testator to mentally understand in a general way nature and extent of property to be disposed of, and testator's relation to those who would naturally claim a substantial benefit from will, as well as general understanding of practical effect of himself as executed. Skelton v. Davis, Fla.App., 133 So.2d 432, 435. See also Capacity.

Sound value. As used with reference to value of property within fire policy is the cash value of property, making an allowance for depreciation due to use at and immediately preceding the time of the fire. Reliance Ins. Co. v. Bowen, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 597, 598.

Sounding in damages. When an action is brought, not for the recovery of lands, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real or mixed actions or the personal action of debt or detinue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc., the action is said to be "sounding in damages."

Soundness. General good health; freedom from any permanent disease or illness. See Sound.

Source. That from which any act, movement, information, or effect proceeds. A person or thing that originates, sets in motion, or is a primary agency in producing any course of action or result. An originator; creator; origin. A place where something is found or whence it is taken or derived. Jackson v. State Tax Comm., 40 N.M. 241, 58 P.2d 1167, 1171. The source of income. Place where, or circumstance from which, it is produced. Union Electric Co. v. Coale, 347 Mo. 175, 146 S.W.2d 631, 635.

Sources of the law. The origins from which particular positive laws derive their authority and coercive force. Such are constitutions, treaties, statutes, usages, and customs.

In another sense, the authoritative or reliable works, records, documents, edicts, etc., to which we are to look for an understanding of what constitutes the law. Such, for example, with reference to the Roman law, are the compilations of Justinian and the treatise of Gaius; and such, with reference to the common law, are especially the ancient reports and the works of such writers as Bracton, Littleton, Coke, Fleta, Blackstone, and others.

Sous /suw/. Fr. Under.

Sous seing privé /suw sëng privé/. Fr. In French law, under private signature; under the private signature of the parties. A contract or instrument thus signed is distinguished from an "authentic act," which is formally concluded before a notary or judge.
Sovereign. A person, body, or state in which independent and supreme authority is vested; a chief ruler with supreme power; a king or other ruler with limited power. See also Clipped sovereignty; Sovereignty.

Sovereign immunity. Doctrine precludes litigant from asserting an otherwise meritorious cause of action against a sovereign or a party with sovereign attributes unless sovereign consents to suit. Principe Compania Naviera, S. A. v. Board of Com’rs of Port of New Orleans, D.C.La., 333 F.Supp. 353, 355. Historically, the federal and state governments, and derivatively cities and towns, were immune from tort liability arising from activities which were governmental in nature. Most jurisdictions, however, have abandoned this doctrine in favor of permitting tort actions with certain limitations and restrictions. See Federal Tort Claims Act; Governmental Immunity; Tort Claims Acts.

Sovereign people. The political body, consisting of the entire number of citizens and qualified electors, who, in their collective capacity, possess the powers of sovereignty and exercise them through their chosen representatives. See Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 404, 15 L.Ed. 691.

Sovereign power or sovereign prerogative. That power in a state to which none other is superior or equal, and which includes all the specific powers necessary to accomplish the legitimate ends and purposes of government. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Bramwell, D.C.Or., 12 F.2d 307, 309.

Sovereign right. A right which the state alone, or some of its governmental agencies, can possess, and which it possesses in the character of a sovereign, for the common benefit, and to enable it to carry out its proper functions; distinguished from such “proprietary” rights as a state, like any private person, may have in property or demands which it owns.

Sovereign states. States whose subjects or citizens are in the habit of obedience to them, and which are not themselves subject to any other (or paramount) state in any respect. The state is said to be semi-sovereign only, and not sovereign, when in any respect or respects it is liable to be controlled (like certain of the states in India) by a paramount government (e.g., by the British empire). In the intercourse of nations, certain states have a position of entire independence of others, and can perform all those acts which it is possible for any state to perform in this particular sphere. These same states have also entire power of self-government; that is, of independence upon all other states as far as their own territory and citizens not living abroad are concerned. No foreign power or law can have control except by convention. This power of independent action in external and internal relations constitutes complete sovereignty.

Sovereignty. The supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable power by which any independent state is governed; supreme political authority; paramount control of the constitution and frame of government and its administration; the self-sufficient source of political power, from which all specific political powers are derived; the international independence of a state, combined with the right and power of regulating its internal affairs without foreign dictation; also a political society, or state, which is sovereign and independent.

The power to do everything in a state without accountability,—to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like.

Sovereignty in government is that public authority which directs or orders what is to be done by each member associated in relation to the end of the association. It is the supreme power by which any citizen is governed and is the person or body of persons in the state to whom there is politically no superior. The necessary existence of the state and that right and power which necessarily follow is “sovereignty.” By “sovereignty” in its largest sense is meant supreme, absolute, uncontrollable power, the absolute right to govern. The word which by itself comes nearest to being the definition of “sovereignty” is will or volition as applied to political affairs. City of Bilbee v. Cochise County, 52 Ariz. 1, 78 P.2d 982, 986.

Sowne. In old English law, to be leviable. An old exchequer term applied to sheriff’s returns.

S.P. Abbreviation of “sine prole,” without issue. Also an abbreviation of “same principle,” or “same point,” indicating, when inserted between two citations, that the second involves the same doctrine as the first.

Spadones /spadownyz/. Lat. In the civil law, impotent persons. Those who, on account of their temperament or some accident they have suffered, are unable to procreate.

Sparsim /sparysm/. Lat. Here and there; scattered; at intervals. For instance, trespass to realty by cutting timber sparsim (here and there) through a tract.

Spate placitum /speydiy playsadam/. In old English law, a court for the speedy execution of justice upon military delinquents.

Speaker. The official designation of the president or chairman of certain legislative bodies, particularly of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States, and of one or both branches of several of the state legislatures, i.e. Speaker of the House.

Speaking demurrer. A demurrer which introduces a new fact that does not appear from face of bill is a “speaking demurrer,” and cannot be sustained. Allpress v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 218 Tenn. 673, 405 S.W.2d 572, 573. A speaking demurrer is a special exception which, instead of limiting itself to the allegations of the petition and pointing out defects therein, states factual propositions not appearing in the petition and, in reliance upon such facts, seeks to challenge the plaintiff’s right to recovery. Ragsdale v. Ragsdale, Tex.Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 839, 842. See also Demurrer.

Speaking motion. A motion which requires consideration of matters outside the pleadings. Formerly, such motions were prohibited but under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b) such motions are now entertained.
Special. Relating to or designating a species, kind, individual, thing, or sort; designed for a particular purpose; confined to a particular purpose, object, person, or class. Unusual, extraordinary.

As to special Acceptance; Administration; Agent; Allocatur; Allowance; Appearance; Assessment; Assumpsit; Bail; Bailiff; Bastard; Benefit; Calendar; Charge; Constable; Contract; Count; Covenant; Customs; Damage; Demurrer; Deposit; Deputy; Election; Finding; Guaranty; Guardian; Impariment; Indorsement; Injunction; Insurance; Issue; Jury; Legacy; Letter of credit; License; Limitation; Malice; Master; Meeting; Mortgage; Motion; Non est factum; Occupant; Owner; Partner; Partnership; Plea; Pleader; Pleadings; Power; Privilege; Proceeding; Property; Replication; Request; Restraint of trade; Retainer; Rule; Service; Session; Statute; Stock; Tail; Term; Traverse; Trust; Verdict, and Warranty, see those titles.

Special act. A private statute; an act which operates only upon particular persons or private concerns. Unity v. Burrage, 103 U.S. 447, 454, 26 L.Ed. 405. See Special law.

Special district. A limited governmental structure created to bypass normal borrowing limitations, to insulate certain activities from traditional political influence, to allocate functions to entities reflecting particular expertise, to provide services in otherwise unincorporated areas, or to accomplish a primarily local benefit or improvement, e.g., parks and planning, mosquito control, sewage removal.

Special errors. In common law pleading, special pleas in error are such as, instead of joining in error, allege some extraneous matter as a ground of defeating the writ of error, e.g., a release of errors, expiration of the time within which error might be brought, or the like. To these, the plaintiff in error may either reply or demur.

Special exception. An objection to the form in which a cause of action is stated.

Special exception to municipal zoning ordinance refers to special uses which are permissive in particular zone under ordinance and are neither nonconforming uses nor akin to a variance and refers to special use which is considered by local legislative body to be essential or desirable for welfare of community and its citizenry and which is entirely appropriate and not essentially incompatible with basic uses in zone involved, but not at every or any location therein or without restriction or conditions being imposed on such use. Piscitelli v. Township Committee of Scotch Plains Tp., 103 N.J.Super. 589, 248 A.2d 274, 277. A special exception allows property owner to use his property as he sees fit, but when which regulations expressly permit under conditions specified in zoning regulations themselves. W A T R, Inc. v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Bethany, 158 Conn. 196, 257 A.2d 816, 821.

Special execution. A copy of a judgment with a direction to the sheriff indorsed thereon to execute it. One that directs a levy upon some special property.

Special executor. One whose power and office are limited, either in respect to the time or place of their exercise, or restricted to a particular portion of the decedent's estate. One only empowered by will to take charge of a limited portion of the estate, or such part as may lie in one place, or to carry on the administration only to a prescribed point.

Special facts rule. In corporation law, as respects director's duty of disclosure when dealing with stockholders, is that where special circumstances or facts are present which make it inequitable for the director to withhold information from the stockholder, the duty to disclose arises, and concealment is fraud. Taylor v. Wright, 69 Cal.App.2d 371, 159 P.2d 980, 985.

Special grand jury. A grand jury convened to hear a particular case or series of cases involving similar crimes. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3331 et seq.

Special interest groups. Groups in society that have a special interest in common. Special interest groups generally attempt to influence government legislation to benefit their own particular group interests. See Lobbying.

Special interrogatories. Written questions on one or more issues of fact submitted to a jury. The answers to these are necessary to a verdict. Fed.R.Civ.P. 49(b).

Specialist. Stock broker who remains at one post of exchange where particular stocks are dealt in and executes orders of other brokers, for which he receives commission; one who specializes in limited group of stocks.

Special jurisdiction. A court authorized to take cognizance of only some few kinds of causes or proceedings expressly designated by statute is called a court of special or limited jurisdiction. Power of a court over only a limited type of case (e.g. Probate court) or over only property and not the person or the defendant.

Special law. One relating to particular persons or things; one made for individual cases or for particular places or districts; one operating upon a selected class, rather than upon the public generally. A private law. A law is "special" when it is different from others of the same general kind or designed for a particular purpose, or limited in range or confined to a prescribed field of action or operation. A special law is one which relates to particular persons or things or to particular persons or things of a class, or which operates on or over a portion of a class instead of all of the class. Ulrich v. Beatty, 139 Ind.App. 174, 216 N.E.2d 737, 746. A special law applies only to an individual or a number of individuals out of a single class similarly situated and affected, or to a special locality. Board of County Com'rs of Lemhi County v. Swensen, Idaho, 80 Idaho 198, 327 P.2d 361, 362.

Special lien. A special lien is in the nature of a particular lien, being a lien upon particular property. A lien which the holder can enforce only as security for the performance of a particular act or obligation and of obligations incidental thereto.
Special matter. In common law pleading, under a plea of the general issue, the defendant is allowed to give special matter in evidence, usually after notice to the plaintiff of the nature of such matter, thus sparing him the necessity of pleading it specially. 3 Bl. Comm. 306.

Special permit. A special permit allows property owner to use his property in a way which the zoning regulations expressly permit under the conditions specified in the regulations themselves. Shell Oil Co. v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Bloomfield, 156 Conn. 66, 238 A.2d 426, 428. "Special permit" and "special exception" have the same meaning and can be used interchangeably. Beckish v. Planning and Zoning Comm. of Town of Columbia, 162 Conn. 11, 291 A.2d 208, 210.

Special registration. In election laws, registration for particular election only which does not entitle elector to vote at any succeeding election.

Special session. An extraordinary session. See Session.

Specialty. A contract under seal. Furst v. Brady, 375 Ill. 425, 31 N.E.2d 606, 609. A writing sealed and delivered, containing some agreement. A writing sealed and delivered, which is given as a security for the payment of a debt, in which such debt is particularly specified.

For assessment purposes, a "specialty" is a building or buildings, constructed or peculiarly adapted to conduct of owner's business, which cannot be converted to general industrial use without the loss or expenditure of very substantial amounts of money. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co., Inc. v. Kiernan, 49 A.D.2d 99, 371 N.Y.S.2d 173, 175.

Specialty debt. A debt due or acknowledged to be due by deed or instrument under seal. 2 Bl. Comm. 465.

Special use permit. Permitted exception to zoning ordinance; e.g. church, hospital, etc. Compare Variance.

Special use valuation. An option which permits the executor of an estate to value, for death tax purposes, real estate used in a farming activity or in connection with a closely-held business at its current use value rather than at its most suitable or highest and best use value. Under this option, a farm would be valued at its value for farming purposes even though, for example, the property might have a higher value as a potential shopping center. In order for the executor of an estate to elect special use valuation, the conditions of I.R.C. § 2032A must be satisfied.

Special warranty. A covenant of "special warranty" is one of the operation of which is limited to certain persons or claims. Central Life Assur. Soc. v. Impelman, 13 Wash.2d 632, 126 P.2d 757, 763. A "covenant to warrant" in the habendum clause is not a general but at most a "special warranty". New Orleans & N. E. R. R. v. Morrison, 203 Miss. 791, 35 So.2d 68, 70. See also Warranty.

Special warranty deed. A deed in which the grantor only covenants to warrant and defend the title against claims and demands of the grantor and all persons claiming by, through and under him. In some jurisdictions, such deed is called a quitclaim deed.

Specific. Precisely formulated or restricted; definite; explicit; of an exact or particular nature. People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 156 P.2d 7, 17. Having a certain form or designation; observing a certain form; particular; precise; tending to specify, or to make particular, definite, limited or precise.

As to specific Denial; Devise; Legacy, and Performance, see those titles.

Specifically. In a specific manner; explicitly, particularly, definitely.

Specificatio /spəsəfɪˈkeɪʃ(ə)ʊ/ Lat. In the civil law, literally, a making of form; a giving of form to materials. That mode of acquiring property through which a person, by transforming a thing belonging to another, especially by working up his materials into a new species, becomes proprietor of the same.

Specification. As used in the law relating to patents, manufacturing, and construction contracts, a particular or detailed statement, account, or listing of the various elements, materials, dimensions, etc. involved.

Law of personal property. The acquisition of title to a thing by working it into new forms or species from the raw material; corresponding to the specificatio of the Roman law. Right by "specification" can only be acquired when, without the accession of any other material that of another person, which has been used by the operator innocently, has been converted by him into something specifically different in the inherent and characteristic qualities, which identify it. Such is the conversion of corn into meal, of grapes into wine, etc. Bozeman Mortuary Ass'n v. Fairchild, 253 Ky. 74, 68 S.W.2d 756.

Practice. A detailed and particular enumeration of several points or matters urged or relied on by a party to a suit or proceeding; as, a "specification of errors," or a "specification of grounds of opposition to a bankrupt's discharge."

Specific bequest. A testamentary gift of specific personal property; e.g. "my old rocking chair". A specific bequest is a gift by will of a specific article or part of testator's estate, which is identified and distin-
Speculation. Buying or selling with expectation of profit by a rise or fall in price. Also, engaging in hazardous business transactions, or investing in risky securities or commodities, with the hope of an unexpired profit. Such method utilizes a machine known as a "spectrograph" which separates the sound of human voices into three component elements of time, frequency, and intensity. Using a series of lines or bars, the machine plots the variables across electronically sensitive paper and the result is a "spectrogram" of the acoustical signal of the speaker, with the horizontal axis representing the time lapse, the vertical axis indicating frequency, and the thickness of the lines disclosing the intensity of the voice. People v. Kelly, 17 Cal.3d 24, 130 Cal.Rptr. 144, 147, 549 P.2d 1240. An increasing number of courts are permitting the admissibility of spectrograph results into evidence. United States v. Bailer, C.A.W.Va., 519 F.2d 463; United States v. Williams, D.C.N.Y., 357 F.Supp. 172, 175. See also Voice exemplars.

Speech. Freedom of speech is right guaranteed by First Amendment, U.S.Const. See also Commercial speech doctrine; Freedom of speech; Liberty; Symbolic speech.

Speculum /spekyalam/. Lat. Mirror or lookingglass. The title of several of the most ancient lawbooks or compilations. One of the ancient Icelandic books is styled "Speculum Regale."

Speed. See Amphetamine; Methamphetamine.

Speedy execution. An execution which, by the direction of the judge at nisi prius, issues forthwith, or on some early day fixed upon by the judge for that purpose after the trial of the action.

Speedy remedy. One which, having in mind the subject-matter involved, can be pursued with expedition and without essential detriment to the party aggrieved; e.g. Restraining order.

Speedy trial. The right of the accused to a speedy trial is guaranteed by the 6th Amendment of the Constitution and such right is implemented by 18 U.S.C.A. § 3161 et seq. and Fed.R.Crim.P. 50. Barker v. Winlow, 407 U.S. 514, 92 S.Ct. 2182, 33 L.Ed.2d 101, lists four factors to be considered in determining whether delay was unreasonable: (1) Length of delay; (2) the government's justification for the delay; (3) whether and how the defendant asserted his right to a speedy trial; and (4) prejudice caused by the delay, such as lengthened pretrial incarceration. A trial as soon after indictment as prosecution can with reasonable diligence prepare for it. People v. Molinari, 23 Cal. App.2d Supp. 761, 67 P.2d 767, 770. Trial, had as soon as prosecution, with reasonable diligence, can prepare for it; a trial according to fixed rules, free from capricious and oppressive delays, but the time within which it must be had to satisfy the guaranty depends on the circumstances. Bryant v. State, 4 Md.App. 572, 244 A.2d 446, 448. See Speedy Trial Act.

Speech or debate clause. Art. 1, § 6, cl. 1 of U.S. Constitution grants congressmen immunity "for any speech or debate in either House." The courts have extended this privilege to matters beyond pure speech and debate in either House, but only when necessary to prevent indirect impairment of such deliberations. Gravel v. U. S., 408 U.S. 606, 92 S.Ct. 2614, 33 L.Ed.2d 583. See also Legislative immunity.

Speedy Trial Act. Federal Act of 1974 establishing a set of time limits for carrying out the major events (e.g. information, indictment, arraignment) in the prosecution of federal criminal cases. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3161 et seq.

In any case involving a defendant charged with an offense, the appropriate judicial officer, at the earliest practicable time, shall, after consultation with the counsel for the defendant and the attorney for the Government, set the case for trial on a day certain, or list it for trial on a weekly or other short-term trial calendar at a place within the judicial district, so as to assure a speedy trial. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3161(a).

Spend. To consume by using in any manner; to use up, to exhaust, distribute, as to expend money or any other possession.

Spendthrift. One who spends money profusely and improvidently; a prodigal; one who lavishes or wastes his estate. See also Guardianship; Trust; Trustee.
SPENDTHRIFT TRUST

Spendthrift trust. A trust created to provide a fund for the maintenance of a beneficiary, and at the same time to secure it against his improvidence or incapacity. In re Nicholson's Estate, 104 Colo. 561, 93 P.2d 880, 883. One which provides a fund for benefit of another than settlor, secures it against beneficiary's own improvidence, and places it beyond his creditors' reach. A trust set up to protect a beneficiary from spending all of the money that he is entitled to. Only a certain portion of the total amount is given to him at any one time. Most states permit spendthrift trust provisions that prohibit creditors from attaching a spendthrift trust.

Sperate. That of which there is hope. Thus a debt which one may hope to recover may be called "perate," in opposition to "desperate."

Spes accrescendi /spiyz ækræsɛnədi/. Lat. Hope of surviving.

Spes est vigilants somnium /spiyz èst vijalænts sömn(ɪ)əm/. Hope is the dream of the vigilant.

Spes Impunitatis continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi /spiyz impywûnwætɛdæz kantɪnjuwam æfɛktəm tɹɪb-yuwaṭ dɛliŋkwɛnday/. The hope of impunity holds out a continual temptation to crime.

Spes recuperandi /spiyz rek(y)ʊwerkaɾɛnday/. Lat. The hope of recovery or recapture; the chance of retaking property captured at sea, which prevents the captors from acquiring complete ownership of the property until they have definitely precluded it by effectual measures.

Spigurnel /spɪɡɜrnəl/. The sealer of the royal writs.

Spin-off. A spin-off exists when a parent corporation organizes a subsidiary, to which is transferred part of parent's assets in exchange for all of capital stock of subsidiary and stock of subsidiary is transferred to parent's shareholders without surrender of their stock in parent, and if distribution of stock to parent's shareholders constitutes a dividend, then it is a taxable one. Holz v. U. S., D.C.Minn., 176 F.Supp. 330, 336. Spin-off occurs where part of assets of corporation is transferred to a new corporation and stock of transferee is distributed to shareholders of transferor without surrender of their stock in transferor. C. I. R. v. Baan, C.A.Cal., 382 F.2d 485, 491. See also Split-off; Split-up.

Spinster. A woman who never has been married.

Spiritual. Relating to religious or ecclesiastical persons or affairs, as distinguished from "secular" or lay, worldly, or business matters.

As to spiritual Corporation; Courts, and Lords, see those titles.

Spital, or spittle /spɪtal/. A charitable foundation; a hospital for diseased people; a hospital.

Spite fence. A fence of no beneficial use to person erecting and maintaining it on his land and maintained solely for purpose of annoying owner of adjoining land. Burris v. Creech, 220 N.C. 302, 17 S.E.2d 123. A high and unsightly fence erected to annoy a neighbor or adjoining landowner by obstructing his air, light or view.

Split gift. See Gift.

Split Income. Congress, in 1948, enacted new joint tax return legislation and a new set of rates to remove the considerable disparity between tax treatment of married couples in community property and common-law states, and thereby to remove the considerable pressure on the common-law states to adopt community-property systems. By law enacted that year, married couples in all states were given the privilege to split their income, that is to have it taxed on a joint return at a rate equal to that which would apply if each had earned one-half the amount and were taxed on a separate return. In 1969, however, Congress retained but reduced the disparity between rates imposed on single persons and married couples with the same incomes. This reduction took the form of a new and lower rate schedule for single persons, which took effect beginning in 1971. See I.R.C. § 1(c). See also Gift splitting.

Split-off. When a corporation sets up and funds a new corporation and gives the shares of this new corporation to the old corporation's stockholders in exchange for some of their shares in the old company, this new company is a "split-off" and the process is a split-off. A type of reorganization whereby, for example, A Corporation transfers assets to B Corporation in exchange for enough B stock to represent control. A Corporation then distributes the B stock to its shareholders in exchange for some of their A stock. See also Spin-off; Split-up.

Split order. An order to a broker directing him to buy or sell some stock at one price and some at another.

Split sentence. One where penalty of fine and imprisonment, as provided by statute, is imposed and imprisonment part is suspended and fine part enforced. It is also exemplified in a sentence by which the defendant serves some time and the balance of the sentence is suspended.

There is no "splitting of causes" where demand which is subject of second action was not due at time of the first action. Glavich v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 44 Cal.App.2d 517, 112 P.2d 774, 778. The rule against "splitting causes of action" does not mean that plaintiff cannot sue for less than his due but means merely that if he does so he may be precluded from maintaining another action for the remainder of the same demand. Scientific & Hospital Supply Corporation v. Board of Education of City of New York, 172 Misc. 770, 16 N.Y. S.2d 91, 93.

Split-up. When a corporation divides into two or more separate new corporations, gives its shareholders the shares of these new corporations, and goes out of business, this process is termed a "split-up." A type of reorganization whereby, for example, A Corporation transfers some assets to B Corporation and the remainder to Z Corporation in return for which it receives enough B and Z stock to represent control of each corporation. The B and Z stock is then distributed by A Corporation to its shareholders in return for all of their A stock. The result of the split-up is that A Corporation is liquidated and its shareholders now have control of B and Z Corporations.

Spolium /spōwliyēyshan/. The destruction of evidence. It constitutes an obstruction of justice. The destruction, or the significant and meaningful alteration of a document or instrument. Application of Bodkin, D.C.N.Y., 165 F.Supp. 25, 30.

Any change made on a written instrument by a person not a party to the instrument. Such a change will have no effect, provided that the original tenor of the instrument can still be ascertained.

Spoliator /spōwliyēydar/. Lat. A spoiler or destroyer. It is a maxim of law, bearing chiefly on evidence, but also upon the value generally of the thing destroyed, that everything most to his disadvantage is to be presumed against the destroyer (spoliator), contra spoliatorem omnia presumuntur.

Spolitus debet ante omnia restitutum /spōwliyēydar dēbīd āntiīōūn(l)īyā rūstītyuway/ . A party despoiled [forcibly deprived of possession] ought first of all to be restored.

Spolitus episcopus ante omnia debet restitutum /spōwliyēydas āpiskapos āntiīōūn(l)īyā dēbīt rūstītyuway/. A bishop despoiled of his see ought, above all, to be restored.

Spolium /spōwliyam/. Lat. In the civil and common law, a thing violently or unlawfully taken from another.

Spondeo /spōndiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, an engagement or undertaking; particularly such as was made in the form of an answer to a formal interrogatory by the other party. An engagement to pay a certain sum of money to the successful party in a cause.
In commodity trading and foreign exchange, Spot trading, Cash sales for immediate delivery in contrast to trading in futures.

Spot zoning. Granting of a zoning classification to a piece of land that differs from that of the other land in the immediate area. Term refers to zoning which singles out an area for treatment different from that of similar surrounding land and which cannot be justified on the bases of health, safety, morals or general welfare of the community and which is not in accordance with a comprehensive plan. Schadlick v. City of Concord, 108 N.H. 319, 234 A.2d 523, 526.

Spousals /spɔːwzəlz/. In old English law, mutual promises to marry.

Spouse. One's wife or husband.

Spouse-breach. In old English law, adultery.

Spread. In general, a difference between two amounts. In stock and commodity trading, the difference between the bid and asked price. In arbitrage (q.v.), the difference between two markets in the price or value of a currency.

Spring-branch. A branch of a stream, flowing from a spring.

Springing use. See Use.

Sprinkling trust. See Trust.

Spurious. False, counterfeit, not genuine.

Spurious bank-bill. A bill which may be a legitimate impression from the genuine plate, but it must have the signatures of persons not the officers of the bank whence it purports to have issued, or else the names of fictitious persons. It may also be an illegitimate impression from a genuine plate, or an impression from a counterfeit plate, but it must have such signatures or names as indicated. A bill, therefore, may be both counterfeit and forged, or both counterfeit and spurious, but it cannot be both forged and spurious.

Spurious class action. A spurious class action within the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is merely a permissive joinder device where there is a common question of law or fact and common relief is sought, involves separate causes of action, is a matter of efficiency to avoid multiplicity of actions, and each plaintiff must be able to avoid bar of statute of limitations without reference to the other causes of action. Athas v. Day, D.C.Colo., 161 F.Supp. 916, 919. One in which interests of members of class are several and not interdependent, and where joinder is a matter of efficiency to avoid multiplicity of suits. Slack v. Stiner, C.A.Tex., 358 F.2d 65, 69. See also Class or representative action.

Spurious /spjʊə(r)iˈəʊs/ /spər/. Lat. In the civil law, a bastard; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation.

Spy. A person sent into an enemy's camp to inspect their works, ascertain their strength and their intentions, watch their movements, and secretly communicate intelligence to the proper officer. By the laws of war among all civilized nations, a spy is punished with death. Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 2, 44, 18 L.Ed. 281 (argument of counsel). Gathering, transmitting, or losing defense information with intent or reason to believe such information will be used to the injury of the United States is a federal crime. 18 U.S.C.A. § 793 et seq. See Espionage.

To watch or listen to secretly. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Square. As used to designate a certain portion of land within the limits of a city or town, this term may be synonymous with "block," that is, the smallest subdivision which is bounded on all sides by principal streets, or it may denote a space (more or less rectangular) not built upon, and set apart for public passage, use, recreation, or ornamentation, in the nature of a "park" but smaller.

Under government survey system, an area measuring 24 X 24 miles.

Just; settled; fair.

Public square. In its popular import, the phrase refers to ground occupied by a courthouse and other public buildings, normally at a point where two streets meet, but it may be used as synonymous with park.

Squatter. One who settles on another's land, without legal title or authority. A person entering upon lands, not claiming in good faith the right to do so by virtue of any title of his own or by virtue of some agreement with another whom he believes to hold the title. Under former laws, one who settled on public land in order to acquire title to the land.

Squatter's right. See Adverse possession.

Squeeze-out. A merger effected for no valid business purpose and resulting in the elimination of a minority shareholder is commonly referred to as a "freeze-out" or a "squeeze-out". It may be defined as the use of corporate control vested in the statutory majority of shareholders or the board of directors to eliminate minority shareholders from the enterprise or to reduce to relevant insignificance their voting power or claims on corporate assets. Furthermore, it implies a purpose to force upon the minority shareholder a change which is not incident to any other business goal of the corporation. Gabhart v. Gabhart, Ind., 370 N.E.2d 345, 353.

Squire. A contraction of "esquire."

SS. An abbreviation used in that part of a record, pleading, or affidavit, called the "statement of the venue." Commonly translated or read, "to-wit," and supposed to be a contraction of "sic ille et." See also S.S.A.

S.S.A. Social Security Administration.

S.S.I. Supplemental Security Income.

S.S.S. Selective Service System.

Stabilia /stəˈblaɪə/. A writ called by that name, founded on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ.

Stabilize. To keep steady, fixed, as distinguished from fluctuating, shifting. McCanless v. Klein, 182 Tenn. 631, 188 S.W.2d 745, 748.

Stabilis presumptio donee probetur In contrarium /steyy(y)er(i)yas/
A presumption will stand good till the contrary is proved.

Stable-stand. In forest law, one of the four evidences or presumptions whereby a man was convicted of an intent to steal the king's deer in the forest. This was when a man was found at his standing in the forest with a cross-bow or long-bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash, ready to slip.

Staglarius /stol6r(i)yas/. In Saxon law, the Stake. A deposit made to answer an event, as on a wager. Something deposited by two persons with the third on condition that it is to be delivered to the one who shall become entitled to it by the happening of a specified contingency. See also Stakeholder.

A boundary marker used for land survey purposes.

Stakeholder. Generally, a stakeholder is a third party chosen by two or more persons to keep on deposit property or money the right or possession of which is contested between them, and to be delivered to one who shall establish his right to it; and it is one who is entitled to interplead rival or contesting claimants to property or funds in his hands. Cochran v. Bank of Hancock County, 118 Ga.App. 100, 162 S.E.2d 765, 770. A person who is or may be exposed to multiple liability as the result of adverse claims. A stakeholder may commence an action of interpleader against two or more claimants. New York C.P.L.R. § 1006. See also Interpleader.

A person with whom money is deposited pending the decision of a bet or wager (q.v.). His function is to receive the sums wagered and hold them against the determining event, whether that event be a horse race or otherwise, and then pay them over to the winner. Also a third person chosen by two or more persons to keep in deposit property the right or possession of which is contested between them, and to be delivered to the one who shall establish his right to it. State v. Dudley, 127 N.J.L. 127, 21 A.2d 209, 210.

Staking. Identification of boundaries of parcel of land by placing stakes in ground at boundary points.

Stale, n. In Saxon law, larceny.

Stale check. A check which bears a date of issue very much earlier than the date of its presentation or negotiation. A check which has been outstanding too long.

Stale demand, or claim. A demand or claim that has long remained unasserted, one that is first asserted after an unexplained delay which is so long as to render it difficult or impossible for the court to ascertain the truth of the matters in controversy and do justice between the parties, or as to create a presumption against the existence or validity of the claim, or a presumption that the claim has been abandoned or satisfied. Luschen v. Stanton, 192 Okt. 454, 137 P.2d 567, 572. It implies a greater lapse of time than is necessary to "laches." Bell v. Mackey, 191 S.C. 105, 3 S.E.2d 816, 824, 830. The doctrine is purely equitable one, and arises only when, from lapse of time and laches of plaintiff, it would be inequitable to allow a party to enforce his legal rights. Wood v. City Board of Plumbing Examiners, 192 Ga. 415, 15 S.E.2d 486, 488.

Stallage /stolaj/. In old English law, the liberty of right of pitching or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same.

Stallarius /stol6r(i)yas/. In Saxon law, the prefectus stabuli, now master of the horse. Sometimes one who has a stall in a fair or market.

Stamp. Stamped or printed paper affixed to official or legal documents, stock certificates, etc. as evidence that tax has been paid as required by law. A small label or strip of paper, printed and sold by the government, and required to be attached to mail-matter, and to certain other documents and articles (e.g. liquor, cigarettes) subject to duty or excise. See Documentary stamp; Revenue stamps; Stamp tax.

A mark, design, seal, etc., which indicates ownership, approval, etc. An identifying or characterizing mark or impression.

Stamp acts. In English law, acts regulating the stamps upon deeds, contracts, agreements, papers in law proceedings, bills and notes, letters, receipts, and other papers. English Act of 1765 requiring that revenue stamps be affixed to all official documents in American colonies.

Stamp duties. In old English law, duties imposed upon and raised from stamps upon parchment and paper, and forming a branch of the perpetual revenue of the kingdom. 1 Bl.Comm. 323. See also Documentary stamp; Revenue stamps; Stamp tax.

Stamp tax. The cost of stamps which are required to be affixed to legal documents such as deeds, certificates, and the like. See Documentary stamp; Revenue stamp; Stamp.

Stand. To remain as a thing is; to remain stationary or inactive. Jaggers v. Southeastern Greyhound Lines, D.C.Tenn., 34 F.Supp. 667, 668.

To abide; to submit to; as "to stand a trial." To appear in court.

To remain as a thing is; to remain in force. Pleadings objected to and held good are allowed to stand.

Standard. Stability, general recognition, and conformity to established practice. Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Standard Surety & Casualty Co., D.C.N.Y., 53 F.2d 118, 120. A type, model, or combination of elements accepted as correct or perfect. A measure or rule applicable in legal cases such as the "standard of care" in tort actions. Double standard; Reasonable man doctrine or standard; Standard of care.

An ensign or flag used in war.

Standard deduction. A fixed deduction from taxable income used by a taxpayer who does not wish to itemize his deductions. I.R.C. §§ 141-145. Also referred to as the zero bracket amount. The standard deduction is built into the rate tables and rate schedules. Therefore, if an individual itemizes his or her deductions, only the amounts in excess of the standard deduction are deducted.

Standard mortgage clause. In fire policy, clause providing that in case of loss policy shall be payable to mortgagee, and that his interest as payee shall not be invalidated by act of mortgagor. Rhode Island Ins. Co. v. Wurtman, 265 Ky. 835, 98 S.W.2d 29, 31.

Standard of care. In law of negligence, that degree of care which a reasonably prudent person should exercise under same or similar circumstances. If a person's conduct falls below such standard, he may be liable in damages for injuries or damages resulting from his conduct. See Negligence; Reasonable man doctrine or standard.

In medical, legal, etc., malpractice cases a standard of care is applied to measure the competence of the professional. The traditional standard for doctors is that he exercise the "average degree of skill, care, and diligence exercised by members of the same profession, practicing in the same or a similar locality in light of the present state of medical and surgical science." Gillette v. Tucker, 67 Ohio St. 106, 65 N.E. 865. With increased specialization, however, certain courts have disregarded geographical considerations holding that in the practice of a board-certified medical or surgical specialty, the standard should be that of a reasonable specialist practicing medicine or surgery in the same special field. Bruni v. Tatsumi, 46 Ohio St.2d 127, 129, 346 N.E.2d 673, 676, 75 O.O.2d 184. See also Malpractice.

Standard of need. In public assistance law, total needs of an individual or family in need for public assistance purposes.

Standard of proof. The burden of proof required in a particular type of case, as in a criminal case where the prosecution has the standard (i.e. burden) of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and in most civil cases where proof by a fair preponderance of the evidence is required. See Burden of proof.

Standard of weight, or measure. A weight or measure fixed and prescribed by law, to which all other weights and measures are required to correspond.

Standing. One's place in the community in the estimation of others; his relative position in social, commercial, or moral relations; his repute, grade, or rank.

See Reputation; Standing to sue doctrine; Status.

Standing aside jurors. A practice by which, on the drawing of a jury for a criminal trial, the prosecuting officer puts aside a juror, provisionally, until the panel is exhausted, without disclosing his reasons, instead of being required to challenge him and show cause. The English statute 33 Edw. I deprived the crown of the power to challenge jurors without showing cause, and the practice of standing aside jurors was adopted, in England, as a method of evading its provisions. A similar practice was in use in Pennsylvania.

Standing by. Used in law as implying knowledge, under such circumstances as rendered it the duty of the possessor to communicate it; and it is such knowledge, and not the mere fact of "standing by," that lays the foundation of responsibility. The phrase does not import an actual presence, "but implies knowledge under such circumstances as to render it the duty of the possessor to communicate it." See also Estoppel.

Standing master. An officer of the court appointed on a regular basis to hear and determine matters within his jurisdiction for which a master may be appointed, as a master in chancery.

Standing mute. Exists in criminal case when defendant refuses to plead to the charge against him. If a defendant refuses to plead, the court shall enter a plea of not guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a).

Standing orders. Rules adopted by particular courts for governing practice before them. In some states, the presiding judge has authority to adopt standing orders for his court alone. They may include rules as to the time at which court commences each day, a procedure for requesting continuances of cases and a method by which cases are placed on the trial list of the particular court. They may be system wide or affect only a particular court in the system.

Standing seised to uses. A covenant to stand seised to use is one by which the owner of an estate covenants to hold the same to the use of another person, usually a relative, and usually in consideration of blood or marriage. It is a species of conveyance depending for its effect on the statute of uses.

Standing to be sued. Capacity of a person or sovereign to be a party defendant in an action. A state as sovereign has no capacity to be sued except in cases in which it has consented to suit. See Sovereign immunity.

Standing to sue doctrine. "Standing to sue" means that party has sufficient stake in an otherwise justiciable controversy to obtain judicial resolution of that controversy. Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 1364, 31 L.Ed.2d 636. Standing is a concept utilized to determine if a party is sufficiently affected so as to insure that a justiciable controversy is presented to the court. The requirement of "standing" is satisfied if it can be said that the plaintiff has a legally protectible and tangible interest at stake in the litigation. Guidry v. Roberts, La.App., 331 So.2d 44, 50. Standing is a jurisdictional issue which concerns power of federal courts to hear and decide cases and does not concern ultimate merits of substantive claims involved in the action. Weiner v. Bank of King of Prussia, D.C.Pa., 358 F.Supp. 684, 695.

Standing is a requirement that the plaintiffs have been injured or been threatened with injury by governmental action complained of, and focuses on the question of whether the litigant is the proper party to fight the lawsuit, not whether the issue itself is justiciable. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc. v. U. S. Atomic Energy Comm., D.C.N.C., 431 F.Supp. 203, 218. Essence of standing is that no person is entitled to assail the constitutionality of an ordinance or statute except as he himself is adversely affected by it. Sandoval v. Ryan, Colo.App., 535 P.2d 244, 247. See also Case (Cases and controversies); Justiciable controversy; Ripeness doctrine.

Administrative Procedure Act. Such Act authorizes actions against federal officers by "any person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute." 5 U.S.C.A. § 702.

Staple. A major commodity grown, traded and demanded; e.g. grain, salt, flour. Such commodity is usually very important to the local economy where it is grown or produced. Raw material.

In English law, a mart or market. A place where the buying and selling of wool, lead, leather, and other articles were put under certain terms.

In International law, the right of staple, as exercised by a people upon foreign merchants, is defined to be that they may not allow them to set their merchandise and wares to sale but in a certain place. This practice is not in use in the United States.

Law of the staple. In England, law administered in the court of the mayor of the staple; the law-merchant.

Staple inn. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

Statute staple. The English statute of the staple, 27 Ed. III, stat. 2, confined the sale of all commodities to be exported to certain towns in England, called estape or staple, where foreigners might resort. It authorized a security for money, commonly called statute staple, to be taken by traders for the benefit of commerce; the mayor of the place is entitled to take recognizance of a debt in proper form, which had the effect to convey the lands of the debtor to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them he should be satisfied. A security for a debt acknowledged to be due, so called from its being entered into before the mayor of the staple, that is to say, the grand mart for the principal commodities or manufactures of the kingdom, formerly held by act of parliament in certain trading towns. In other respects it resembled the statute-merchant (q.v.), but like that has now fallen into disuse.

Starboard. In maritime law, the righthand side of a vessel when the observer faces forward. "Starboard tack," refers to the course of vessel when she has the wind on her starboard bow.

Star-chamber. A court which originally had jurisdiction in cases where the ordinary course of justice was so much obstructed by one party, through writs, combination of maintenance, or overawing influence that no inferior court would find its process obeyed. The court consisted of the privy council, the common-law judges, and (it seems) all peers of parliament. In the reign of Henry VIII and his successors, the jurisdiction of the court was illegally extended to such a degree (especially in punishing disobedience to the king's arbitrary proclamations) that it became odious to the nation, and was abolished.
Stash. To secrete away; to hide or conceal money or property, commonly used in reference to ill-gotten gain or property.

State, n. A people permanently occupying a fixed territory bound together by common-law habits and custom into one body politic exercising, through the medium of an organized government, independent sovereignty and control over all persons and things within its boundaries, capable of making war and peace and of entering into international relations with other communities of the globe. United States v. Kusche, D.C.Cal., 56 F.Supp. 201, 207, 208. The organization of social life which exercises sovereign power in behalf of the people. Delany v. Moraitis, C.C.A.Md., 138 F.2d 129, 130. In its largest sense, a "state" is a body politic or a society of men. Beagle v. Motor Vehicle Acc. Indemnification Corp., 44 Misc.2d 636, 254 N.Y.S.2d 763, 765. A body of people occupying a definite territory and politically organized under one government. State ex rel. Maisano v. Mitchell, 155 Conn. 256, 231 A.2d 539, 542. A territorial unit with a distinct general body of law. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 3. Term may refer either to body politic of a nation (e.g. United States) or to an individual governmental unit of such nation (e.g. California).

The section of territory occupied by one of the United States. One of the component commonwealths or states of the United States of America. The term is sometimes applied also to governmental agencies authorized by state, such as municipal corporations. Any state of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession subject to the legislative authority of the United States. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(40).

The people of a state, in their collective capacity, considered as the party wronged by a criminal deed; the public; as in the title of a cause, "The State vs. A. B."

Term "state" as used in rules providing when a state may appeal in a criminal case is all inclusive and intended to include not only the state but its political subdivisions, counties and cities. Spokane County v. Gifford, 9 Wash.App. 541, 513 P.2d 301, 302. Federal Government is a "state" bound by all of provisions of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers. Enright v. U. S., D.C.I11., 414 F.Supp. 52, 54. See Color of law.

The circumstances or condition of a being or thing at a given time. Foreign state. A foreign country or nation. The several United States are considered "foreign" to each other except as regards their relations as common members of the Union.

State officers. Those whose duties concern the state at large or the general public, or who are authorized to exercise their official functions throughout the entire state, without limitation to any political subdivision of the state. In another sense, officers belonging to or exercising authority under one of the states of the Union, as distinguished from the officers of the United States.

State offices. See Office.

State paper. A document prepared by, or relating to, the political department of the government of a state or nation, and concerning or affecting the administration of its government or its political or international relations. Also, a newspaper, designated by public authority, as the organ for the publication of public statutes, resolutions, notices, and advertisements.

State revenue. Current income of state from whatever source derived that is subject to appropriation for public uses.

State's evidence. See that title.

State tax. A tax the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the expenses of the state, as distinguished from taxation for federal, local or municipal purposes; e.g. state income or sales tax.

State, v. To express the particulars of a thing in writing or in words; to set down or set forth in detail; to aver, allege, or declare. To set down in gross; to mention in general terms, or by way of reference; to refer.

State action. In general, term used in connection with claims under due process clause and Civil Rights Act for which a private citizen is seeking damages or redress because of improper governmental intrusion into his life. In determining whether an action complained of constitutes "state action" within purview of Fourteenth Amendment, court must examine whether sufficiently close nexus exists between state and challenged action so that the action may fairly be treated as that of the state itself. Denver Welfare Rights Organization v. Public Utilities Comm., Colo., 547 P.2d 239, 243. There is no practical distinction between what constitutes "state action" for purposes of Fourteenth Amendment and what is required to fulfill "under color of state law" provision of Civil Rights Act of 1871. Weiss v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc., D.C.III., 414 F.Supp. 52, 54. See Color of law.

State auditor. The elected or appointed official in a state who is responsible for auditing the accounts of state agencies.

State banks. Those banks chartered by a state in contrast to federally chartered banks. Banks under the supervision and jurisdiction of state agencies. See also Bank.

State courts. Those courts which constitute the state judicial system in contrast to federal courts. City and county courts may or may not be part of the state system of courts, depending upon the jurisdiction.

Stated. Determined, fixed, or settled.

Stated meeting. A meeting of a board of directors, board of officers, etc., held at the time appointed therefor by law, ordinance, by-law, or other regulation; as distinguished from "special" meetings, which are held on call as the occasion may arise, rather than at a regularly appointed time, and from adjourned meetings.

Stated term. A regular or ordinary term or session of a court for the dispatch of its general business, held at the time fixed by law or rule; as distinguished from a special term, held out of the due order or for the transaction of particular business.
Stated times. Occurring at regular intervals or given regularly; fixed, regular in operation or occurrence, not occasional or fluctuating.

Stated account. Term signifies an agreed balance between the parties to a settlement; that is, that they have agreed after an investigation of their accounts that a certain balance is due from one to the other. Holt v. Western Farm Services, Inc., 19 Ariz.App. 335, 507 P.2d 674, 677.

Stated capital. Amount of capital contributed by stockholders. Sometimes used to mean legal capital.

The capital or equity of a corporation as it appears in the balance sheet. The sum of the par value of all par value shares issued, the entire amount received for no-par shares, and any amounts transferred by a stock dividend or other corporate action from surplus to stated capital. In some jurisdictions, only a portion of the amount received for no-par shares need be included in stated capital and the remainder may be credited to paid-in surplus and be distributed as a dividend.

State Department. That department in the executive branch of the federal government, headed by the Secretary of State, which is principally responsible for foreign affairs and foreign trade. The Department determines and analyzes the facts relating to our overseas interests, makes recommendations on policy and future action, and takes the necessary steps to carry out established policy. In so doing, the Department engages in continuous consultations with other states; negotiates treaties and agreements with foreign nations; speaks for the United States in the United Nations and in numerous major international organizations in which the United States participates; and represents the United States at numerous international conferences annually.

Statement. In a general sense, an allegation; a declaration of matters of fact. The term has come to be used of a variety of formal narratives of facts, required by law in various jurisdictions as the foundation of judicial or official proceedings and in a limited sense is a formal, exact, detailed presentation.

An oral or written assertion, or nonverbal conduct of a person, if it is intended by him as an assertion. Fed.R.Evid. 801(a). Oral or written verbal expression, or nonverbal conduct of a person intended by him as a substitute for oral or written verbal expression. Calif.Evid.Code.

Report sent monthly or periodically by a bank to its customer or by a creditor to a debtor, setting forth amounts credited and balance due. See Statement of account.

For False and misleading statement; and, Opening statement of counsel, see those titles.

Statement of account. A report issued monthly or periodically by a bank or creditor to a customer setting forth the amounts billed, credits given and balance due. A bank statement includes the checks drawn and cleared, the deposits made, and the charges debited.

Statement of affairs. Document which must be filed in bankruptcy, setting forth answers to questions about the past and present financial situation of the debtor. A balance sheet showing immediate liquidation amounts, rather than historical costs, usually prepared when insolvency or bankruptcy is imminent.

Statement of claim. See Claim; Complaint.

Statement of condition. A balance sheet which shows the assets, liabilities, reserves and capital of a business as of a given date. See also Statement of affairs.

Statement of confession. Oftentimes referred to as a “power of attorney”, “cognovit note”, or “confession of judgment”, is written authority of debtor and his direction to enter judgment against debtor as stated therein. See Confession of judgment.

Statement of defense. See Answer; Reply.

Statement of income. See Income statement.

Statement of particulars. See Bill.

State of facts. Formerly, when a master in chancery was directed by the court of chancery to make an inquiry or investigation into any matter arising out of a suit, and which could not conveniently be brought before the court itself, each party in the suit carried in before the master a statement showing how the party bringing it in represented the matter in question to be; and this statement was technically termed a “state of facts,” and formed the ground upon which the evidence was received, the evidence being, in fact, brought by one party or the other, to prove his own or disprove his opponent’s state of facts. And so now, a state of facts means the statement made by any one of his version of the facts.

State of mind. A person's reasons and motives for acting as he did. Term used in connection with evidence. See State of mind exception.

State of mind exception. Under the “state of mind exception” to the hearsay rule, an out of court declaration of a present existing motive or reason for acting is admissible even though the declarant is available to testify. Oberman v. Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., C.A.I11., 507 F.2d 349, 351. See Fed.Evid.R. 803(3).

State of the case. In general, the posture of litigation at a given point in time. It may be ready for trial, in the process of trial, or pending appeal.

State paper office. An office established in London in 1578 for the custody of state papers. The head of it was the “Clerk of the Papers.”

State police. A department or agency of a state government empowered with authority of police throughout a state and commonly trained and governed in a quasi-military fashion.

State police power. Every state has power to enact laws for the protection of its citizens' health, welfare, morals and safety and such power is derived from the 10th Amendment, U.S.Const. This power is upheld if exercised in a manner consistent with its ends and if the means used are reasonably calculated to protect one of these legitimate ends. See also Police power.
STATE'S ATTORNEY

State's attorney. An officer who represents the State in securing indictments and in prosecuting criminal cases. Also called District Attorney or Prosecuting Attorney. Commonly he is elected in a county election and his authority is county wide.

State seal. The official die or signet having a raised emblem and used by state officials on documents of importance. Every state has its own such seal.

State's evidence. A popular term for testimony given by an accomplice or joint participant in the commission of a crime tending to criminate or convict the others, and given under an actual or implied promise of immunity or lesser sentence for himself.

State sovereignty. The right of a state to self-government. The role of supreme authority or rule exercised by every state within the Union.

State's rights. Rights not conferred on the federal government or forbidden to the States according to the 10th Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

Statim /steydam/. Lat. Forthwith; immediately. In old English law, this term meant either "at once," or "within a legal time," i.e., such time as permitted the legal and regular performance of the act in question.

Stating part of a bill. That part of a bill in chancery in which the plaintiff states the facts of his case; it is distinguished from the charging part of the bill and from the prayer.

Station. Social position or status. See Standing; Status.

A place where military duty is performed or stores are kept or something connected with war is done.

A place at which both freight and passengers are received for transportation or delivered after transportation. In the civil law, a place where ships may ride in safety.

Stationers' company. A body formed in 1557 in London by 97 London stationers and their successors, to whom was entrusted, in the first instance, and, under Orders in Council, the censorship of the press.

Stationers' hall. In old English law, the hall of the stationers' company, at which every person claiming copyright in a book must register his title, in order to be able to bring actions against persons infringing it.

Stationery office. In old English law, a government office established as a department of the treasury, for the purpose of supplying government offices with stationery and books, and of printing and publishing government papers.

Statu liber /stachuw ldybar/. Lat. In Roman law, one who is made free by will under a condition; one who has his liberty fixed and appointed at a certain time or on a certain condition.

Statu liber /stachuw lboray/. Lat. In Louisiana, slaves for a time, who had acquired the right of being free at a time to come, or on a condition which was not fulfilled, or in a certain event which had not happened, but who in the meantime remained in a state of slavery. Civ.Code La.1838.

Status. Standing; state or condition; social position. The legal relation of individual to rest of the community. The rights, duties, capacities and incapacities which determine a person to a given class. A legal personal relationship, not temporary in its nature nor terminable at the mere will of the parties, with which third persons and the state are concerned. Holzer v. Deutsche Reichsbahn Gesellschaft, 159 Misc. 830, 290 N.Y.S. 181, 191. While term implies relation it is not a mere relation.

Status crime. A class of crime which consists not in proscribed action or inaction, but in the accused’s having a certain personal condition or being a person of a specified character. An example of a status crime is vagrancy.

Status de maniero /stachuw di maníriyow/. In old English law, the assembly of the tenants in the court of the lord of a manor, in order to do their customary suit.

Status of Irremovability. In old English law, the right acquired by a pauper, after one year’s residence in any parish, not to be removed therefrom.

Status quo /stachuw kwów/. The existing state of things at any given date. Status quo ante bellum, the state of things before the war. “Status quo” to be preserved by a preliminary injunction is the last actual, peaceable, uncontested status which preceded the pending controversy. Edgewater Constr. Co., Inc. v. Percy Wilson Mortg. & Finance Corp., 2 Ill.Dec. 864, 357 N.E.2d 1307, 1314.

Statutable, or statutory /stachadabal/stariaent/. That which is introduced or governed by statutory law, as opposed to the common law or equity. Thus, a court is said to have statutory jurisdiction when jurisdiction is given to it in certain matters by act of the legislature.

Statuta pro publico commodo late interpretantur /stachutáw s(y)oww kloandár têhrstôri-yow nêk aitrê hêhrstôriyam daspônawnt/. Statutes are confined to their own territory, and have no extrateritorial effect.

Statute, n. An act of the legislature declaring, commanding, or prohibiting something; a particular law enacted and established by the will of the legislative department of government; the written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the state. Such may be public or private, declaratory, mandatory, directory, or enabling, in nature. For mandatory and directory statutes, see Directory and Mandatory statutes.

Depending upon its context in usage, a statute may mean a single act of a legislature or a body of acts which are collected and arranged according to a scheme or for a session of a legislature or parliament.

This word is used to designate the legislatively created laws in contradistinction to court decided or unwritten laws. See Common law.

See also Codification; Mandatory statutes; Revised statutes; Slip law; Slip law print; Special law.

Penal statute. See Crime; Criminal law; Penal code; Penal laws; Punitive statute.

Perpetual statute. One which is to remain in force without limitation as to time; one which contains no provision for its repeal, abrogation, or expiration at any future time.

Personal statutes. In foreign and modern civil law, those statutes which have principally for their object the person, and treat of property only incidentally. A personal statute, in this sense of the term, is a law, ordinance, regulation, or custom, the disposition of which affects the person and clothes him with a capacity or incapacity, which he does not change with every change of abode, but which, upon principles of justice and policy, he is assumed to carry with him wherever he goes. The term is also applied to statutes which, instead of being general, are confined in their operation to one person or group of persons.

Private statute. A statute which operates only upon particular persons, and private concerns. An act which relates to certain individuals, or to particular classes of men. See Special law.

Public statute. A statute enacting a universal rule which regards the whole community, as distinguished from one which concerns only particular individuals and affects only their private rights. See also General statute, supra.

Punitive statute. See that title.

Real statutes. In the civil law, statutes which have principally for their object property, and which do not speak of persons, except in relation to property.

Reference statutes. See that title.

Remedial statute. See Remedial.

Revised statutes. See that title.

Special statute. One which operates only upon particular persons and private concerns. A private statute. Distinguished from a general or public statute. See Special law.

Statute fair. In old English law, a fair at which laborers of both sexes stood and offered themselves for hire; sometimes called also "Mop."

Statute-merchant. In old English law, a security for a debt acknowledged to be due, entered into before the chief magistrate of some trading town, pursuant to the statute 13 Edw. I, De Mercatoribus, by which not only the body of the debtor might be imprisoned, and his goods seized in satisfaction of the debt, but also his lands might be delivered to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them the debt be satisfied. Now fallen into disuse.

Statute of accumulations. In old English law, the statute 39 & 40 Geo. III, c. 98, forbidding the accumulation, beyond a certain period, of property settled by deed or will.

Statute of allegiance de facto. An act of 11 Hen. VII, c. 1, requiring subjects to give their allegiance to the actual king for the time being, and protecting them in so doing.

Statute of distributions. See Distribution.

Statute of Elizabeth. In old English law, the statute 13 Eliz., c. 5, against conveyances made in fraud of creditors.

Statute of frauds. See Frauds, Statute of.

Statute of Gloucester. In old English law, the statute 6 Edw. I, c. 1, A.D. 1278. It takes its name from the place of its enactment, and was the first statute giving costs in actions. 3 Bl.Comm. 399.

Statute of laborers. See Laborer.

Statute of limitations. See Limitation.

Statute of uses. See Use.

Statute of wills. In old English law, the statute 32 Hen. VIII, c. 1, which enacted that all persons being seised in fee-simple (except femes covert, infants, idiots, and persons of non-sane memory) might, by will and testament in writing, devise to any other person, except to bodies corporate, two-thirds of their lands, tenements, and hereditaments, held in chivalry, and the whole of those held in socage. 2 Bl.Comm. 375.

Statute roll. A roll upon which an English statute, after receiving the royal assent, was formerly entered.

Statutes at large. An official compilation of the acts and resolutions of each session of Congress published by the Office of the Federal Register in the National Archives and Records Service. It consists of two parts, the first comprising public acts and joint resolutions, the second, private acts and joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, treatises, proposed and ratified amendments to Constitution, and Presidential proclamations. The arrangement is currently by Public Law number, and by chapter number in pre-1951 volumes. This is the official print of the law for citation purposes where titles of the United States Code have not been enacted into positive law.

Statutes at large. See Statute.

Statutory bond. One that either literally or substantially is created or defined by a statute; required by a statute; conforming to a statute; to which a pleader who perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledged the error (joefalae), was permitted to amend.

Statutory exposition. When the language of a statute is ambiguous, and any subsequent enactment involves a particular interpretation of the former act, it is said to contain a statutory exposition of the former act.

Statutory extortion. The unlawful extraction of money or other value by means of a threat not sufficient for robbery, or a communication for the purpose of such extraction. See also Extortion.

Statutory foreclosure. See Foreclosure.

Statutory instruments. English administrative regulations and orders. The term applies especially to the administrative rules published since 1939, supplementing the English administrative code, Statutory Rules and Orders.

Statutory law. That body of law created by acts of the legislature in contrast to law generated by judicial opinions and administrative bodies. See Statute.

Statutory lien. A lien arising solely by force of statute upon specified circumstances or conditions, but does not include any lien provided by or dependent upon an agreement to give security, whether or not such lien is also provided by or is also dependent upon statute and whether or not the agreement or lien is made fully effective by statute. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(38).

Statutory obligation. An obligation—whether to pay money, perform certain acts, or discharge certain duties—which is created by or arises out of a statute, as distinguished from one founded upon acts between parties or jural relationships.

Statutory partnership association. See Partnership.

Statutory penalty. One imposed against the offender for some statutory violation by him. People v. Corcelli, 195 Misc. 198, 88 N.Y.S.2d 534, 536. One which an individual is allowed to recover against a wrongdoer as satisfaction for wrong or injury suffered, without reference to actual damage sustained. Nordling v. Johnston, 205 Or. 315, 283 P.2d 994, 998. In a civil sense, a "statutory penalty" is a pecuniary punishment imposed for doing some act which is prohibited or for omitting to do some act which is required to be done; e.g. Copyright Act provides statutory damages for copyright infringement. § 504(c). See also Penalty.

Statutory rape. The unlawful sexual intercourse with a female under the age of consent which may be 16, 17 or 18 years of age, depending upon the state. The government is not required to prove that intercourse was without the consent of the female because she is conclusively presumed to be incapable of consent by reason of her tender age. See also Rape.

Statutory release. It was created by St. 4 & 5 Vict., c. 21, which abolished the lease for a year.

Statutory staple. An ancient writ that lay to take the body of a person and seize the lands and goods of one who had forfeited a bond called statute staple. See Staple.

Statutory successor. A statutory successor is the person to whom all assets of a corporation pass upon its dissolution under the provisions of a statute of the state of incorporation which is in force at the time of the dissolution. See Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 388.

Statutum /st3t(y)uwdam/. Lat. Established; determined.
In the civil law, a term applied to judicial action.
In old English law, a statute; an act of parliament.

Statutum ex gratia regnis dicitur, quando rex dignatur /stat(y)uwday eks Gryesh(iy)a riylas disday, kwondow rekz digneydar siydayr ihy s(y)yuvow riyl(iy)ow, prwz koudaw et kwatyidiy pop(y)jay s(y)yawy/. A statute is said to be by the grace of the king, when the king deigns to yield some portion of his royal rights for the good and quiet of his people.

Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis /stat(y)uwday jenareyaladar est intela(jen)aydad kwondow varba stat(y)uwday sant speshilyay(iy)a reysh(iy)ow oday jenareyalas/. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, the statute is to be understood generally.

Statutum sessionum /stat(y)uwday sesh(h)iyownam/. In old English law, the statute session; a meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc.

Statutum speciale statuto speciali non derogat /stat(y)uwday speshilyayliy stat(y)uwday speshilyaylay nwn deyrhagat/. One special statute does not take from another special statute.

Stay, v. To stop, arrest, or forbear. To “stay” an order or decree means to hold it in abeyance, or refrain from enforcing it.

Stay, n. A stopping; the act of arresting a judicial proceeding by the order of a court. Also that which holds, restrains, or supports.

A stay is a suspension of the case or some designated proceedings within it. It is a kind of injunction with which a court freezes its proceedings at a particular point. It can be used to stop the prosecution of the action altogether, or to hold up only some phase of it, such as an execution about to be levied on a judgment.

Stay laws. Acts of the legislature prescribing a stay of execution in certain cases, or a stay of foreclosure of mortgages, or closing the courts for a limited period, or providing that suits shall not be instituted until a certain time after the cause of action arose, or otherwise suspending legal remedies; designed for the relief of debtors, in times of general distress or financial trouble.

Stay of execution. The stopping or arresting of execution on a judgment, that is, of the judgment-creditor’s right to issue execution, for a limited period. This is given by statute in many jurisdictions, as a privilege to the debtor, usually on his furnishing bail for the debt, costs, and interest. Or it may take place by agreement of the parties. Term may also refer to the stopping of the execution of capital punishment, commonly to permit further appeals by defendant.

Stay of proceedings. The temporary suspension of the regular order of proceedings in a cause, by direction or order of the court, usually to await the action of one of the parties in regard to some omitted step or some act which the court has required him to perform as incidental to the suit; as where a nonresident plaintiff has been ruled to give security for costs.

Stay order. A stopping; the act of arresting a judicial proceeding by the order of a court or the temporary suspension of the regular order of proceedings in a cause by direction or order of the court. In re Koome, 82 Wash.2d 816, 514 P.2d 520, 522.

Steady course. A ship is on a “steady course,” not only when her heading does not change, but whenever her future positions are certainly ascertainable from her present position and movements. Commonwealth & Dominion Line v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 20 F.2d 729, 731.

Steal. This term is commonly used in indictments for larceny (“take, steal, and carry away”), and denotes the commission of theft, that is, the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, and without right and without leave or consent of owner, and with intent to keep or make use wrongfully. State v. Hills, 145 Kan. 456, 65 P.2d 251, 252. Or, it may denote the criminal taking of personal property either by larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses. But, in popular usage “stealing” may include the unlawful appropriation of things which are not technically the subject of larceny, e.g., immovables. See also Larceny; Robbery; Shoplifting; Theft.

Stealing children. See Kidnapping.

Stealth /st6l0/. The quality or condition of being secret or furtive. The act of stealing when the victim is unaware of the theft is stealing by stealth. Any secret, sly or clandestine act to avoid discovery and to gain entrance into or to remain within residence of another without permission. State v. Lane, 50 Ohio App.2d 41, 361 N.E.2d 535, 540, 40.0.3d 24.

Steerer. One who gains the confidence of the person intended to be fleeced and who may be said to steer or lead the victim to the place where the latter is to be robbed or swindled.

Stellionatus /st&lyaneydas/. Lat. In the civil law, a general name for any kind of fraud not falling under any specific class. But the term is chiefly applied to fraud practiced in the sale or pledging of property; as, selling the same property to two different persons, or furtive. The act of stealing when the victim is unaware of the theft is stealing by stealth. Any secret, sly or clandestine act to avoid discovery and to gain entrance into or to remain within residence of another without permission. State v. Lane, 50 Ohio App.2d 41, 361 N.E.2d 535, 540, 4 O.O.3d 24.

Step. When used as prefix in conjunction with a degree of kinship, is repugnant to blood relationship, and is indicative of a relationship by affinity.

Step-child. The child of one of the spouses by a former marriage. A child who has a parent by his natural parent's second marriage and has not been adopted by that parent.

Step-down in basis. A reduction in the income tax basis of property. See also Step-up in basis.

Step-father. The husband of one's mother by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.

Step-in-the-dark rule. Such rule of contributory negligence is that one who enters a totally unfamiliar area in the darkness is not justified, in the absence of any special stress, in proceeding without first ascertaining whether there are any obstacles to his safe progress. Yoder v. Greenwald, Fla.App., 246 So.2d 148, 150.

Step-mother. The wife of one's father by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.

Step-parent. The mother or father of a child born during a previous marriage of the other parent and hence, not the natural parent of such child.

Step-son. The son of one's wife by a former husband, or of one's husband by a former wife.

Step-up in basis. An increase in the income tax basis of property.

Sterbreche, or strebrich. The breaking, obstructing, or straitening of a way.

Sterile /sterəl/ /stehr/. A French measure of solidity, used in measuring wood. It is a cubic meter.

Sterility /sterəlti/ /stehrd/ /stehrldiy/. Barrenness; unfruitfulness; incapacity to germinate or reproduce.

Sterilization. The act or process by which one is rendered incapable of procreation as, for example, the act of tying the female Fallopian tubes or a vasectomy. Also, the act or process by which an article or instrument is rendered free of germs.

Sterling. In English law, current or standard coin, especially silver coin; a standard of coinage.

Stet processus /stɛt prɛsɛs/. An entry on the roll in the nature of a judgment of a direction that all further proceedings shall be stayed (i.e., that the process may stand), and it is one of the ways by which a suit may be terminated by an act of the party, as distinguished from a termination of it by judgment, which is the act of the court. It was used by the plaintiff when he wished to suspend the action without suffering a nonsuit.

Stevedore. A person employed in loading and unloading vessels.

Steward. A man appointed in the place or stead of another. A union official who represents other union employees in grievances with management and who oversees the carrying out of the union contract.

Steward of a Manor. In old English law, an officer who had the general management of all forest.

Step-church. An increase in the income tax basis of property. See also Step-up in basis.

In the civil law, the party who asked the jurisdiction. Voluntary agreement between opposing made in a judicial proceeding by the parties thereto, by the parties, both being present at the same time, and usually by such words as “spondes? spondeo,” “promittis? promitto,” and the like.

A particular application of the stipulatio, which was used to collect together into one verbal contract all the obligations of every kind to the property of the debtor, with a view to their being released or discharged by an acceptilatio, that mode of discharge being applicable only to the verbal contract.

A stipulatio juris /stippyaleysh(iy)ow júras/. A stipulation or agreement beforehand of a question in the contract of stipulation; the other party, or he who answered, being called the “promissor.” But, in a more general sense, the term was applied to both the parties.

A material condition, requirement, or, article in an agreement.

The name given to any agreement made by the attorneys engaged on opposite sides of a cause (especially if in writing), regulating any matter incidental to the proceedings or trial, which falls within their jurisdiction. Voluntary agreement between opposing counsel concerning disposition of some relevant point so as to obviate need for proof or to narrow range of litigable issues. Arrington v. State, Fla., 233 So.2d 634, 636. An agreement, admission or confession made in a judicial proceeding by the parties thereto or their attorneys. Bourne v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 209 Kan. 511, 497 P.2d 110, 114.

Stipulations made during the course of trial may involve jury of less than twelve (Fed.R.Civ.P. 48), master’s findings (Rule 53(e)(4)), dismissal of action (Rule 41(a)), or discovery (see below).

A recognizance of certain persons (called in the old law “fide jussors”) in the nature of bail for the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bl.Comm. 108.

See also Admission; Proviso.

Discovery. Unless the court orders otherwise, the parties may by written stipulation (1) provide that depositions may be taken before any person, at any time or place, upon any notice, and in any manner and when such may be used like other depositions, and (2) modify the procedures provided by these rules for other methods of discovery, except that stipulations extending the time provided in Rules 33, 34, and 36 for responses to discovery may be made only with the approval of the court. Fed.R.Civ.P. 29.

Stipulator. In the civil law, the party who asked the question in the contract of stipulation; the other party, or he who answered, being called the “promissor.” But, in a more general sense, the term was applied to both the parties.

Stirpes /stáripyz/. Lat. Descents. The root-stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that portion from by which a family is descended, and also the kindred or family. Taking property by right of representation is called “succession per stirpes,” in opposition to taking in one’s own right, or as a principal, which is termed “taking per capita.” See also Per stirpes and Representation.

Stock. The goods and wares of a merchant or tradesman, kept for sale and traffic. In a larger sense, the capital of a merchant or other person, including his merchandise, money, and credits, or, in other words, the entire property employed in business. See InVENTORY.

Corporation Law

The term is used in various senses. It may mean the capital or principal fund of a corporation or joint-stock company, formed by the contributions of subscribers or the sale of shares; the aggregate of a certain number of shares severally owned by the members or stockholders of the corporation or the proportional share of an individual stockholder; also the incorporeal property which is represented by the holding of a certificate of stock; and in a wider and more remote sense, the right of a shareholder to participate in the general management of the company and to share proportionally in its net profits or earnings or in the distribution of assets on dissolution. The term “stock” has also been held to embrace not only capital stock of a corporation but all corporate wealth and resources, subject to all corporate liabilities and obligations.

“Stock” is distinguished from “bonds” and, ordinarily, from “debentures,” in that it gives right of ownership in part of assets of corporation and right to interest in any surplus after payment of debt. “Stock” in a corporation is an equity, and it represents an ownership interest, and it is to be distinguished from obligations such as notes or bonds which are not equities and represent no ownership interest. U. S. v. Evans, C.A.Or., 375 F.2d 730, 731.

See also Discount shares; Equity security; Par value; Registration of stock; Securities; Security; Share of corporate stock.

Classes and Types of Corporate Stock

Preferred stock is a separate portion or class of the stock of a corporation, which is accorded, by the charter or by-laws, a preference or priority in respect to dividends, over the remainder of the stock of the corporation, which in that case is called common stock. That is, holders of the preferred stock are entitled to receive dividends at a fixed annual rate, out of the net earnings or profits of the corporation, before any distribution of earnings is made to the common stock. If the earnings applicable to the payment of dividends are not more than sufficient for such fixed annual dividend, they will be entirely absorbed by the preferred stock. If they are more than sufficient for the purpose, the remainder may be given entirely to the common stock (which is the more usual custom) or such remainder may be distributed pro rata to both classes of the stock, in which case the preferred stock is said to “participate” with the common. The fixed dividend on preferred stock may be “cumulative” or “non-cumulative.” In the former case, if the stipulated dividend on preferred stock is not earned or paid in any one year, it becomes a charge upon the surplus earnings of the next and succeeding years, and all such accumulated and unpaid dividends on the preferred stock must be paid off before the common stock is entitled to receive dividends. In the case of "non-cumulative" preferred stock, its preference for any given year is extinguished by the failure to earn or pay its dividend in that year. If a corporation has no class of preferred stock, all its stock is common stock. The word "common" in this connection signifies that all the holders of such stock are entitled to an equal pro rata division of profits or net earnings, if any there be, without any preference or priority among themselves. Deferred stock is rarely issued by American corporations, though it is not uncommon in England. This kind of stock is distinguished by the fact that the payment of dividends upon it is expressly postponed until some other class of stock has received a dividend, or until some certain liability or obligation of the corporation is discharged. If there is a class of "preferred" stock, the common stock may in this sense be said to be "deferred," and the term is sometimes used as equivalent to "common" stock. But it is not impossible that a corporation should have three classes of stock: (1) Preferred, (2) common, and (3) deferred; the latter class being postponed, in respect to participation in profits, until both the preferred and the common stock had received dividends at a fixed rate.

Assented stock. Stock which an owner deposits with a third person in accordance with an agreement by which the owner voluntarily accepts a change in the securities of the corporation.

Assessable stock. Stock which requires the owner to pay more than its cost if the needs of the corporation require.

Authorized stock. That amount of stock which the corporate charter permits the corporation to issue.

Blue-chip stock. Stock of a listed company which has a high grade financial record.

Bonus stock. Stock given to an underwriter as compensation for services. Stock given to purchasers as an inducement. See also Bonus stock.

Callable preferred stock. Preferred stock which may be called by the issuing corporation at a prestated price.

Capital stock. See Capital (Capital stock).

Common stock. Securities which represent an ownership interest in a corporation. If the company has also issued preferred stock, both common and preferred have ownership rights. The preferred normally is limited to a fixed dividend but has prior claim on dividends and, in the event of liquidation, assets. Claims of both common and preferred stockholders are junior to claims of bondholders or other creditors of the company. Common stockholders assume the greater risk, but generally exercise the greater control and may gain the greater reward in the form of dividends and capital appreciation. The terms common stock and capital stock are often used interchangeably when the company has no preferred stock. See also Common stock.

Control stock. That amount of capital stock which permits the owner to control the corporation. It is not necessarily a majority of the shares.

Convertible stock. Stock which may be changed or converted into common stock.

Cumulative preferred. A stock having a provision that if one or more dividends are omitted, the omitted dividends must be paid before dividends may be paid on the company's common stock.

Cumulative stock. A type of stock on which unpaid dividends accumulate until paid. They must be paid totally before the common stockholders receive their dividends. See Cumulative preferred, supra.

Donated stock. Stock transferred to the corporation by the stockholders for resale.

Floating stock. That part of a corporation's stock which is on the open market for speculation. Stock not yet bought by public holders.

Growth stock. Stock purchased with a view towards appreciation in value rather than dividend income.

Guaranteed stock. Usually preferred stock on which dividends are guaranteed by another company, under much the same circumstances as a bond is guaranteed.

Guaranty stock. Stock in a savings and loan association in some states which yields all dividends to the holders after dividends to depositors or savers.

Issued stock. Stock which has been authorized and actually sold to subscribers. It may include treasury stock.

Letter stock. Stock received by a buyer who gives the seller a letter stating that he will hold such stock and not reoffer it to others. Such stock need not be registered under the Securities Act of 1933. See also Letter stock.

Listed stock. The stock of a company which is traded on a securities exchange, and for which a listing application and a registration statement, giving detailed information about the company and its operations, have been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, unless otherwise exempted, and with the exchange itself. The various stock exchanges have different standards for listing.

Nonassessable stock. Stock which cannot be assessed (i.e. holder cannot be assessed) in the event of failure or insolvency of the corporation. Most all stock is nonassessable.

Noncumulative preferred stock. Type of preferred stock which yields no dividend once the dividend is passed. Contrast Cumulative preferred, above.

Noncumulative stock. A preferred stock on which unpaid dividends do not accrue. Omitted dividends are, as a rule, gone forever.

Nonvoting stock. Stock to which no rights to vote attach.

No par stock. Stock without par value but which represents a proportionate share of the ownership of a corporation based on the number of shares. A corporation may have both par and no par value stock.

Outstanding stock. Stock issued and in the hands of stockholders and such does not include treasury stock.

Paid up stock. Stock for which full payment has been made to the corporation.
Participation preferred stock. A preferred stock which is entitled to its stated dividend and, also, to additional dividends on a specified basis upon payment of dividends on the common stock.

Participation stock. In general, stock which permits the holder to participate in the profits and surplus.

Par value stock. Stock which originally had a fixed value arrived at by dividing the total value of capital stock by the number of shares to be issued. The par value does not bear a necessary relation to the actual value of the stock because of the part which surplus plays in valuation. See also Par value.

Penny stock. Generally, highly speculative stock which can be purchased for under a dollar a share.

Preferred stock. A class of stock with a claim on the company’s earnings before payment may be made on the common stock and usually entitled to priority over common stock if company liquidates. Usually entitled to dividends at a specified rate—when declared by the Board of Directors and before payment of a dividend on the common stock—depending upon the terms of the issue.

Premium stock. Stock which carries a premium for trading as in the case of short selling.

Redeemable stock. Generally preferred stock which can be called in and retired. It is redeemable at par. See also Redeemable stock.

Registered stock. Stock registered under federal Securities Act. See also Listed stock, supra.

Restricted stock. Stock to which is attached restrictions as to transferability.

Stock options. See Stock option, infra.

Stock redemption. See Stock redemption, infra.

Stock rights. See Stock rights, infra.

Stock split. See Stock split, infra.

Subscribed stock. See that title.

Treasury stock. Stock issued by a company but later re-acquired. It may be held in the company’s treasury indefinitely, reissued to the public, or retired. Treasury stock receives no dividends and has no vote while held by the company.

Unissued stock. Stock authorized by the corporate charter but not yet distributed to stockholders and subscribers.

Unlisted stock. Stock not listed on one of the stock exchanges but traded over the counter or privately.

Voting stock. Stock which carries the right to vote for directors, etc. See also Voting stock.

Watered stock. Stock issued for inadequate consideration. See also Watered stock.

Law of Descent

The term is used, metaphorically, to denote the original progenitor of a family, or the ancestor from whom the persons in question are all descended; such descendants being called “branches.” Matter of Samson’s Estate, 139 Misc. 490, 249 N.Y.S. 79, 83.

General

Capital stock. See Capital (Capital stock).

Certificate of stock. See Certificate; Share certificate.

Exchange of stock. See Exchange.

Public stocks. The funded or bonded debt of a government or state.

Stock association. A joint-stock company (q.v.).

Stock attribution. See Attribution.

Stock bailout. A species of stock redemption in the form of a preferred stock dividend formerly tax free, but now governed by I.R.C. § 306.

Stock certificate. See Certificate of stock; Share certificate.

Stock control. Type of inventory management by which a business maintains perpetual records of its inventory.

Stock corporation. A corporation having a capital stock divided into shares, and which is authorized by law to distribute to the holders thereof dividends or shares of the surplus profits of the corporation.

Stock dividend. Distributing stock as a dividend. If the dividend is common stock declared on common stock, the only result other than to reduce the value of each share of common and to maintain the proportionate interest of each stockholder is to transfer part of surplus to the stock account. To be distinguished from stock split.

Stock exchange. The place at which shares of stock are bought and sold. See Stock market, below.

Stock insurance company. An insurance company whose shares are held by the public and which pays dividends in contrast to a mutual insurance company whose assets are owned by the policyholders who receive dividends when available.

Stock in trade. The inventory carried by a retail business for sale in the ordinary course of business. Also, the tools and equipment owned and used by a tradesman.

Stock jobber. A dealer in stock; one who buys and sells stock on his own account on speculation.

Stock law district. A district in which stock is by law prohibited from running at large.

Stock life insurance company. One in which capital stock investment is made by subscribers to stock, and business is thereafter conducted by board of directors elected by its stockholders, and, subject to statutes, distribution of earnings or profits, as between stockholders and policyholders, is determined by board of directors. Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Moncure, D.C.Va., 35 F.2d 360, 362.

Stock market. An organized market or exchange where shares (stocks) are traded. The largest stock market in the United States is the New York Stock Exchange. See also Over-the-counter market.
Stock. The term has no technical meaning, and may as well apply to a note given on the sale of stock which the bank had purchased or taken in the payment of doubtful debts as to a note given on account of an original subscription to stock.

Stock option. The right to purchase a specified number of shares of stock for a specified price at specified times, usually granted to management and key employees. The term "stock option" is used when the right is issued other than pro rata to all existing shareholders. When so issued to all existing shareholders, the option is called a "stock right." See also Warrant.

Stock option contract. A negotiable instrument which gives the holder the right to buy or sell a certain number of shares of the corporation's stock within a fixed period of time for a certain price.

Stock purchase plan. A plan by which employees of a corporation are allowed to purchase shares of corporate stock.

Stock redemption. A partial or complete liquidation of corporate stock by the corporation with varying tax consequences depending upon the type of redemption. It generally consists in the purchase by the corporation of its own stock. The redemption of the stock of a shareholder by the issuing corporation is generally treated as a sale or exchange of the stock unless the redemption is a dividend. I.R.C. §§ 301 and 302. A public corporation might redeem its stock for the purpose of "going private." See also Stock bailout, supra.

Stock rights. The privilege to subscribe to new stock issues or to purchase stock. Usually, rights are contained in securities called warrants and the warrants can be sold to others. A right to purchase stock issued pro rata to existing shareholders. Sometimes issued on a "when, as, and if" basis, that is, the holder can buy the stock when it is issued, on such basis or of such kind as is issued, and if it is issued.

A document (i.e., negotiable certificate) which gives an existing stockholder the privilege of buying additional stock of a corporation. The right has a value of its own because generally the holder may buy such additional stock at a price less than the market quotation. Rights are traded in the market. A stock right differs from a warrant to the extent that a right gives a privilege of buying additional stock of the same kind whereas a warrant may permit a preferred stockholder to buy common stock.

See also Preemptive right.

Stock split. Share splits, or stock splits, may be (a) split-ups, where one share is split into a larger number of shares, or (b) reverse splits, or split-downs, where a number of shares are combined to form a smaller number of shares. Share splits involve no transfer from surplus to stated capital or any changes except adjustments in par value or stated value per share, when applicable, so that the same stated capital which represented the issued shares before the split properly represents the changed number of shares after the split. A split-up requires not only board of directors action, but often requires advance shareholder approval as well when the articles of incorporation must be amended to change the par value or stated value of shares and also, when necessary, to authorize additional shares. The usual accounting treatment for a share split is to do nothing except to reflect the different number of issued shares and any changes in par or stated value.

A common purpose of a stock split is to reduce the per share market price in order to make it easier for traders and a resulting higher per share value (i.e., price).

See also Reverse stock split.

Stock subscription. An agreement with the corporation to purchase its stock. See Stock rights, supra. See also Subscribed stock; Subscriber; Subscription.

Stock swap. In corporate reorganization, an exchange of stock in one corporation for the stock of another corporation.

Stock transfer tax. A tax imposed on the transfer of stock and based on the market value of the stock.

Stock warrant. A certificate evidencing the right to buy shares of stock and commonly attached to preferred stock and bonds. It generally has an expiration date before which the warrant must be exercised. See also Warrant.

Watered stock. See that title.

Stockholder. A person who owns shares of stock in a corporation or joint-stock company. See also Minority stockholder.

Stockholder's derivative action. An action by a stockholder for purpose of sustaining in his own name a right of action existing in corporation itself, where corporation would be an appropriate plaintiff. It is based upon two distinct wrongs: The act whereby corporation was caused to suffer damage, and act of corporation itself in refusing to redress such act. Procedure in such actions is governed by Fed.R.Civ. P. 23.1.

Stockholder's equity. A stockholder's proportionate share in the corporation's capital stock and surplus.

Stockholder's liability. Phrase is frequently employed to denote stockholder's statutory, added or double liability for corporation's debts, notwithstanding full payment for stock, but is often employed where stockholder, agreeing to pay full par value of stock, obtained stock certificate before complete payment or where stock, only partly paid for, is intentionally issued by corporation as fully paid up and all or part of purported consideration therefor is entirely fictitious.

Stockholders' representative action. An action brought or maintained by a stockholder in behalf of himself and all others similarly situated. See also Stockholder's derivative action.

Stocks. A machine consisting of two pieces of timber, arranged to be fastened together, and holding fast the legs and/or arms of a person placed in it. This was an ancient method of punishment. See also Stock.

Stolen. Acquired, or possessed, as a result of some wrongful or dishonest act or taking, whereby a person willfully obtains or retains possession of property which belongs to another, without or beyond any permission given, and with the intent to deprive the owner of the benefit of ownership (or possession) permanently.
The word “stolen” as used in the crime of interstate transportation of stolen motor vehicles includes all wrongful and dishonest takings of motor vehicles with the intent to deprive the owner of the rights and benefits of ownership, regardless of whether theft constitutes common-law larceny; and felonious taking may be effected by diverse means known to both common and statutory law, such as larceny, embezzlement, false pretenses, larceny by trick and other types of wrongful acquisition. Lake v. U.S., C.A. Colo., 338 F.2d 787, 788. It is not necessary that the taking of the vehicle be unlawful. Even if possession of the vehicle is lawfully acquired, the vehicle will be deemed “stolen” if the defendant thereafter forms the intent to deprive the owner of the rights and benefits of ownership, and converts the vehicle to his own use. United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407, 417, 77 S.Ct. 397, 402, 1 L.Ed.2d 430. See also Receiving stolen goods or property.

Stop. Within statutes requiring a motorist striking a person with automobile to stop, requires a definite cessation of movement for a sufficient length of time for a person of ordinary powers of observation to fully understand the surroundings of the accident. Moore v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 482, 145 S.W.2d 887, 888. “Stop,” within term stop and frisk, is temporary restraint of person’s freedom to walk away and is a permissible seizure within Fourth Amendment dimensions when such person is suspected of being involved in past, present or pending criminal activity. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889; State v. Anonymous (1971-20), 6 Conn.Cir. 583, 280 A.2d 816, 818. See also Stop and frisk.

Stop and frisk. The temporary seizure and “patting down” of a person who behaves suspiciously and appears to be armed. A police officer has the right to stop and pat down a person suspected of contemplating the commission of a crime. He need not have full blown probable cause but he must have more than a hunch. The scope of the search must be strictly tied to and justified by the circumstances which rendered the initiation of the stop justified. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889; State v. Anonymous (1971-20), 6 Conn.Cir. 583, 280 A.2d 816, 818. See also Stop and frisk.

Stop-limit order. In securities trading, a stop order in which a specific price is set below which the stock may not be sold and above which it may not be purchased.

Stop-loss order. An order given to a stockbroker to buy or sell certain securities when the market reaches a particular price.

Stop order. An order to buy securities at a price above or sell at a price below the current market. Stop buy orders are generally used to limit loss or protect unrealized profits on a short sale. Stop sell orders are generally used to protect unrealized profits or limit loss on a holding. A stop order becomes a market order when the stock sells at or beyond the specified price and, thus, may not necessarily be executed at that price.

Stoppage. In the civil law, compensation or set-off.

Stoppage in transitu /stótpaj in trínzat(y)yuv/. The act by which the unpaid vendor of goods stops their progress and resumes possession of them, while they are in course of transit from him to the purchaser, and not yet actually delivered to the latter. The right of stoppage in transitu is that which the vendor has, when he sells goods on credit to another, of resuming the possession of the goods while they are in the possession of a carrier or middle-man, in the transit to the consignee or vendee, and before they arrive into their actual possession, or the destination he has appointed for them on their becoming bankrupt and insolvent. The right which arises to an unpaid vendor to resume the possession, with which he has parted, of goods sold upon credit, before they come into the possession of a buyer who has become insolvent, bankrupt, or pecuniarily embarrassed. See U.C.C. § 2-705(1).

Stop payment order. An order by the drawer of a draft (check) ordering the drawee not to make payment on such.

Stop sign. A legally erected and maintained traffic signal requiring all traffic to stop before entering into or crossing an intersection. Sweet v. Awtrey, 70 Ga.App. 334, 28 S.E.2d 154, 161.

Storage. Safekeeping of goods in a warehouse or other depository. Lincoln Sav. Bank of Brooklyn v. Brown, Em.App., 137 F.2d 228, 230, 231. See also Ballment; Warehouse; Warehouseman; Warehouse system.

Store, v. To keep merchandise for safe custody, to be delivered in the same condition as when received, where the safe-keeping is the principal object of deposit, and not the consumption or sale.

Store, n. Any place where goods are deposited and sold by one engaged in buying and selling them. Public store. A government warehouse, maintained for certain administrative purposes, such as the keeping of military supplies, the storing of imported goods under bonds to pay duty, etc.

Stores. The supplies of different articles provided for the subsistence and accommodation of a ship’s crew and passengers.

Storehouse. A structure in which things are stored; e.g. a building for the storing of grain, foodstuffs, or goods of any kind. A magazine; a repository; a warehouse; a store.

Stowage. In maritime law, the storing, packing, or arranging of the cargo in a ship, in such a manner as to prevent the goods from friction, bruising, or damage from leakage.

Money paid for a room where goods are laid; houssage.

Stowaway. One who conceals himself aboard an outgoing vessel or aircraft for the purpose of obtaining free passage.

Stowe. In old English law, a valley.

Straddle. In stock-brokers' parlance the term means the double privilege of a "put" and a "call," and secures to the holder the right to demand of the seller at a certain price within a certain time a certain number of shares of specified stock, or to require him to take, at the same price within the same time, the same shares of stock. It is not per se a gaming contract, unless intended as a mere cover for a bet or wager on the future price of the stock or commodity. Palmer v. Love, 18 Tenn.App. 579, 80 S.W.2d 100, 106. See Option.

The sale of loss-property prior to the adoption of a plan of liquidation. The objective of this approach is to avoid the disallowance of the loss that would result under I.R.C. § 337 (i.e., "12-month liquidation") if the property were sold after the adoption of the plan.

Straight-line depreciation. See Depreciation.

Strand. A shore or bank of the sea or a river.

Stranding. In maritime law, the drifting, driving, or running aground of a ship on a shore or strand. Accidental stranding takes place where the ship is driven on shore by the winds and waves. Voluntary stranding takes place where the ship is run on shore either to preserve her from a worse fate or for some fraudulent purpose.

Stranger. As used with reference to the subject of subrogation, one who, in no event resulting from the existing state of affairs, can become liable for the debt, and whose property is not charged with the payment thereof and cannot be sold therefor. See also Strangers.

Stranger in blood. Any person not within the consideration of natural love and affection arising from relationship.

Strangers. By this term is intended third persons generally. Thus the persons bound by a fine are parties, privies, and strangers: the parties are either the cognizors or cognizesses; the privies are such as are in any way related to those who levy the fine, and claim under them by any right of blood, or other right of representation; the strangers are all other persons in the world, except only the parties and privies. In its general legal signification the term is opposed to the word "privy." Those who are in no way parties to a covenant, nor bound by it, are also said to be strangers to the covenant. See also Stranger.

Stratagem /strádʒəm/. A deception either by words or actions, in times of war, in order to obtain an advantage over an enemy.

Stratocracy /strátrokrəsi/. A military government; government by military chiefs of an army.

Strator /strárdər/. In old English law, a surveyor of the highways.

Straw ball. See Ball.

Straw man or party. A "front"; a person who is put up in name only to take part in a deal. Nominal party to a transaction; one who acts as an agent for another for the purpose of taking title to real property and executing whatever documents and instruments the principal may direct respecting the property. Person who purchases property for another to conceal identity of real purchaser.

Stray. See Estray.
Strict. Exact; accurate; precise; undeviating; governed or governing by exact rules.

As to strict "Settlement," see that title.

Strict construction. A close or rigid reading and interpretation of a law. It is said that criminal statutes must be strictly construed. Rule of "strict construction" has no definite or precise meaning, has only relative application, is not opposite of liberal construction, and does not require such strained or narrow interpretation of language as to defeat object of statute. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Newingham, Mo.App., 386 S.W.2d 663, 665.

Rule of "strict construction" means that criminal statute will not be enlarged by implication or intention beyond fair meaning of language used, or what their terms reasonably justify, and will not be held to include offenses and persons other than those which are clearly described and provided for, although court in interpreting and employing particular statutes may think legislature should have made them more comprehensive. Matthews v. Powers, Okl.Cr., 425 P.2d 479, 482. "Strict construction of a statute" is that which refuses to expand the law by implications or equitable considerations, but confines its operation to cases which are clearly within the letter of the statute as well as within its spirit or reason, resolving all reasonable doubts against applicability of statute to particular case. Kyritsis v. Fenny, 66 Misc.2d 329, 320 N.Y.S.2d 702, 704.

See also Construction.

Strict foreclosure. See Foreclosure.

Stricti juris /striktē jūrās/. Lat. Of strict right or law; according to strict law. A license is a thing stricti juris; a privilege which a man does not possess by his own right, but it is conceded to him as an indulgence, and therefore it is to be strictly observed.

Strictissimi juris /striktē̆simē jūrās/. Lat. Of the strictest right or law. Licenses being matter of special indulgence, the application of them was formerly strictissimi juris.

Strict liability. A concept applied by the courts in product liability cases in which a seller is liable for any and all defective or hazardous products which un­duly threaten a consumer's personal safety. This concept applies to all members involved in the manufacturing and selling of any facet of the product. Doctrine of "strict liability" poses strict liability on one who sells product in defective condition unreasonably dangerous to user or consumer for harm caused to ultimate user or consumer if seller is engaged in business of selling such product, and product is expected to and does reach user or consumer without substantial change in condition in which it is sold. Davis v. Gibson Products Co., Tex.Civ.App., 505 S.W.2d 682, 688.

Concept of strict liability in tort is founded on the premise that when manufacturer presents his goods to the public for sale, he represents they are suitable for their intended use, and to invoke such doctrine it is essential to prove that the product was defective when placed in the stream of commerce. Herbstman v. Eastman Kodak Co., 68 N.J. 1, 342 A.2d 181, 184.

(1) One who sells any product in a defective condition unreasonably dangerous to the user or consumer or to his property is subject to liability for physical harm thereby caused to the ultimate user or consumer, or to his property, if (a) the seller is engaged in the business of selling such a product, and (b) it is expected to and does reach the user or consumer without substantial change in the condition in which it is sold. (2) The rule stated in Subsection (1) applies although (a) the seller has exercised all possible care in the preparation and sale of his product, and (b) the user or consumer has not bought the product from or entered into any contractual relation with the seller. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 402A.

See also Warranty.

Strict liability statute. One which imposes criminal sanction for an unlawful act without requiring a showing of criminal intent. State v. Lucero, 87 N.M. 242, 531 P.2d 1215, 1218.

Strictly /striktli/. A strict manner; closely, precisely, rigorously; stringently; positively.

Strictly construed. Requirement that a penal statute be strictly construed means that the court will not extend punishment to cases not plainly within the language used, but at the same time such statutes are to be fairly and reasonably construed, and will not be given such a narrow and strained construction as to exclude from their operation cases plainly within their scope and meaning. See also Strict construction.

Strictly ministerial duty. One that is absolute and imperative, requiring neither the exercise of official discretion nor judgment.

Stricto jure /striktō jūrē/. Lat. In strict law.

Strictum jus /striktē̆m jās/. Lat. Strict right or law; the rigor of the law as distinguished from equity.

Strike. The act of quitting work by a body of workers for the purpose of coercing their employer to accede to some demand they have made upon him, and which he has refused. Jeffery-De Witt Insulator Co. v. N. L. R. B., C.C.A.4, 91 F.2d 134, 138. A combination to obtain higher wages, shorter hours of employment, better working conditions or some other concession from employer by the employees stopping work at a preconcerted time, and it involves a combination of persons and not a single individual. Moreland Theatres Corp. v. Portland Moving Picture Mach. Operators' Protective Union, 140 Or. 35, 12 P.2d 333, 338. A cessation of work as a means of enforcing compliance with some demand upon the employer. People v. Tepel, Mag.Ct., 3 N.Y.S.2d 779, 781. A combined effort among workers to compel their employer to the concession of a certain demand, by preventing the conduct of his business until compliance with the demand.

The term "strike" includes any strike or other concerted stoppage of work by employees (including a stoppage by reason of the expiration of a collective-bargaining agreement) and any concerted slow-down or other concerted interruption of operations by employees. Labor Management Relations Act, § 501(2).

See also No-strike clause; Rent strike; Wildcat strike. Compare Lockout.
STRIKE

Economic strike. A cessation of work by employees to enforce economic demands upon the employer in contrast to a strike caused by an unfair labor charge.

General strike. Cessation of work by employees effective throughout an entire industry or country.

Jurisdictional strike. Cessation of work as result of dispute by members of one union or craft against members of another union or craft as to assignment of work.

Secondary strike. Cessation of work by union members of one employer who has business dealings with another employer whose employees are on strike.

Sit-down strike. Cessation of work by employees who do not leave employer's premises but who refuse to work.

Sympathy strike. A sympathy strike involves two unions; one is striking to force some concession from the employer; the other strikes in sympathy with the first's objectives. Sympathy strikes are a common manifestation of traditional union solidarity.

Wildcat strike. Cessation of work by group of employees without authorization of union officials.

Strikebreaker. One who takes the place of workman who has left his work in an effort to force the striking employee to agree to demands of employer. See also Scab.

Strike off. In common parlance, and in the language of the auction-room, property is understood to be "struck off" or "knocked down," when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale.

A court is said to "strike off" a case when it directs the removal of the case from the record or docket, as being one over which it has no jurisdiction and no power to hear and determine it.

Strike suits. Shareholder derivative action begun with power to hear and determine it.

Striking a jury. The selecting or nominating of a jury out of the whole number returned as jurors on the panel. It is especially used of the selection of a special jury, where a panel is prepared by the proper officer, and the parties, in turn, strike off a certain number of names, until the list is reduced to twelve. A jury thus chosen is called a "struck jury."

Striking off the roll. The disbarring of an attorney.

Striking price. The price at which named stock can be put or called is ordinarily the market price when option is written and is termed the "striking price". Reinach v. C. I. R., C.A.N.Y., 373 F.2d 900, 901.

Strip. The act of spoiling or unlawfully taking away anything from the land, by the tenant for life or years, or by one holding an estate in the land less than the entire fee.

Strong. Cogent, powerful, forcible, forceful. Wright v. Austin, Tex.Civ.App., 175 S.W.2d 281, 283. See also Sound.

Strong hand. The words "with strong hand" imply a degree of criminal force, whereas the words vi et armis ("with force and arms") are mere formal words in the action of trespass, and the plaintiff is not bound to prove any force. The statutes relating to forcible entries use the words "with a strong hand" as describing that degree of force which makes an entry or detain of lands criminal.

Strongly corroborated. A degree of corroboration amounting to corroboration from independent facts and circumstances which is clear and satisfactory to the court and jury. Wright v. Austin, Tex.Civ.App., 175 S.W.2d 281, 283.

Struck. In common law pleading, a word essential in an indictment for murder, when the death arose from any wounding, beating, or bruising.

Struck Jury. A special jury. See also Striking a jury.

Structural alteration or change. One that affects a vital and substantial portion of a thing; that changes its characteristic appearance, the fundamental purpose of its erection, and the uses contemplated. One that is extraordinary in scope and effect, or unusual in expenditure.

Structure. Any construction, or any production or piece of work artificially built up or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner. That which is built or constructed; an edifice or building of any kind.

A combination of materials to form a construction for occupancy, use or ornamentation whether installed on, above, or below the surface of a parcel of land.

Strumpet /strampat/. A whore, harlot, or courtesan.

Structural alteration or change. One that affects a vital and substantial portion of a thing; that changes its characteristic appearance, the fundamental purpose of its erection, and the uses contemplated. One that is extraordinary in scope and effect, or unusual in expenditure.

Stultify /staltafay/. To make one out mentally incapacitated for the performance of an act.

Stultiloquium /staltalowkwiyam/. Lat. In old English law, vicious pleading, for which a fine was imposed by King John, supposed to be the origin of the fines for beau-pleader.

Stumpage. The sum agreed to be paid to an owner of land for trees standing (or lying) upon his land, the purchaser being permitted to enter upon the land and to cut down and remove the trees; in other words, it is the price paid for a license to cut.

Stuprum /st(y)uwpram/. Lat. In the Roman and civil law, unlawful sexual intercourse between a man and an unmarried woman;—distinguished from adultery by being committed with a virgin or widow.

Any sexual intercourse between a man and an unmarried woman (not a slave), otherwise than in concubinage; illicit intercourse.

Any union of the sexes forbidden by morality.

Sturgeon /stárjan/. In old English law, a royal fish which, when either thrown ashore or caught near the coast, is the property of the sovereign.
Style. As a verb, to call, name, or entitle one. As a noun, the title or appellation of a person.

Suable /s(y)úwabli/. Capable of being, or liable to be, sued. A suable cause of action is the matured cause of action.

Subagent /sábeyjant/. An under-agent; a substituted agent; an agent appointed by one who is himself an agent. A person appointed by an agent to perform some duty, or the whole of the business, relating to his agency. A person employed by an agent to assist him in transacting the affairs of his principal. But a mere servant of an agent is not a “subagent.” Gulf Refining Co. v. Shirley, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 613, 615. A subagent is a person appointed by an agent empowered to do so, to perform functions undertaken by the agent for the principal, but for whose conduct the agent agrees with the principal to be primarily responsible. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 5. See also Agent.

Subaltern /sáboitarn/sábolarun/. An inferior or subordinate officer. An officer who exercises his authority under the superintendence and control of a superior.

Sub-ballivus /sáb-baláyvas/. In old English law, an under-sheriff; a sheriff’s deputy.

Subchapter S corporation. A small business corporation permitted to be taxed as if it were an individual proprietorship. I.R.C. § 1371 et seq. An elective provision permitting certain small business corporations and their shareholders to elect to be treated for income tax purposes in accordance with the operating rules of §§ 1373–1379. Of major significance is the fact that Subchapter S status usually avoids the corporate income tax, and corporate losses can be claimed by the shareholders.

Sub colore juris /sáb káloirí júrus/. Under color of right; under a show or appearance of right or rightful power.

Sub conditio /sáb kanAidisheýouwiny/. Upon condition. The proper words to express a condition in a conveyance, and to create an estate upon condition.

Subhastatio /sáb hástéshiy(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a sale by public auction, which was done under a spear, fixed up at the place of sale as a public sign of it.

Subinfueudation /sábinfyuweýshan/. The system which the feudal tenants introduced of granting smaller estates out of those which they held of their lord, to be held of themselves as inferior lords. As this system was proceeding downward ad infinitum, and depriving the lords of their feudal profits, it was entirely suppressed by the statute Quia Emptores, 18 Edw. I, c. 1, and instead of it alienation in the modern sense was introduced, so that thenceforth the alienee held of the same chief lord and by the same services that his alienor before him held.

Subirrigate /sábinfrágréy/. To irrigate below the surface, as by a system of underground porous pipes, or by natural percolation through the soil.

Subjaecent support /sábijéysant sa pórt/. The right of land to be supported by the land which lies under it; distinguished from lateral (side) support. See also Support.

Subject. Constitutional law. One that owes allegiance to a sovereign and is governed by his laws. The natives of Great Britain are subjects of the British government. Men in free governments are subjects as well as citizens; as citizens they enjoy rights and franchises; as subjects they are bound to obey the laws. The term is little used, in this sense, in countries enjoying a republican form of government. Swiss Nat. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 267 U.S. 42, 45 S.Ct. 213, 214, 69 L.Ed. 504.

Legislation. The matter of public or private concern for which law is enacted. Thing legislated about or matters on which legislation operates to accomplish a definite object or objects reasonably related one to the other. Crouch v. Benet, 198 S.C. 185, 17 S.E.2d 320, 322. The matter or thing forming the groundwork of the act. McCombs v. Dallas County, Tex. Civ.App., 136 S.W.2d 975, 982.

The constitutions of several of the states require that every act of the legislature shall relate to but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title of the statute. But term "subject" within such constitutional provisions is to be given a broad and extensive meaning so as to allow legislature full scope to include in one act all matters having a logical or natural connection. Jaffee v. State, 76 Okl.Cr. 95, 134 P.2d 1027, 1032.

Subjection. The obligation of one or more persons to act at the discretion or according to the judgment and will of others.

Subject-matter. The subject, or matter presented for consideration; the thing in dispute; the right which one party claims as against the other, as the right to divorce; to recover money; to have foreclosure. Flower Hospital v. Hart, 178 Okl. 447, 62 P.2d 1248, 1252. Nature of cause of action, and of relief sought. In trusts, the res or the things themselves which are held in trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2.

Subject matter jurisdiction. Term refers to court's competence to hear and determine cases of the general class to which proceedings in question belong; the power to deal with the general subject involved in the action. Standard Oil Co. v. Montecatini Edison S. p. A., D.C.Del., 342 F.Supp. 125, 129. Subject matter jurisdiction deals with court's competence to hear a particular category of cases. Japan Gas Lighter Ass'n v. Ronson Corp., D.C.N.J., 257 F.Supp. 219, 224. See also Jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Subject to. Liable, subordinate, subservient, inferior, obedient to; governed or affected by; provided that; provided; answerable for. Homan v. Employers Reinsurance Corp., 345 Mo. 650, 136 S.W.2d 289, 302.

Substantial capacity. Term used in the definition of legal insanity proposed by the Model Penal Code (§ 4.01) to the effect that a person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law. See also Insanity.

Substantial damages. See Damages.

Substantial equivalent of patented device. Same as thing itself, so that if two devices do same work in substantially same way, and accomplish substantially same results, they are equivalent, even though differ-
Substantial justice. Such evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. It is that quality of evidence necessary for a court to affirm a decision of an administrative board. Under the "substantial evidence rule," reviewing courts will defer to an agency determination so long as, upon an examination of the whole record, there is substantial evidence upon which the agency could reasonably base its decision. Marshall v. Consumers Power Co., 65 Mich.App. 237, 237 N.W.2d 266, 280.

Substantial evidence. Such evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. It is that quality of evidence necessary for a court to affirm a decision of an administrative board. Under the "substantial evidence rule," reviewing courts will defer to an agency determination so long as, upon an examination of the whole record, there is substantial evidence upon which the agency could reasonably base its decision. Marshall v. Consumers Power Co., 65 Mich.App. 237, 237 N.W.2d 266, 280.

Substantive evidence. Such evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. It is that quality of evidence necessary for a court to affirm a decision of an administrative board. Under the "substantial evidence rule," reviewing courts will defer to an agency determination so long as, upon an examination of the whole record, there is substantial evidence upon which the agency could reasonably base its decision. Marshall v. Consumers Power Co., 65 Mich.App. 237, 237 N.W.2d 266, 280.

Substantial performance. Exists where there has been no willful departure from the terms of the contract, and no omission in essential points, the contract having been honestly and faithfully performed in its material and substantial particulars, and the only variance from the strict and literal performance consists of technical or unimportant omissions or defects. Substantial performance of a contract is shown when party alleging substantial performance has made an honest endeavor in good faith to perform his part of the contract, when results of his endeavor are beneficial to other party, and when such benefits are retained by the other party; if any one of these circumstances is not established the performance is not substantial, and the party has no right of recovery. Alliance Tractor & Implement Co. v. Lukens Tool & Die Co., 194 Neb. 473, 233 N.W.2d 299, 301. Equitable doctrine of "substantial performance" protects against forfeiture for technical inadvertence or trivial variations or omissions in performance. Sgarlat v. Succession. The devolution of title to property under the law of descent and distribution. The act or right of legal or official investment with a predecessor's office, dignity, possession, or functions; also the legal or actual order of so succeeding from that which is or is to be vested or taken. The word frequently denotes persons who take by will or inheritance and excludes those who take by deed, grant, gift, or any form of purchase or contract. Olsan Bros. v. Miller, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 856, 857.

Although "succession" is defined in statute as the acquisition of title to the property of one who dies without disposing of it by will, the word frequently possesses the somewhat broader meaning of the acquisition of rights upon the death of another. In re Russell's Estate, 17 C.A.3d 758, 95 Cal.Rptr. 88, 95.

The right by which one set of men may, by succeeding another set, acquire a property in all the goods, movables, and other chattels of a corporation. The power of perpetual succession is one of the peculiar properties of a corporation. See Perpetual.

Irregular succession. That which is established by law in favor of certain persons, or of the state, in default of heirs, either legal or instituted by testament.

Legal succession. That which the law establishes in favor of the nearest relation of a deceased person. See Descent.

Natural succession. Succession taking place between natural persons, for example, in descent on the death of an ancestor.

Testamentary succession. In the civil law, that which results from the institution of an heir in a testament executed in the form prescribed by law. See Testamentary.

Testate succession. Passing of property to another by will.

Vacant succession. Such exists when no one claims it, or when all the heirs are unknown, or when all the known heirs to it have renounced it. Civ.Code La. art. 1095. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U.S. 439, 11 S.Ct. 965, 966.

Succession duty or tax. A tax placed on the gratuitous acquisition of property passing on the death of any person by transfer from one person to another. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Maxwell, 221 N.C. 528, 20 S.E.2d 840, 842. A tax imposed upon the privilege of receiving property from a decedent by devise or inheritance. See Inheritance tax.

Successive. Following one after another in a line or series. In re Buchholtz, Cust. & Pat.App., 54 F.2d 965, 966.

Successor. One that succeeds or follows; one who takes the place that another has left, and sustains the like part or character; one who takes the place of another by succession. Thompson v. North Texas Nat. Bank, Tex.Com.App., 37 S.W.2d 735, 740; Wawak Co. v. Kaiser, C.C.A.II., 90 F.2d 694, 697. One who has been appointed or elected to hold an office after the term of the present incumbent.

Term with reference to corporations, generally means another corporation which, through amalgamation, consolidation, or other legal succession, becomes invested with rights and assumes burdens of first corporation.

Singular successor. A term borrowed from the civil law, denoting a person who succeeds to the rights of a former owner in a single article of property (as by purchase), as distinguished from a universal successor, who succeeds to all the rights and powers of a former owner, as in the case of a bankrupt or intestate estate.

Successor in Interest. One who follows another in ownership or control of property. In order to be a "successor in interest", a party must continue to retain the same rights as original owner without change in ownership and there must be change in form only and not in substance, and transferee is not...
Successor in Interest

Successors. Those persons, other than creditors, who are entitled to property of a decedent under his will or this Code. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(42).

Successor trustee. A trustee who follows or succeeds an earlier trustee and who generally has all the powers of the earlier trustee. Trusts generally make provisions for appointment of successor trustees.

Succinct /sk5nsikt/. Brief, precise, exact.

Succurrurr minori; faciilis est lapsus juvenitis /sukshrod manoray, feslas est lipsas jowvan-t(y)wadas/. A minor is [to be] aided; a mistake of youth is easy [youth is liable to err].

Such. Of that kind, having particular quality or character specified. Identical with, being the same as what has been mentioned. Alike, similar, of the like kind. "Such" represents the object as already particularized in terms which are not mentioned, and is a descriptive and relative word, referring to the last antecedent.

Sudden. Happening without previous notice or with very brief notice; coming or occurring unexpectedly; unforeseen; unprepared for. Hagaman v. Manley, 141 Kan. 647, 42 P.2d 946, 949.

Sudden emergency doctrine. When a person finds himself confronted with a sudden emergency, which was not brought about by his own negligence or want of care, such person has the legal right to do what appears to him at the time he should do, so long as he acts in a reasonably prudent manner as other person would have done under like or similar circumstances, to avoid any injury, and if he does so act, he will not be deemed to have been negligent even though it might afterwards be apparent that some other course of action would have been safer. Swann v. Huttig Sash & Door Co., C.A.Tex., 436 F.2d 60, 62. Under sudden emergency doctrine, one placed in position of sudden emergency or peril other than by his own negligence, is not held to same degree of care and prudence as one who has time for thought and reflection. Dadds v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Del., 251 A.2d 559, 560.

Sudden heat of passion. In the common-law definition of manslaughter, this phrase means an excess of rage or anger, suddenly arising from a contemporary provocation. It means that the provocation must arise at the time of the killing, and that the passion is not the result of a former provocation, and the act must be directly caused by the passion arising out of the provocation at the time of the homicide.

Sudden or violent injury. Injury occurring unexpectedly and not naturally or in the ordinary course of events.

Sudden peril rule. Under this rule, a defendant who is guilty of primary negligence is not liable in case of sudden peril where the peril or alarm was caused by the negligence of the opposite party, apprehension of peril from the standpoint of defendant seeking to excuse his primary negligence was reasonable, and appearance of danger was so imminent as to leave no time for deliberation. White v. Munson, Tex.Civ.App., 162 S.W.2d 429, 432. But rule cannot be invoked by one bringing emergency on or not using due care, to avoid it. McClelland v. Interstate Transit Lines, 142 Neb. 439, 6 N.W.2d 384, 391. See also Sudden emergency doctrine.

Sudder /s(3)dar/. In Hindu law, the best; the forecourt of a house; the chief seat of government, distinguished from "mofussil," or interior of the country; the presidency.

Sue. To commence or to continue legal proceedings for recovery of a right; to proceed with as an action, and follow it up to its proper termination; to gain by legal process. Lervold v. Republic Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 142 Kan. 43, 45 P.2d 839, 843. To commence and carry out legal action against another. Words includes a proceeding instituted by confession of judgment. Commonwealth ex rel. Bradford County v. Lynch, 146 Pa.Super. 469, 23 A.2d 77, 78. See also Suit.

Sue out. To obtain by application; to petition for and take out. Properly the term is applied only to the obtaining and issuing of such process as is only accorded upon an application first made; but conventionally it is also used of the taking out of process which issues of course. The term is occasionally used of instruments other than writs.

Suerte /s(u)wretye/. In Spanish law, a small lot of ground. Particularly, such a lot within the limits of a city or town used for cultivation or planting as a garden, vineyard or orchard. Building lots in towns and cities are called "solares."

Suffer. To allow, to admit, or to permit. Osborne v. Winter, 133 Cal.App. 664, 24 P.2d 892. It includes knowledge of what is to be done under sufferance. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703, 709. To suffer an act to be done or a condition to exist is to permit or consent to it; to approve of it, and not to hinder it. It implies knowledge, a willingness of the mind and responsible control or ability to prevent. Wilson v. Nelson, 183 U.S. 191, 22 S. Ct. 74, 46 L.Ed. 147.

Also to have the feeling or sensation that arises from the action of something painful, distressing or the like; to feel or endure pain; to endure or undergo without sinking; to support; to bear up under; to be affected by; to sustain; to experience; to feel pain, physical or mental. The customary use of the word indicates some experience of conscious pain. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Calhoun, C.C.A.Mo., 97 F.2d 896, 898.

Sufferance /sif(o)rn(t)is/. Toleration; negative permission by not forbidding; passive consent; license implied from the omission or neglect to enforce an adverse right.
Suffrance wharves. In old English law, wharves in which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. They are appointed for the purpose by the commissioners of the customs.

Sufferecia pacis /sáférnsh(i)y)a péysas/. Lat. A grant or sufficiency of peace or truce.

Suffering a recovery. A recovery was effected by the party wishing to convey the land suffering a fictitious action to be brought against him by the party to whom the land was to be conveyed (the demandant), and allowing the demandant to recover a judgment against him for the land in question. The vendor, or conveying party, in thus assisting or permitting the demandant so to recover a judgment against him, was then technically said to "suffer a recovery."

Sufficiency of evidence. Term refers to test prescribed by rule providing that grand jury ought to find an indictment when all the evidence taken together, if unexplained or uncontradicted, would warrant a conviction by the trier of the offense. State v. Parks, Alaska, 437 P.2d 642, 644.

Barring plain error, an appellate court may not grant a directed verdict or a judgment n. o. v. absent an appropriate motion in the trial court; that is to say, it may not review the "sufficiency of the evidence" and grant a final judgment in favor of a party who failed to so move; and "sufficiency" is a term of art meaning that legal standard which is applied to determine whether the case may go to the jury or whether the evidence is legally sufficient to support the jury verdict as a matter of law. Urti v. Transport Commercial Corp., C.A.La., 479 F.2d 786, 769.

See also Substantial evidence; Sufficient evidence.

Sufficient. Adequate, enough, as much as may be necessary, equal or fit for end proposed, and that which may be necessary to accomplish an object. Of such quality, number, force, or value as to serve a need or purpose. Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 328. As to sufficient Consideration see that title.

Sufficient cause. With respect to right to remove officers does not mean any cause which removing officer may deem sufficient, but means legal cause, specifically relating to and affecting administration of office, of substantial nature directly affecting public's rights and interests, touching officer's qualifications or his performance of duties, and showing that he is not fit or proper to hold office. Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co. v. Kinsler, 12 Cal.2d 98, 81 P.2d 913, 915. Sufficient cause to hold defendant to answer charges is reasonable or probable cause or that state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution to conscientiously entertain strong suspicion of defendant's guilt. People v. Upton, 257 Cal.App.2d 677, 65 Cal.Rptr. 103, 109. See also Probable cause.

Sufficient evidence. Adequate evidence; such evidence, in character, weight, or amount, as will legally justify the judicial or official action demanded; according to circumstances, it may be "prima facie" or "satisfactory" evidence. Sufficient evidence is that which is satisfactory for the purpose; that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind, beyond a reasonable doubt. The term is not synonymous with "conclusive," but it may be used interchangeably with the term "weight of evidence." See also Burden of proof; Evidence; Satisfactory evidence; Substantial evidence; Sufficiency of evidence.

Suffocate. To kill by stopping respiration, as by strangling or asphyxiation.

Suffragan /sáfrajan/. Bishops who in former times were appointed to supply the place of others during their absence on embassies or other business were so termed. They were consecrated as other bishops were, and were anciently called "chorepiscopi," or "bishops of the county," in contradistinction to the regular bishops of the city or see. The practice of creating suffragan bishops, after having long been discontinued, was recently revived; and such bishops are now permanently "assistant" to the bishops.

A suffragan is a titular bishop ordained to aid and assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual function; or one who supplieth the place instead of the bishop, by whose suffrage ecclesiastical causes or matters committed to him are to be adjudged, acted on, or determined.

Suffrage /sáfraj/. A vote; the act of voting; the right of privilege of casting a vote at public elections. The last is the meaning of the term in such phrases as "the extension of the suffrage," "universal suffrage," etc. Right of "suffrage" is right of a man to vote for whom he pleases. Waterbury Homeowners Ass'n v. City of Waterbury, 28 Conn.Sup. 295, 259 A.2d 650, 654.

Suffragium /sáfryj(i)yam/. Lat. In Roman law, a vote; the right of voting in the assemblies of the people.

Suggestion of error. Request for rehearing. See also Objection.
Suggestive Interrogation. A phrase used by some writers to signify "leading question." It is so used in the French law. See Leading question.

Suicide. Self-destruction; the deliberate termination of one's existence.

Attempted suicide is a crime in some jurisdictions, not in others. Some jurisdictions hold an attempted suicide which kills an innocent bystander would be rescuer to be murder, others manslaughter, others no crime. Some jurisdictions hold it to be murder for one person to persuade or aid another to commit suicide; some (by statute) make it manslaughter or a separate crime.

Sul generis /s(y)uway jénı̃ras/. Lat. Of its own kind or class; i.e., the only one of its own kind; peculiar.

Sul heredes /s(y)uway harsı̃diz/. Lat. In the civil law, one's own heirs; proper heirs.

Sul juris /s(y)uway jı̃ras/. Lat. Of his own right; possessing full social and civil rights; not under any legal disability, or the power of another, or guardianship.

Having capacity to manage one's own affairs; not under legal disability to act for one's self.

Suing and laboring clause. A clause in an English policy of marine insurance, generally in the following form: "In case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful for the assured, their factors, servants and assigns, to sue, labor, and travel for, in, and about the defense, safeguard, and recovery of the property insured, "without prejudice to this insurance; to the charges whereof we, the assured, will contribute." The object of the clause is to encourage the assured to exert themselves in preserving the property from loss.

Suit. A generic term, of comprehensive signification, referring to any proceeding by one person or persons against another or others in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues, in such court, the remedy which the law affords him for the redress of an injury or the enforcement of a right, whether at law or in equity. Kohl v. U. S., 91 U.S. 367, 375, 23 L.Ed. 449; Weston v. Charleston, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 449, 464, 7 L.Ed. 481; Syracuse Plaster Co. v. Agostini Bros. Bldg. Corporation, 169 Misc. 564, 7 N.Y. S. 2d 897. It is, however, seldom applied to a criminal prosecution. And it was formerly sometimes restricted to the designation of a proceeding in equity, to distinguish such proceeding from an action at law. Term "suit" has generally been replaced by term "action"; which includes both actions at law and in equity. Fed.R.Civ. P. 2. For "Ancillary" suit and suit "In Rem" see those titles. Also See Action; Proceeding.

Old English law. The witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. 3 Bl.Comm. 295. See Secta.

Old books mention the word in many connections which are now disused,—at least, in the United States. Thus, "suit" was used of following any one, or in the sense of pursuit; as in the phrase "making fresh suit." It was also used of a petition to the king or lord. "Suit of court" was the attendance which a tenant owed at the court of his lord. "Suit covenant" and "suit custom" seem to have signified a right to one's attendance, or one's obligation to attend, at the lord's court, founded upon a known covenant, or an immemorial usage or practice of ancestors. "Suit regal" was attendance at the sheriff's tourn or leet (his court). "Suit of the king's peace" was pursuing an offender—one charged with breach of the peace, while "suithold" was a tenure in consideration of certain services to the superior lord.

Class suits. See Class or representative action.

Derivative suit. See Stockholder's derivative action.

Suit against state. Suit in which relief against the state is sought. See Sovereign immunity; Tort claims acts.

Suit money. Counsel fees allowed or awarded by court to party. An allowance, in the nature of temporary alimony, authorized by statute in some states to be made to a wife on the institution of her suit for divorce, intended to cover the reasonable expenses of the suit and to provide her with means for the efficient preparation and trial of her case. Many federal statutes provide for allowance of attorney fees for actions brought under respective statutes; e.g., actions to recover social security disability benefits.

Suits or proceedings at law or in chancery. Suits instituted and carried on in substantial conformity with the forms and modes prescribed by the common law or by the rules in chancery excluding cases instituted and carried on solely in accordance with statutory provisions. Under current rules practice in the federal and most state courts, there is now only one form of action called a "civil action", which embraces both actions at law and in equity. Fed.R.Civ. P. 2.

Suitable. Fit and appropriate for the end in view.

Suitas. Lat. In the civil law, the condition or quality of a suus heres, or proper heir.

Suite. Those persons who by his authority follow or attend an ambassador or other public minister.

Suitor. A party who brings an action; a petitioner; a plaintiff. In its ancient sense, "suitor" meant one who was bound to attend the county court; also one who formed part of the secta.

Suitors' deposit account. Formerly suitors in the English court of chancery derived no income from their cash paid into court, unless it was invested at their request and risk. Now, however, it is provided by the court of chancery (funds) act, 1872, that all money paid into court, and not required by the suitor to be invested, shall be placed on deposit and shall bear interest at two per cent. per annum for the benefit of the suitor entitled to it.

Suitors' fee fund. A fund in the English court of chancery into which the fees of suitors in that court were paid, and out of which the salaries of various officers of the court were defrayed.

Sulcus /súlkas/. In old English law, a small brook or stream of water.

Sullery /súlri/. In old English law, a plowland.

Sum. In English law, a summary or abstract; a compendium; a collection. Several of the old law treatises are called "sums." Lord Hale applies the term to summaries of statute law.

The sense in which the term is most commonly used is "money"; a quantity of money or currency; any amount indefinitely, a sum of money, a small sum, or a large sum. U. S. v. Van Auken, 96 U.S. 366, 368, 24 L.Ed. 952.

Sumage /súmáj/. Toll for carriage on horseback.

Sum certain. In law of negotiable instruments, the sum payable is a sum certain even though it is to be paid (a) with stated interest or by stated installments; or (b) with stated different rates of interest before and after default or a specified date; or (c) with a stated discount or addition if paid before or after the date fixed for payment; or (d) with exchange or less exchange, whether at a fixed rate or at the current rate; or (e) with costs of collection or an attorney's fee or both upon default. U.C.C. § 3–106(1).

Sum. In gross. See In gross.

Summa caritas est facere Justitiam singulis, et omni tempore quando necesse fuerit /sáma káritas ét faséry jástish(iy)am singyvalas, êd ómnay témpariy kwándow násésiy fúywárat/. The greatest charity is to do justice to every one, and at any time whenever it may be necessary.

Summa est lex qua pro religione facit /sáma ét léks kwíy prów rálýjóywní féyssat/. That is the highest law which favors religion.

Summa ratio est que pro religione fact /sáma réysh(iy)ow ét kwíy prów rálýjóywní féyssat/. That consideration is strongest which determines in favor of religion.

Summarily. Without ceremony or delay, short or concise.

Summary, n. An abridgment; brief; compendium; digest; also a short application to a court or judge, without the formality of a full proceeding.

Summary, adj. Short; concise; immediate; peremptory; off-hand; without a jury; provisional; statutory. The term as used in connection with legal proceedings means a short, concise, and immediate proceeding.

Summary conviction. See Conviction.

Summary courts martial. See Court-Martial.

Summary ejection. See Process (Summary process).

Summary eviction. See Process (Summary process).

Summary jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forthwith; e.g., to commit to prison for contempt. In the case of justices of the peace, a jurisdiction to convict an offender themselves instead of committing him for trial by a jury.

Summary proceeding. See Proceeding (Summary).

Summary, trial. See Proceeding (Summary).

Summary process. See Process.

Summary judgment. Rule of Civil Procedure 56 permits any party to a civil action to move for a summary judgment on a claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim when he believes that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that he is entitled to prevail as a matter of law. The motion may be directed toward all or part of a claim or defense and it may be made on the basis of the pleadings or other portions of the record in the case or it may be supported by affidavits and a variety of outside material. See also Genuine issue; Material fact.

Summation. See Summing up.

Summing up. On the trial of an action by a jury, a recapitulation of the evidence adduced, in order to draw the attention of the jury to the salient points. The counsel for each party has the right of summing up his evidence, if he has adduced any, and the judge sometimes sums up the whole in his charge to the jury. See Closing argument.

Summon. To serve a summons; to cite a defendant to appear in court to answer a suit which has been begun against him; to notify the defendant that an action has been instituted against him, and that he is required to answer to it at a time and place named. See Summons.

Summonas /sámównlíyeyys/. L. Lat. In old practice, a writ of summons; a writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court.

Summoners /sámánarz/. Petty officers, who cite and warn persons to appear in any court.

Summonitio /sámáñiš(ty)ow/. L. Lat. In old English practice, a summoning or summons; a writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court, of which there were various kinds.

Summonitiones aut citationes nullae liceant fieri intra palatium regis /sámáñiššýówôníyż ót säytéshshýówôníyž nály lísiyént fáyšárá yntro páléýsh(ly)am rýjjas/. Let no summonses or citations be served within the king's palace.

Summonitores scaccaril /sámáñatóríyž skókéríyay/. Officers who assisted in collecting the revenues by citing the defaulters therein into the court of exchequer.

Summons. Instrument used to commence a civil action or special proceeding and is a means of acquiring jurisdiction over a party. In re Dell, 56 Misc.2d 1017, 290 N.Y.S.2d 287, 289. Writ or process directed to the sheriff or other proper officer, requiring him to notify the person named that an action has been commenced against him in the court from where the process issues, and that he is required to appear, on a day named, and answer the complaint in such action. Upon the filing of the complaint the clerk is required to issue a summons and deliver it for service to the marshal or to a person specially appointed to serve it. Fed.R.Civil P. 4(a). See also Alias summons. Form and content of summons. The summons shall be signed by the clerk, be under the seal of the court, contain the name of the court and the names of the parties, be directed to the defendant, state the name and address of the plaintiff’s attorney, if any, otherwise the plaintiff’s address, and the time within which these rules require the defendant to appear and defend, and shall notify him that in case of his failure to do so judgment by default will be rendered against him for the relief demanded in the complaint. When service is made pursuant to a statute or rule of court of a state, the summons, or notice, or order in lieu of summons shall correspond as nearly as may be to that required by the statute or rule. Fed.R.Civil P. 4(b).

Summons ad respondendum /sán(m)dz ãd réspóndéndám/. Process issued in a civil case at law notifying defendant therein named that he must appear on day designated and thereupon make answer to plaintiff’s statement of his cause of action.

Summons and order. In English practice, the summons is the application to a common-law judge at chambers in reference to a pending action, and upon it the judge or master makes the order.

Summum jus /sámam já/. Lat. Strict right; extreme right. The extremity or rigor of the law. See Apex Juris.

Summum jus, summa Injuria; summa lex, summa crux /sámam já, sámá injúriya; sámá léks, sámá kráks/. Extreme law (rigor of law) is the greatest injury; strict law is great punishment. That is, insistence upon the full measure of a man’s strict legal rights may work the greatest injury to others, unless equity can aid.

Summer. See Sumpnour.

Sum payable. As used within negotiable instruments law is the amount for which, by the terms of the instrument, the maker becomes liable, and which he might tender and pay in full satisfaction of his obligation.

Sumptuary laws /sám(p)chuwarly láw/. Laws made for the purpose of restraining luxury or extravagance, particularly against inordinate expenditures in the matter of apparel, food, furniture, etc.

Sunday. The first day of the week is designated by this name; also as the “Lord’s Day,” and as the “Sabbath.”

For Work of necessity, see Necessity.

Sunday closing laws. Those laws and ordinances in many jurisdictions which prohibit businesses from operating on Sunday. Also called “blue laws.”

Sundries. Miscellaneous or various items which may be considered together, without being separately specified or identified.

Sundry. Separate, divers, or various.

Sunset law. Statute which requires administrative bodies to justify periodically their existence to legislature.

Sunshine law. Law which requires open meetings of governmental agencies and departments. See also Freedom of Information Act.

Suo nomine /s(y)uwpó no mániy/. Lat. In his own name.

Suo periculo /s(y)uwpó perik(y)ólu/. Lat. At his own peril or risk.

Super /s(y)uwpá/. Lat. Upon; above; over; higher, as in quantity, quality and degree; more than; as in super-essential, super-natural or super-standard.

Super altum mare /s(y)uwpá áltám méry/. On the high sea.

Supercargo /s(y)uwpápárákógow/. In maritime law, a person specially employed by the owner of a cargo to take charge of and sell to the best advantage merchandise which has been shipped, and to purchase returning cargoes and to receive freight, as he may be authorized.

Superficialis /s(y)uwpópíshílyíyíyá/. Lat. In the civil law, he who has built upon the soil of another, which he has hired for a number of years or forever, yielding a yearly rent. In other words, a tenant on ground-rent.

Superficies /s(y)uwpópíshílyíyí/. Lat. In the civil law, the alienation by the owner of the surface of the soil of all rights necessary for building on the surface, a yearly rent being generally reserved; also a building or erection.

Superficies solo cedit /s(y)uwpópíshílyíyíyí sólow síydt/. Whatever is attached to the land forms part of it.

Super fidem chartarum, mortuis testibus, erit ad parentes /s(y)uwpó fándam kártéram, mórchiwás téstabs, éhrad ád pátriyám dïy nasbátydíly rékahréndam/. The truth of charters is necessarily to be referred to a jury, when the witnesses are dead.

Superfluia non nocent /s(y)uwpárfílyíyíyí yuwa nón nósmínt/. Superfluities do not prejudice. Surplusage does not vitiate.

Superinductio /s(y)uwpóndišksh(y)ów/. Lat. In the civil law, a species of obliteration.

Superinstitution. The institution of one in an office to which another has been previously instituted; as where A. is admitted and instituted to a benefice upon one title, and B. is admitted and instituted on the title or presentment of another.

A church being full by institution, if a second institution is granted to the same church this is a super-institution.

Superintend. To have charge and direction of; to direct the course and oversee the details; to regulate with authority; to manage; to oversee with the power of direction; to take care of with authority.

Superintendent. One who superintends or has the oversight and charge of something with the power of direction; a manager.

Superior, n. One who has a right to command; one who holds a superior rank.

Superior, adj. Higher; belonging to a higher grade. People ex rel. McCoy v. McCahey, 296 Ill.App. 310, 15 N.E.2d 988, 993. More elevated in rank or office. Possessing larger power. Entitled to command, influence, or control over another.

In estates, some are superior to others. An estate entitled to a servitude or easement over another estate is called the "superior" or "dominant," and the other, the "inferior" or "servient," estate. In the feudal law, until the statute quia emptores precluded subinfeudations (q.v.), the tenant who granted part of his estate to be held of and from himself as lord was called a "superior."

Superior courts. Courts of general or extensive jurisdiction, as distinguished from the inferior courts. As the official style of a tribunal, the term "superior court" bears a different meaning in different states. In some it is a court of intermediate jurisdiction between the trial courts and the chief appellate court; elsewhere it is the designation of the trial courts. See also Court.

Superior fellow servant. A term introduced into the law of negligence, and meaning one higher in authority than another, and whose commands and directions his inferiors are bound to respect and obey, though engaged at the same line of work.

Superior force. In the law of bailments and of negligence, an uncontrollable and irresistible force, of human agency, producing results which the person in question could not avoid; equivalent to the Latin phrase "vis major." See Vis.

Superjurare /s(y)uwparjureriy/. Over-swearing. A term anciently used when a criminal endeavored to excuse himself by his own oath or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious that he was convicted on the oaths of many more witnesses.

Supernumerarii /s(y)uwparnumarriyay/. Lat. In Roman law, advocates who were not registered or enrolled and did not belong to the college of advocates. They were not attached to any local jurisdiction. See Statuti.

Superoneratione pasture /s(y)uwpardnareyshiyow/. A writ which lay against him who was so plain and notorious that he was convicted on the oaths of many more witnesses.

Superprerogativa regis /s(y)uwpar prarogatiyva riyjyas/. A writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the royal license.

Super plusagium /s(y)uwparplusayj(iy)am/. In old English law, overplus; surplus; residue or balance.

Super prorogativa regis /s(y)uwpar prarogatiyva riyjyas/. A writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the royal license.

Super persuade /s(y)uwparpsydy/. Obliterate, set aside, annul, replace, make void, inefficacious or useless, repeal. To set aside, render unnecessary, suspend, or stay.

Supersedeas /s(y)uwparseydias/. The name of a writ containing a command to stay the proceedings at law. A suspension of the power of a trial court to issue an execution on judgment appealed from, or, if writ of execution has issued, it is a prohibition emanating from court of appeal against execution of writ. Stewart v. Hurt, 9 Cal.2d 39, 68 P.2d 726, 727. An auxiliary process designed to supersede enforcement of trial court's judgment brought up for review, and its application is limited to the judgment from which an appeal is taken. Mascot Pictures Corp. v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, 3 Cal.App.2d 559, 40 P.2d 272.

Originally it was a writ directed to an officer, commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute, or which might come in his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymously with a "stay of proceedings," and is employed to designate the effect of an act or proceeding which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment.

Supersedes bond. A bond required of one who petitions to set aside a judgment or execution and from which the other party may be made whole if the action is unsuccessful. See Fed.R.Civil P. 62; Fed. R.App.P. 7 and 8.

Superseding cause. An act of a third person or other force which by its intervention prevents the actor from being liable for harm to another which his antecedent negligence is a substantial factor in bringing about. An intervening act or acts of negligence which operate to insulate an antecedent tort-feasor from liability for negligently causing a dangerous condition which results in injury. Hargrove v. Frommeyer & Co., 229 Pa.Super. 298, 323 A.2d 500, 304. See also Intervening cause; Supernervening negligence.

Super statuto /s(y)uwpar stat(y)uwdow/. A writ, upon the statute 1 Edw. III, c. 12, that lay against the king's tenant holding in chief, who aliened the king's land without his license.

Super statuto de articulis clericorum /s(y)uwpar stat(y)uwdow die artikylays kliray/. A writ which lay against a sheriff or other officer who distrained in the king's highway, or on lands anciently belonging to the church.

Super statuto factum pro seneschal et marshal de roya, etc. /s(y)uwpar stat(y)uwdow faktow pür sênashal ey már(a)s hál da róy, étsédáy/. A writ which lay against a steward or marshal for holding plea in his court, or for trespass or contracts not made or arising within the king's household.

Super statuto versus servantes et laborantes /s(y)uwpar stat(y)uwdow várass servántiyyz et láhrbártiyyz/. A writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another contrary to law.

Superstitious use. In English law, when lands, tenements, rents, goods, or chattels are given, secured, or appointed for and towards the maintenance of a priest or other man to pray for the soul of any dead man in such a church or elsewhere, to have and maintain perpetual obits, lamps, torches, etc., to be used at certain times to help to save the souls of men out of purgatory,—in such cases the king, by force of several statutes, is authorized to direct and appoint all such uses to such purposes as are truly charitable.
The doctrine has no recognition in this country; and a bequest to support a Catholic priest, and perhaps other uses void in England, would not be considered as superstitious uses.

Supervening cause. A new effective cause which, operating independently of anything else, becomes proximate cause of accident. See also Intervening cause; Superseding cause.

Supervening negligence. To come within the doctrine of last clear chance or supervening negligence, four conditions must coexist, to wit: (1) the injured party has already come into a position of peril; (2) the injuring party then or thereafter becomes, or in the exercise of ordinary prudence ought to have become, aware, not only of that fact, but also that the party in peril either reasonably cannot escape from it or apparently will not avail himself of opportunities open to him for doing so; (3) the injuring party subsequently has the opportunity by the exercise of reasonable care to save the other from harm; and (4) he fails to exercise such care. See also Intervening cause; Last clear chance doctrine; Superseding cause.

Supervise. To have general oversight over, to superintend or to inspect. See Supervisor.

Supervision. An act of occupation of supervising; inspection.

Supervisor. A surveyor or overseer. Also, in some states, the chief officer of a town; one of a board of county officers.

Superintend, to superintend and direct.

Supplementary proceedings. Proceedings supplementary to an execution, directed to the discovery of the debtor's property and its application to the debt for which the execution is issued. They are purely statutory, are in the nature of a creditor's bill for the collection of a judgment or tax, and are proceedings in personam and not in rem. See also Proceeding.

Supplementary pleadings. Proceedings supplementary to an execution, directed to the recovery of the debtor's property and its application to the debt for which the execution is issued. They are purely statutory, are in the nature of a creditor's bill for the collection of a judgment or tax, and are proceedings in personam and not in rem. See also Proceeding.

Supplementary bill. In equity pleading, a bill filed in addition to an original bill, in order to supply some defect in its original frame or structure which cannot be supplied by amendment; or, for purpose of bringing into controversy matter occurring after original bill was filed.

Supplementary bill in nature of bill of review. A type of bill employed to invoke jurisdiction of court of chancery to recall one of its adjudications made while some fact existed which, if before court, would have prevented rendition of final decree, and which, without negligence of party presenting it, was not earlier presented to chancellor.

Supplemental bill. A further claim which was filed when further relief was sought after the bringing of a claim. See Supplemental complaint.

Supplemental complaint. Under the Rules of Civil Procedure in the federal and most state courts, a complaint filed in an action to bring to the notice of the court and the opposite party matters occurring after the commencement of action and which may affect the rights asserted. Fed.R.Civil P. 15(d).

Supplemental pleading. One consisting of facts arising since filing of the original. Supplemental pleadings relate to occurrences, transactions and events which may have happened since the date of the pleadings sought to be supplemented. Fed.R.Civil P. 15(d); McKnight v. McKnight, 25 N.C.App. 246, 212 S.E.2d 902, 904.

Supplemental. Added as a supplement; additional; being, or serving as, a supplement.

Supplementary proceedings. Proceedings supplementary to an execution, directed to the discovery of the debtor's property and its application to the debt for which the execution is issued. They are purely statutory, are in the nature of a creditor's bill for the collection of a judgment or tax, and are proceedings in personam and not in rem. See also Proceeding.

Furnishing funds or means for maintenance, v.

Supplies. Means of provision or relief; stores; available aggregate of things needed or demanded in amount sufficient for a given use or purpose; accumulated stores reserved for distribution; sufficiency for use or need; a quantity of something supplied or on hand.

In English law, in parliamentary proceedings the sums of money which are annually voted by the house of commons for the maintenance of the crown and the various public services.

Supply. To furnish with what is wanted; available aggregate of things needed or demanded; anything yielded or afforded to meet a want; and the act of furnishing with what is wanted. Clayton v. Bridgeport Mach. Co., Tex.Civ.App. 33 S.W.2d 787, 789.

Support, v. Furnishing funds or means for maintenance; to maintain; to provide for; to enable to continue; to carry on. To provide a means of livelihood. To vindicate, to maintain, to defend, to uphold with aid or countenance.

Support, n. That which furnishes a livelihood; a source or means of living; subsistence, sustenance, or living. In a broad sense the term includes all such means of living as would enable one to live in the degree of comfort suitable and becoming to his station of life. It is said to include anything requisite to housing, feeding, clothing, health, proper recreation, vacation, traveling expense, or other proper cognate purposes; also, proper care, nursing, and medical attendance in sickness, and suitable burial at death. See also Maintenance.

Support also signifies the right to have one’s ground supported so that it will not cave in, when an adjoining owner makes an excavation. This support is of two kinds, lateral and subjacent. Lateral support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies next to it. Subjacent support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies under it.

See also Family expense statutes; Legal duty; Legal obligation; Maintenance; Necessaries; Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act; Separate maintenance; Nonsupport.

Crime of non-support. A person commits a misdemeanor if he persistently fails to provide support which he can provide and which he knows he is legally obliged to provide to a spouse, child or other dependent. Model Penal Code, Section 230.5.

Ground for divorce. Non-support of spouse, if able to so provide, is a ground for divorce under many state statutes.

Legal duty. Most all states have statutes which impose obligation to support spouse and children; e.g. “Every individual shall support his or her spouse and child, and shall support his or her parent when in need.” Calif.Civil Code, § 242.

Interstate enforcement. The majority of states have adopted the “Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act” as a means of interstate enforcement of support obligations.

Supposition. A conjecture based upon possibility or probability that a thing could or may have occurred, without proof that it did occur.

Suppress. To put a stop to a thing actually existing; to prohibit, put down; to prevent, subdue, or end by force. To “suppress evidence” is to keep it from being used in a trial by showing that it was either gathered illegally or that it is irrelevant. See Suppression hearing; Suppression of evidence.

Suppression. Conscious effort to control and conceal unacceptable impulses, thoughts, feelings or acts.

Suppression hearing. A pretrial proceeding in criminal cases in which a defendant seeks to prevent the introduction of evidence alleged to have been seized illegally. The ruling of the court then prevails at the trial.

Suppression of evidence. The ruling of a trial judge to the effect that evidence sought to be admitted should be excluded because it was illegally acquired. Motions to suppress illegally obtained evidence are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b) and 41(f). See also Motion to suppress.

The crime of compounding a felony by refusing to give evidence or to testify in a criminal proceeding.

Concept of “suppression” as that term is used in the rules that suppression by the prosecution of material evidence favorable to an accused on request violates due process, implies that the government has information in its possession of which the defendant lacks knowledge and which the defendant would benefit from knowing. U. S. v. Natale, C.A.N.Y., 526 F.2d 1160, 1170. See also Withholding of evidence.

Suppresio veri /supres(i)yow víray/. Lat. Suppression or concealment of the truth. It is a rule of equity, as well as of law, that a suppressio veri is equivalent to a suggestio falsi; and where either the suppression of the truth or the suggestion of what is false can be proved, in a fact material to the contract, the party injured may have relief against the contract.

Suppresio veri, expressio falsi /supres(i)yow víray, åksesprésh(i)yow fölt(t)say/. Suppression of the truth is [equivalent to] the expression of what is false.

Suppresio veri, suggestio falsi /supres(i)yow víray, ågensjësh(i)yow fölt(t)say/. Suppression of the truth is [equivalent to] the suggestion of what is false.

Supra /s(y)úwp/pr/. Lat. Above; upon. This word occurring by itself in a book refers the reader to a previous part of the book, like “ante;” it is also the initial word of several Latin phrases.

Supra protest /s(y)úwp/pr próvˈtɛst/. See Protest.
SUPRA-RIPARIAN

Supra-riparian /s(y)úwpra-rapériyan/. Upper riparian; higher up the stream. This term is applied to the estate, rights, or duties of a riparian proprietor whose land is situated at a point nearer the source of the stream than the estate with which it is compared.

Supremacy. The state of being supreme, or in the highest station of power; paramount authority; sovereignty; sovereign power.

Act of supremacy. The English statute 1 Eliz., c. 1, whereby the supremacy and autonomy of the crown in spiritual or ecclesiastical matters was declared and established.

Oath of supremacy. An oath to uphold the supreme power of the kingdom of England in the person of the reigning sovereign.

Supremacy clause. The clause of Art. VI of the U.S. Constitution which declares that all laws made in pursuance of the Constitution and all treaties made under the authority of the United States shall be the "supreme law of the land" and shall enjoy legal superiority over any conflicting provision of a State constitution or law. See also Preemption.

Suprema potestas seipsam dissolvere potest /saprýma potéstas siyýpam dzóźávay pówdas/. Supreme power can dissolve itself.

Supreme. Superior to all other things.

Supreme court. An appellate court existing in most of the states. In the federal court system, and in most states, it is the highest appellate court or court of last resort. In others (such as New York) the supreme court is a court of general original jurisdiction, possessing also (in New York) some appellate jurisdiction, but not the court of last resort. See also Court of Appeals.

Supreme court of errors. Formerly, the court of last resort in Connecticut, now called "Supreme Court".

Supreme Court of the United States. The U.S. Supreme Court comprises the Chief Justice of the United States and such number of Associate Justices as may be fixed by Congress. Under that authority, and by virtue of the act of June 25, 1948 (62 Stat. 869; 28 U.S.C.A. 1), the number of Associate Justices is eight. Power to nominate the Justices is vested in the President of the United States, and appointments are made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Article III, section 1, of the Constitution further provides that "the Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office."

Supreme Judicial Court. Highest appellate court in Maine and Massachusetts.

Supreme law of the land. See Supremacy clause.

Supreme power. The highest authority in a state, all other powers in it being inferior thereto.

Supremus /saprýmas/. Lat. Last; the last.

Supremus est quem nemo sequitur /saprymás êst kwém nýmow sèkwád/. He is last whom no one follows.

Sur /sár/syúr/. Fr. On; upon; over. In the titles of real actions "sur" was used to point out what the writ was founded upon. Thus, a real action brought by the owner of a reversion or seigniory, in certain cases where his tenant repudiated his tenure, was called "a writ of right sur disclaimer"; So, a writ of entry sur disseisin was a real action to recover the possession of land from a disseisor.

Surcharge, n. An overcharge; an exaction, impost, or encumbrance beyond what is just and right, or beyond one’s authority or power. Term may also refer to a second or further mortgage.

The amount with which a court may charge a fiduciary who has breached his trust through intentional or negligent conduct. The imposition of personal liability on a fiduciary for such conduct.

An additional tax or cost. Overprint on a stamp that changes the denomination. See Surtax.

Surcharge, v. The imposition of personal liability on a fiduciary for wilful or negligent misconduct in the administration of his fiduciary duties.

In equity practice, to show that a particular item, in favor of the party surcharging, ought to have been included, but was not, in an account which is alleged to be settled or complete. To prove the omission of an item from an account which is before the court as complete, which should be inserted to the credit of the party surcharging. Perkins v. Hart, 24 U.S. 237, 6 L.Ed. 463.

The imposition of an additional tax, impost, or cost. See Surtax.

In old English law, to put more cattle upon a common than the herbage will sustain or than the party has a right to do. 3 Bl.Comm. 237.

Second surcharge. In old English law, the surcharge of a common a second time, by the same defendant against whom the common was before admeasured, and for which the writ of second surcharge was given by the statute of Westminster, 2. 3 Bl.Comm. 239.

Surcharge and falsity. This phrase, as used in the courts of chancery, denotes the liberty which these courts will occasionally grant to a plaintiff, who disputes an account which the defendant alleges to be settled, to scrutinize particular items therein without opening the entire account. The showing an item for which credit ought to have been given, but was not, is to surcharge the account; the proving an item to have been inserted wrongly is to falsity the account.

Sur cul ante divortium /sár k(yuw)jáy ëntiý dávrósh(y)um/. See Cul ante divortium.

Sur cul in vita /sár k(yuw)jáy in váyda/. A writ that lay for the heir of a woman whose husband had aliened her land in fee, and she had omitted to bring the writ of cul in vita for the recovery thereof; in which case her heir might have this writ against the tenant after her decease. See Cul in vita.

Sur disclaimer /sár daskléýmár/. A writ in the nature of a writ of right brought by the lord against a tenant who had claimed his tenure, to recover the land.

Surdus /sárds/. Lat. In the civil law, dead; a dead person. Surdus et mutus, a deaf and dumb person.
Surechère /syurɔ̃ˈʃɛʁ/. In French law, a party desirous of repurchasing property at auction before the court, can, by offering one-tenth or one-sixth, according to the case, in addition to the price realized at the sale, oblige the property to be put up once more at auction. This bid upon a bid is called a “surechère.”

Surety. One who undertakes to pay money or to do any other act in event that his principal fails therein. One bound with his principal for the payment of a sum of money or for the performance of some duty or promise and who is entitled to be indemnified by some one who ought to have paid or performed if payment or performance be enforced against him. Everyone who incurs a liability in person or estate, for the benefit of another, without sharing in the consideration, stands in the position of a “surety,” whatever may be the form of his obligation. Howell v. War Finance Corp., C.C.A.Ariz., 71 F.2d 237, 243. Term includes a guarantor. U.C.C. § 1-201(40). See also Suretyship, contract of.

Guarantor and surety compared. A surety and guarantor have this in common, that they are both bound for another person; yet there are points of difference between them. A surety is usually bound with his principal by the same instrument, executed at the same time and on the same consideration. He is an original promisor and debtor from the beginning, and is held ordinarily to every known default of his principal. On the other hand, the contract of guarantor is his own separate undertaking, in which the principal does not join. It is usually entered into before or after that of the principal, and is often founded on a separate consideration from that supporting the contract of the principal. The original contract of the principal is not the guarantor’s contract, and the guarantor is not bound to take notice of its nonperformance. The surety joins in the same promise as his principal and is primarily liable; the guarantor makes a separate and individual promise and is only secondarily liable. His liability is contingent on the default of his principal, and he only becomes absolutely liable when such default takes place and he is notified thereof. “Surety” and “guarantor” are both answerable for debt, default, or miscarriage of another, but liability of guarantor is, strictly speaking, secondary and collateral, while that of surety is original, primary, and direct. In case of suretyship there is but one contract, and surety is bound by the same agreement which binds his principal, while in case of guaranty there are two contracts, and guarantor is bound by independent undertaking. Howell v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.8, 69 F.2d 447, 450. A surety is an insurer of the debt or obligation; a guarantor is an insurer of the solvency of the principal debtor or of his ability to pay. Under U.C.C., term “surety” includes a guarantor. § 1-201(40). See also Guarantor.

Surety bond. See Bond.

Surety company. A company, usually incorporated, whose business is to assume the responsibility of a surety on the bonds of officers, trustees, executors, guardians, etc., in consideration of a fee proportioned to the amount of the security required.

Surety Insurance. This phrase is generally used as synonymous with “guaranty insurance.”

Surety of the peace. A species of preventive justice, and consists in obliging those persons whom there is a probable ground to suspect of future misbehavior, to stipulate with, and to give full assurance to, the public that such offense as is apprehended shall not take place, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace, or for their good behavior.

Suretyship, contract of. Contract whereby one party engages to be answerable for debt, default, or miscarriage of another and arises when one is liable to pay debt or discharge obligation, and party is entitled to indemnity from person who should have made the payment in the first instance before surety was so compelled. A contract whereby one person engages to be answerable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. An accessory promise by which a person binds himself for another already bound, and agrees with the creditor to satisfy the obligation, if the debtor does not. A lending of credit to aid a principal having insufficient credit of his own; the one expected to pay, having the primary obligation, being the “principals,” and the one bound to pay, if the principal does not, being the “surety.” See also Surety.

Surface. This term, when used in law, is seldom, if ever, limited to mere geometrical superficies, although when used without any qualifying phrase in a deed, it ordinarily signifies only the superficial part of land. And when employed in connection with mining, it usually means that part of the earth or geologic section lying over the minerals in question, unless the contract or conveyance otherwise defines it. Thus, where the surface is granted to one and the underlying coal to another, the “surface” includes the soil and waters which lie above and are superincumbent on the coal. Nevertheless, a conveyance of the “surface,” except the oil and gas rights in the land, may be deemed, under certain circumstances, to constitute a conveyance of all the land (including coal deposits), except only the oil and gas rights specifically reserved.

The term “surface,” when used as the subject of a conveyance, is not a definite one capable of a definition of universal application, but is susceptible of limitation according to the intention of the parties using it; and in determining its meaning, regard may be had, not only to the language of the deed in which it occurs, but, also to the situation of the parties, the business in which they were engaged, and to the substance of the transaction.

Surface waters. See Water.

Surgeon. One whose profession or occupation is to cure diseases, defects, or injuries of the body by manual operation; one who practices surgery.

Surgery. Greek words signifying the hand and work. Originally, it was part of the profession of barbers, but later was taken up by physicians and now is recognized as that branch of medical science which treats of mechanical or operative measures for healing diseases, deformities, or injuries. State ex rel. Beck v. Gleason, 148 Kan. 1, 79 P.2d 911.
The practice of medicine, in contradistinction to the practice of surgery, denotes the treatment of disease by the administration of drugs or other sanative substances. There cannot however be a complete separation between the practice of medicine and surgery; the principles of both are the same throughout, and no one is qualified to practice either who does not properly understand the fundamental principles of both.

Surmise. Idea based on weak evidence, conjecture.

Surmised. Upon a mortgage. In ecclesiastical law, an allegation in a libel. A collateral surmise is a surmise of some fact not appearing in the libel.

Surplus. That which remains of a fund appropriated for a particular purpose; the remainder of a thing; the overplus; the residue. Ordinarily, surplus means residue of assets after liabilities, including capital, have been deducted. American Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Love, Mo., 431 S.W.2d 177, 180.

The surplus of a corporation may mean either the net assets of the corporation in excess of all liabilities including capital stock, Winkelman v. General Motors Corp., D.C.N.Y., 44 F. Supp. 960, 996; or what remains after making provisions for all liabilities of every kind, except capital stock. The term is also defined as the residue of assets after defraying liabilities, the excess of net assets over the face value of the stock, the excess of gross assets over the outstanding capital stock, without deducting debts or liabilities; and as the accumulation of moneys or property in excess of the par value of the stock.

As to surplus Earnings; Profit, and Water, see those titles.

Accumulated surplus. That surplus which results from the accumulation of profits.

Acquired surplus. Surplus acquired by the purchase of one business by another.

Appreciation surplus. Surplus which results from the revaluation of the assets of a business.

 Appropriated surplus. That portion of surplus which is earmarked or set aside for a specific purpose.

Capital surplus. All surplus which does not arise from the accumulation of profits. It may be created by a financial reorganization or by gifts to the corporation. The entire surplus of a corporation other than its earned surplus. Model Bus.Corp. Act, § 2.

Earned surplus. The portion of the surplus of a corporation equal to the balance of its net profits, income, gains and losses from the date of incorporation, or from the latest date when a deficit was eliminated by an application of its capital surplus or stated capital or otherwise, after deducting subsequent distributions to shareholders and transfers to stated capital and capital surplus to the extent such distributions and transfers are made out of earned surplus. Earned surplus shall include also any portion of surplus allocated to earned surplus in mergers, consolidations or acquisitions of all or substantially all of the outstanding shares or of the property and assets of another corporation, domestic or foreign. Model Bus.Corp. Act, § 2. See also Earned surplus.

Initial surplus. That surplus which appears on the financial statement at the commencement of an accounting period and which does not reflect the operations for the period covered by the statement.

Operating surplus. That surplus transferred to earned surplus at the end of an accounting period.

Paid-in surplus. Surplus paid in by stockholders as contrasted to earned surplus that arises from profits.

Reserved surplus. See Appropriated surplus, above.

Revaluation surplus. Surplus arising from a revaluation of assets above cost, usually in connection with a recapitalization (sometimes called "recapitalization surplus") or quasi-reorganization (sometimes called "reorganization surplus").

Unearned surplus. Includes paid-in surplus, revaluation surplus, and donated surplus.

Surplusage. Extraneous, impertinent, superfluous, or unnecessary matter. The remainder or surplus of money left. See also Surplus.

Pleading. Allegations of matter wholly foreign and impertinent to the cause. All matter beyond the circumstances necessary to constitute the action. Any allegation without which the pleading would yet be adequate. On motion, the court may order stricken from the pleadings any insufficient defense, redundant, inmaterial, or scandalous matter. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f).

Surplusage non nocet. Surplusage does no harm.

Surprise. Act of taking unawares; sudden confusion or perplexity. In its legal acceptation, denotes an unforeseen disappointment against which ordinary prudence would not have afforded protection.

On motion and upon such terms as are just, the court may relieve a party or his legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding because of surprise. Fed.R.Civil P. 60(b).
Equitable relief. The act by which a party who is entering into a contract is taken unawares, by which sudden confusion or perplexity is created, which renders it proper that a court of equity should relieve the party so surprised. The situation in which a party is placed without any default of his own, which will be injurious to his interests.

Anything which happens without the agency or fault of the party affected by it, tending to disturb and confuse the judgment, or to mislead him, of which the opposite party takes an undue advantage, is in equity a surprise, and one species of fraud for which relief is granted. There does not seem anything technical or peculiar in the word “surprise”. Where a court relieves on the ground of surprise, it does so upon the ground that the party has been taken unawares, and that he has acted without due deliberation, and under confused and sudden impressions.

Ground for new trial. As a ground for a new trial, that situation in which a party is unexpectedly placed without fault on his part, which will work injury to his interests. He must show himself to have been diligent at every stage of the proceedings, and that the event was one which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. A situation or result produced, having a substantive basis of fact and reason, from which the court may justly deduce, that the party will suffer a judicial wrong if not relieved from his mistake. The general rule is that when a party or his counsel is “taken by surprise,” in a material point or circumstance which could not have been anticipated, and when want of skill, care, or attention cannot be justly imputed, and injustice has been done, a new trial should be granted.

Surrebutter /srābōdar/. In common law pleading, the plaintiff’s answer of fact to the defendant’s rebutter. It is governed by the same rules as the replication. It is no longer required under modern pleading.

Surrejoinder /srājoyndar/. In common law pleading, the plaintiff’s answer of fact to the defendant’s rejoinder. It is governed in every respect by the same rules as the replication.

Surrender. To give back; yield; render up; restore; and in law, the giving up of an estate to the person who has it in reversion or remainder, so as to merge it in the larger estate. A yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, wherein the estate for life or years may be determined by mutual agreement between them. Roberts Inv. Co. v. Hardie Mfg. Co., 142 Or. 179, 19 P.2d 429, 431; Kimberlin v. Hicks, 150 Kan. 449, 94 P.2d 335, 339. The giving up of a lease before its expiration. In old English law, yielding up a tenancy in a copyhold estate to the lord of the manor for a specified purpose. The giving up by a bankrupt of his property to his creditors or their assignees; also, his due appearance in the bankruptcy court for examination as formerly required by the bankruptcy acts.

Surrender is contractual act and occurs only through consent of both parties. Motch’s Adm’r v. Portner, 237 Ky. 25, 34 S.W.2d 744, 745. Surrender differs from “abandonment,” as applied to leased premises, inasmuch as the latter is simply an act on the part of the lessee alone; but to show a surrender, a mutual agreement between lessor and lessee that the lease is terminated must be clearly proved. See Surrender by operation of law.

Surrender by operation of law. This phrase is properly applied to cases where the tenant for life or years has been a party to some act the validity of which he is by law afterwards estopped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate continued to exist. An implied surrender occurs when an estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands.

Any acts which are equivalent to an agreement on the part of the tenant to abandon, and on the part of the landlord to resume the possession of the demised premises, amount to a “surrender by operation of law”. The rule may be said to be that a surrender is created by operation of law, when the parties to a lease do some act so inconsistent with the subsisting relation of landlord and tenant as to imply that they have both agreed to consider the surrender as made.

Surrenderee. The person to whom a surrender is made.

Surrender of a preference. In bankruptcy practice, the surrender to the assignee in bankruptcy, by a preferred creditor, of anything he may have received under his preference and any advantage it gives him, which he must do before he can share in the dividend. The word as generally defined may denote either compelled or voluntary action. Keppel v. Bank, 187 U.S. 356, 25 S.Ct. 443, 49 L.Ed. 790; Bankruptcy Act, § 547.

Surrender of charter. A corporation created by charter may give up or “surrender” its charter to the people, unless the charter was granted under a statute, imposing indefeasible duties on the bodies to which it applies.

Surrender of copyhold. The mode of conveying or transferring copyhold property from one person to another by means of a surrender, which consisted in the yielding up of the estate by the tenant into the hands of the lord for such purposes as were expressed in the surrender. The process in most manors was for the tenant to come to the steward, either in court or out of court, or else to two customary tenants of the same manor, provided there was a custom to warrant it, and there, by delivering up a rod, a glove, or other symbol, as the custom directs, to resign into the hands of the lord, by the hands and acceptance of his steward, or of the said two tenants, all his interest and title to the estate, in trust, to be again granted out by the lord to such persons and for such uses as were named in the surrender, and as the custom of the manor would warrant. See Copyhold.

Surrender of criminals. The act by which the public authorities deliver a person accused of a crime, and who is found in their jurisdiction, to the authorities within whose jurisdiction it is alleged the crime has been committed. See Extradition; Rendition.
Surrenderor. One who makes a surrender. One who yielded up a copyhold estate for the purpose of conveying it.

Surrender to uses of will. Formerly a copyhold interest would not pass by will unless it had been surrendered to the use of the will. By English St. 55 Geo. III, c. 192, this was no longer necessary.

Surrender value. In insurance, the current value of a policy which will be paid to the policyholder when he elects to surrender the policy.

Surreptitious /sərəptɪʃəs/. Stealthily or fraudulently done, taken away, or introduced.

Surrogate /sɜːrəɡət/. The name given in some of the states to the judge or judicial officer who has jurisdiction over the administration of probate matters, guardianships, etc. In other states he is called judge of probate, register, judge of the orphans' court, etc. He is ordinarily a county officer, with a local jurisdiction limited to his county. See Surrogate court.

In English law, one that is substituted or appointed in the room of another, as by a bishop, chancellor, judge, etc.; especially an officer appointed to dispense licenses to marry without banns.

Surrogate court. Name of court in certain states with jurisdiction similar to that of probate court.

In New York the Surrogate's Court has jurisdiction over all actions and proceedings relating to the affairs of decedents, probate of wills, administration of estates and actions and proceedings arising thereunder or pertaining thereto, guardianship of the property of minors, and such other actions and proceedings, not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the supreme court, as may be provided by law.

Surrogate parent. A person other than a parent who stands in loco parentis to the child by virtue of his or her voluntary assumption of parental rights and responsibilities. The person appointed by a juvenile court as a child's advocate in the educational decision-making process in place of the child's natural parents or guardian.

Surround. To inclose on all sides; to encompass.

Surrounding circumstances. Such as may permit inference of culpability on part of defendant under res ipsa loquitur rule, refers not to circumstances directly tending to show lack of care, but only to mere neutral circumstances of control and management by defendant, which may, when explained, appear to be entirely consistent with due care. Hepp v. Quickel Auto & Supply Co., 37 N.M. 525, 525 P.2d 197.

Sursise /sərˈsɪz/. L. Fr. In old English law, neglect; omission; default; cessation.

Sursum reddere /sɜːrˈsʌm ˈrɛdəri/. Lat. In old conveyancing, to render up; to surrender.

Sursumreddito /sɜːrˈsʌmˌrɛdɪtəʊ/ . Lat. A surrender.

Surtax. An additional tax on what has already been taxed. A tax on a tax; for example: if person must pay a hundred dollar tax on a one thousand dollar income (ten percent), a ten percent surtax would be an additional ten dollars, not an additional hundred dollars.

Surtax exemption. The portion of taxable income not subject to the surtax.

Surveillance /sərvəlɪn(ə)ʤ(ə)ns/. Oversight, supervision. Police investigative technique involving visual or electronic observation or listening directed at a person or place (e.g., stakeout, tailing suspects, wiretapping, and so on). Its objective is to gather evidence of a crime or merely to accumulate intelligence about suspected criminal activity. See also Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Survey, v. To survey land is to ascertain corners, boundaries, and divisions, with distances and directions, and not necessarily to compute areas included within defined boundaries. To appraise as to value or condition.

Survey, n. The process by which a parcel of land is measured and its boundaries and contents are ascertained; also a map, plat, or statement of the result of such survey, with the courses and distances and the quantity of the land. See also Government survey system; Meander lines.

An investigation or examination. In insurance law, the term has acquired a general meaning, inclusive of what is commonly called the “application,” which contains the questions propounded on behalf of the company, and the answers of the assured.

Polling or questioning of public regarding their views on issues, candidates, etc.

Survey of a vessel. A statement of its present condition. Chicago S. S. Lines v. U. S. Lloyds, C.C.A.II., 12 F.2d 733, 737. A public document, looked to both by underwriters and owners, as affording the means of ascertaining, at the time and place, the state and condition of the ship and other property at hazard.

Surveyor. One who makes surveys, determines area of portion of earth's surface, length and direction of boundary lines, and contour of surface.

Surveyor of the port. Formerly, a revenue officer of the United States appointed for each of the principal ports of entry, whose duties chiefly concerned the importations at his station and the determination of their amount and valuation. Rev.St.U.S. § 2627 (19 U.S.C.A. § 40).

Survival actions. Term refers to actions for personal injuries which by statute survives death of injured person. Britt v. Sears, 150 Ind.App. 487, 277 N.E.2d 20, 23. An action or cause of action which does not become extinguished with the death of the party claiming the action. See Survival statutes; Wrongful death statutes.

Survival statutes. Statutory provision for the survival, after death of the injured person, of certain causes of action for injury to the person whether death results from the injury or from some other cause. The cause of action which survives is for the wrong to the injured person. A type of wrongful death statute, that allows an action to continue, notwithstanding the death of the one who originally had a right to bring the action. Such a right usually may be enforced by or against the estate of the decedent. See also Wrongful death statutes.
Survive. To continue to live or exist beyond the life, or existence of; to live through in spite of; live on after passing through; to remain alive; exist in force or operation beyond any period or event specified.

Surviving. Remaining alive. Living beyond the life of another or beyond the happening of some event so as to be entitled to a distribution of property or income. See Survival actions.

Surviving spouse. The spouse who outlives the other spouse. Term commonly found in statutes dealing with probate, administration of estates and estate and inheritance taxes.

Survivor. One who survives another; one who outlives another; one who lives beyond some happening; one of two or more persons who lives after the death of the other or others. The word "survivor," however, in connection with the power of one of two trustees to act, is used not only with reference to a condition arising where one of such trustees dies, but also as indicating a trustee who continues to administer the trust after his cotrustee is disqualified, has been removed, renounced, or refuses to act.

Survivorship. The living of one of two or more persons after the death of the other or others. Survivorship is where a person becomes entitled to property by reason of his having survived another person who had an interest in it. United States v. Jacobs, 306 U.S. 363, 59 S.Ct. 551, 555, 83 L.Ed. 763. See also Presumption of survivorship; Tenancy (Joint tenancy).

Survivorship annuity. Type of annuity contract which provides for payments beyond the life of the annuitant, as for example, to a widow of the annuitant.

Susceptible. Capable.

Suspect. To have a slight or even vague idea concerning—not necessarily involving knowledge or belief or likelihood. "Suspect" with reference to probable cause as grounds for arrest without warrant is commonly used in place of the word believe. A person reputed or suspected to be involved in a crime. See also Probable cause; Suspicion.

Suspect classifications. With regard to test to be used in determining whether statutory classification constitutes a denial of equal protection, "suspect classifications" are those based on race, alienage, national origin and sex. Anderson v. City of Detroit, 54 Mich. App. 496, 221 N.W.2d 168, 169.

Suspend. To interrupt; to cause to cease for a time; to postpone; to stay, delay, or hinder; to discontinue temporarily, but with an expectation or purpose of resumption. As a form of censure or discipline, to forbid a public officer, attorney, employee, or ecclesiastical person from performing his duties or exercising his functions for a more or less definite interval of time.

To postpone, as a judicial sentence. To cause a temporary cessation, as of work by an employee; to lay off.

See also Suspension.

Suspended sentence. A conviction of a crime followed by a sentence that is given formally, but not actually served. A suspended sentence in criminal law means in effect that defendant is not required at the time sentence is imposed to serve the sentence. Richards v. Crump, 260 S.C. 133, 194 S.E.2d 575, 576. See also Sentence (Suspension of sentence).

Suspense. When a rent, profit à prendre, and the like, are, in consequence of the unity of possession of the rent, etc., of the land out of which they issue, not in esse for a time, they are said to be in suspense, tunc dormiunt; but they may be revived or awakened.

Suspension. A temporary stop, a temporary delay, interruption, or cessation. Thus, we speak of a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, of a statute, of the power of alienating an estate, of a person in office, etc.

A temporary cutting off or debarring one, as from the privileges of one’s profession.

Temporary withdrawal or cessation from employment as distinguished from permanent severance accomplished by removal; “removal” being, however, the broader term, which may on occasion include suspension.

Ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which a spiritual person is either interdicted the exercise of his ecclesiastical function or hindered from receiving the profits of his benefice. It may be partial or total, for a limited time, or forever, when it is called “deprivation” or “amotion.”

Suspension of a right. The act by which a party is deprived of the exercise of his right for a time. A temporary stop of a right, a partial extinguishment for a time, as contrasted with a complete extinguishment, where the right is absolutely dead. Suspension of a right in an estate is a temporary or partial withholding of it from use or exercise. It differs from extinguishment, because a suspended right is susceptible of being revived, which is not the case where the right was extinguished.

Suspension of arms. An agreement between belligerents, made for a short time or for a particular place, to cease hostilities between them. See also Armistice.

Suspension of a statute. A temporary termination of its power of law. The suspension of a statute for a limited time operates so as to prevent its operation for the time; but it has not the effect of a repeal.

Suspension of business. These words in a statute contemplate an interruption of ordinary business operations, evidenced by some objective features. An interruption of the ordinary course of business, other than a mere failure to meet maturing obligations.

Suspensive condition. See Condition.

Suspensory condition. See Condition.

Sus. per coll /sás. pár kól/. An abbreviation of “suspensió per collum” /sáspendéyadar pár kólam/, let him be hanged by the neck. Words formerly used in England in signing judgment against a prisoner who was to be executed; being written by the judge in the margin of the sheriff’s calendar or list, opposite the prisoner’s name. 4 Bl.Comm. 403.
Suspicion. The act of suspecting, or the state of being suspected; imagination, generally of something ill; distrust; mistrust; doubt. The apprehension of something without proof or upon slight evidence. Suspicion implies a belief or opinion based upon facts or circumstances which do not amount to proof.

Suspicious character. In the criminal laws of some of the states, a person who is known or strongly suspected to be an habitual criminal, or against whom there is reasonable cause to believe that he has committed a crime or is planning or intending to commit one, or whose actions and behavior give good account of himself, and who may therefore be arrested or required to give security for good behavior.

Sustain. To carry on; to maintain. To affirm or approve, as when an appellate court sustains the decision of a lower court. To grant, as when a judge sustains an objection to testimony or evidence, he or she agrees with the objection and gives it effect. To support; to warrant;—said of evidence in connection with a verdict, decision, etc.

Suffer; bear; undergo. To endure or undergo without failing or yielding; to bear up under.

Sutler /sátlar/. A person who, as a business, follows an army and sells provisions and liquor to the troops. A small trader who follows an army and who is licensed by the government to sell goods, especially edibles, to the soldiers.

Suum culque tribuere /s(y)úwam k(yuw)ákywi tro-býlwary/. Lat. To render to everyone his own. One of the three fundamental maxims of the law laid down by Justinian.

Suus hares /s(y)úwas hírýz/. See Hares.

Suus judex /s(y)úwas juwdeks/. Lat. In old English law, a proper judge; a judge having cognizance of a cause. Literally, one's own judge.

Suzerain /s(y)úwz(a)ran/. In French and feudal law, the immediate vassal of the king; a crown vassal; a tenant in capite. A lord who possesses a fief whence other fiefs issue. Also spelled "suzereign."

A nation that exercises political control over another nation in relation to which it is sovereign.

Term is used as descriptive of relations, ill-defined and vague, which exist between powerful and dependent states; its very indefiniteness being its recommendation. While protecting and protected states tend to draw nearer, the reverse is true of suzerain and vassal states; a protectorate is generally the preliminary to incorporation; suzerainty, to separation.

It is said that suzerainty is title without corresponding power; protectorate is power without corresponding title.

Swain; swalmote /swéynn(mowt)/. See Swain; Swainmote.

Swamp. Wet, spongy land; soft, low ground saturated with water, but not usually covered by it; marshy ground away from seashore. Campbell v. Walker, 137 Or. 375, 2 P.2d 912, 914.

Swamp and overflowed lands. Lands unfit for cultivation by reason of their swampy character and requiring drainage or reclamation to render them available for beneficial use.

Swainmote. See Sweinmote.

Swart-money. Warth-money; or guard-money paid in lieu of the service of castellward.

Swatch. Commercially, a small sample of cloth from which suits, etc., are to be ordered.

Swear. To put on oath; to administer an oath to a person. To take an oath; to become bound by an oath duly administered. To declare on oath the truth of (a pleading, etc.). See also Affirmation; False swearing; Oath.

To use obscene or profane language. Its use in public places is an offense in many states.

Swearing in. The administration of an oath as to a trial witness or to a public official or one about to become a public official, as in the case of a person who becomes a judge. See Oath.

Swearing the peace. Showing to a magistrate that one has just cause to be afraid of another in consequence of his menaces, in order to have him bound over to keep the peace.

Sweat equity. Equity created in property through labor of owner in making improvements to property.

Sweating. The questioning of a person in custody charged with crime with intent to obtain information concerning his connection therewith or knowledge thereof by plying him with questions, or by threats or other wrongful means, extorting information to be used against him. Such interrogation is unconstitutional. See Interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Sweat shop. A plant whose employees are overworked and paid low wages, or a place where employees are required to work to an extent hardly endurable, and in the public mind the term imputes unsavory and illegal business practices. Masters v. Sun Mfg. Co., 237 Mo.App. 240, 165 S.W.2d 701, 703. Sweat shops resulted in the enactment of wage and hour laws, child labor laws, minimum wage laws, etc.

Sweeping. Comprehensive; including in its scope many persons or objects; as, a sweeping objection.

Sweepstakes. In horse racing, the sum of the stakes for which the subscribers agree to pay for each horse nominated.

Sweeteners. Inducement to a brokerage firm to enter into an underwriting arrangement with an issuer.

Sweetheart contract. Derogatory term used to describe a contract between a union and an employer in which concessions are granted to one or to the other for purpose of keeping a rival union out.

Swein /swdyn/. In old English law, a freeman or freeholder within the forest.

Sweinmote /swéynn(mowt)/. In forest law, a court held before the verderors, as judges, by the steward of the sweinmote, thrice in every year, for which the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. Its principal jurisdiction was—First, to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest; and, secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments in offenses against vert and venison. 3 Bl.Comm. 72.
Swell. To enlarge or increase. In an action of tort, circumstances of aggravation may "swell" the damages.

Swift v. Tyson Case. An early case decided in 1842 by the U.S. Supreme Court, 41 (16 Pet.) U.S. 1, 10 L.Ed. 865, which held that federal courts in suits founded on diversity of citizenship were free to exercise an independent judgment in matters of "general" law; i.e. matters not at all dependent upon local statutes or local usages of a fixed and permanent operation. Swift v. Tyson was overruled by Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188 which requires the application of state law in diversity actions under most circumstances. See Erie v. Tompkins; Federal common law.

Swift witness. A term colloquially applied to a witness who is unduly zealous or partial for the side which calls him, and who betrays his bias by his extreme readiness to answer questions or volunteer information.

Swindle. A scheme for cheating or defrauding.

Swindler. A cheat; one guilty of defrauding divers persons.

Swindling. Cheating and defrauding with deliberate artifice. Usually applied to a transaction where the guilty party procures the delivery to him, under a pretended contract, of the personal property of another, with the felonious design of appropriating it to his own use. The acquisition of any personal or movable property, money, or instrument of writing conveying or securing a valuable right, by means of some false or deceitful pretense or device, or fraudulent representation, with intent to defraud, that such did defraud, that representations related to existing fact or past event, that representations were made, that representations were with intent to defraud, that such did defraud, that representations related to existing fact or past event, and that party to whom representations were made, relying on their truth, was thereby induced to part with his property.

See False pretenses; Fraud.

Switch-yard doctrine. The doctrine that there can be no implied license to the public to use the track of a railroad company within the limits of its switch-yard.

Swolling of land. Term in old English law, meaning so much land as one's plow can till in a year; a hide of land.

Sworn. Frequently used interchangeably with "verified." See Affirmation; Oath; Swear; Verify.

Sworn brothers. In old English law, persons who, by mutual oaths, covenant to share in each other's fortunes.

Sworn clerks in chancery. Certain officers in the English court of chancery, whose duties were to keep the records, make copies of pleadings, etc. Their offices were abolished by St. 5 & 6 Vict., c. 103.

Sworn statement. Listing by contractor-builder of all of his suppliers and sub-contractors and their respective bids. Such is required by lending institution for interim construction financing.

Syb and som /sib and some/. A Saxon form of greeting, meaning peace and safety.

Syllabus. An abstract; a headnote; a note prefixed to the report or opinion of an adjudged case, containing an epitome or brief statement of the rulings of the court upon the point or points decided in the case. The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but is prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 312, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499. Ordinarily, where a headnote, even though prepared by the court, is given no special force by statute or rule of court, the opinion is to be looked to for the original and authentic statement of the grounds of decision. Burbank v. Ernst, 232 U.S. 162, 34 S.Ct. 299, 58 L.Ed. 551. See also Digest; Headnote.

Syllogism. In logic, the full formal logic of a single argument. It consists of three propositions (two premises and the conclusion), and these contain three terms, of which the two occurring in the conclusion are brought together in the premises by being referred to a common class.

Sylva cadua /silva slyjuwa/. Lat. In ecclesiastical law, wood of any kind which was kept on purpose to be cut, and which, being cut, grew again from the stump or root.

Symbolography /simbaliyografy/. The art or cunning rightly to form and make written instruments. It is either judicial or extrajudicial; the latter being wholly occupied with such instruments as concern matters not yet judicially in controversy, such as instruments of agreements or contracts, and testaments or last wills.

Symbolic delivery. The constructive delivery of the subject-matter of a sale or gift, where it is cumbersome or inaccessible, by the actual delivery of some article which is conventionally accepted as the symbol or representative of it, or which renders access to it possible, or which is evidence of the purchaser's or donee's title to it. Thus, a present gift of the contents of a box in a bank vault, accompanied by a transfer of the key thereto, is valid as a symbolical delivery.

Symbolic speech. A person's conduct which expresses opinions or thoughts about a subject and which may or may not be protected by the First Amendment. Actions which have as their primary purpose the expression of ideas as in the case of students who wore black arm bands to protest the war in Viet Nam. Such conduct is generally protected under the First Amendment as "pure speech" because very little conduct is involved. Tinker v. Des Moines School Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731. However, not all such conduct is protected. The burning of a draft card was not protected speech because of the government's substantial interest. U. S. v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672.

Symbolon anime /simbolan anima/. Lat. A mortuary, or soul scot.

Symmetry. Due proportion of several parts of a body to each other; adaptation of the form or dimensions of the several parts of a thing to each other; harmonious relation of parts; conformance; consistency; congruity; correspondence or similarity of form, dimensions, or parts on opposite sides of an axis, center, or a dividing plane.

Symond's Inn. Formerly an inn of chancery.

Sympathetic strike. A boycott. See Boycott; Strike.
Synallagmatic contract /sinalsegiruedak kontrakt/. In the civil law, a bilateral or reciprocal contract, in which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, each binding himself to the other. Such are the contracts of sale, hiring, etc.

Syncope. To cut short, or pronounce things so as not to be understood.

Syncl /sfndk/. In the civil law, an advocate or patron; a burgess or recorder; an agent or attorney who acts for a corporation or university; an actor or procurator; an assignee. The term corresponds very nearly with that of assignee under the common law.

In French law, the person who is commissioned by the courts to administer a bankruptcy. He fulfills the same functions as the trustee or assignee. Also, one who is chosen to conduct the affairs and attend to the concerns of a body corporate or community. In this sense the word corresponds to director or manager.

In Louisiana, the assignee of a bankrupt. Also, one of several persons to be elected by the creditors of a succession, for the purpose of administering thereon, whenever a succession has been renounced by the heirs, or has been accepted under the benefit of an inventory, and neither the beneficiary heirs, their attorney in fact, nor tutor will accept the administration and give the security required.

Syndicalism /sfndkalizam/. The theory, plan, or practice of trade-union action which aims by the general strike and direct action to establish control by local organizations of workers over the means and processes of production.

A form or development of trade-unionism, originating in France, which aims at the possession of the means of production and distribution, and ultimately at the control of society and government, by the federated bodies of industrial workers, and which seeks to realize its purposes through the agency of general strikes and of terrorism, sabotage, violence, or other criminal means.

Criminal syndicalism. Any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching, or aiding and abetting the commission of crime, sabotage (defined in the act as willful and malicious physical damage or injury to physical property), or unlawful acts of force and violence or unlawful methods of terrorism, as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership, or control, or effecting any political change. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 45 S.Ct. 625, 69 L.Ed. 1138; Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 47 S.Ct. 641, 71 L.Ed. 1065. See also Criminal.

Syndicate /sfndkat/. An association of individuals, formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested. An organization formed for some temporary purpose, such as the organization of a real estate trust and the sale of shares to the public. Syndicates may exist as corporations or partnerships (either general or limited).

A group of investment bankers who together underwrite and distribute a new issue of securities or a large block of an outstanding issue. An association of securities broker-dealers, usually in writing, who assist the principal underwriter in the controlled distribution of the securities of an issuer.

Syndicating. Gathering materials suitable for newspaper publication from writers and artists and distributing the same at regular intervals to newspapers throughout the country for publication on the same day.

Syndication. Act or process of forming a syndicate.

Syndicos, or syndicus /sfndkös/sindıkäs/. One chosen by a college, municipality, etc., to defend its cause. See Syndicate.

Syngraph /siijgraf/. The name given by the canonists to deeds or other written instruments of which both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters of the alphabet written between them, through which the parchment was cut in such a manner as to leave half the word on one part and half on the other. It thus corresponded to the chirograph or indenture of the common law. 2 Bl.Comm. 292, 296.

Formerly such writings were attested by the subscription and crosses of the witnesses; afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counterpart, and in the middle between the two copies they wrote the word syngraphus in large letters, which, being cut through the parchment and one being delivered to each party, on being afterwards put together proved their authenticity.

A deed, bond, or other written instrument under the hand and seal of all the parties. It was so called because the parties wrote together.

Synod /sfnd/. A meeting or assembly of ecclesiastical persons concerning religion; being the same thing, in Greek, as convocation in Latin. There are four kinds: (1) A general or universal synod or council, where bishops of all nations meet; (2) a national synod of the clergy of one nation only; (3) a provincial synod, where ecclesiastical persons of a province only assemble, being now what is called the "convocation;" (4) a diocesan synod, of those of one diocese. A synod in Scotland is composed of three or more presbyteries.

A convention of bishops and elders within a district including at least three presbyteries. Trustees of Pencader Presbyterian Church in Pencader Hundred v. Gibson, 26 Del.Ch. 375, 22 A.2d 782, 788. A meeting of the few adjoining presbyteries,—not the same as an ecumenical council, which is a council of all, and not of a part.

Synodal /snódal/. A tribute or payment in money paid to the bishop or archdeacon by the inferior clergy, at the Easter visitation.

Synodales testes /sinadélyyz téstyz/. L. Lat. Synods-men (corrupted into sidesmen) were the urban and rural deans, now the church-wardens. See Sidesmen.

Synonymous. Expressing the same or nearly the same idea.

Synopsis. A brief or partial statement, less than the whole; an epitome; synonymous with summary. See Abstract; Digest; Syllabus.

System. Orderly combination or arrangement, as of particulars, parts, or elements into a whole; especially such combination according to some rational principle. Any methodical arrangement of parts. Method; manner; mode.
T. As an abbreviation, this letter may stand for such terms as "term", "territory", "title", "table".

Every person who was convicted of felony, short of murder, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 27.

By a law of the Province of Pennsylvania, A.D. 1698, it was provided that a convicted thief should wear a badge in the form of the letter "T," upon his left sleeve, which badge should be at least four inches long and of a color different from that of his outer garment.

Tabard /təˈbɔːrd/. A short gown; a herald's coat; a surcoat.

Tabarder /təˈbɔːrdər/. One who wears a tabard or short gown; the name is still used as the title of certain bachelors of arts on the old foundation of Queen's College, Oxford.

Tabella /taˈbɛlla/. Lat. In Roman law, a tablet. Used in voting, and in giving the verdict of juries and decision of judges; and, when written upon, commonly translated "ballot." The laws which introduced and regulated the mode of voting by ballot were called "leges tabellaric."

Tabellio /taˈbɛliəʊ/. Lat. In Roman law, an officer corresponding in some respects to a notary. His business was to draw legal instruments (contracts, wills, etc.), and witness their execution.

Tabelliones differed from notaries in many respects: they had judicial jurisdiction in some cases, and from their judgments there were no appeals. Notaries were then the clerks or aiders of the tabelliones; they received the agreements of the parties, which they reduced to short notes; and these contracts were not binding until they were written in extenso, which was done by the tabelliones.

Tabernaculum /təˈbɛrnək(ə)ləm/. In old records, a public inn, or house of entertainment.

Tabernarius /təˈbɛrnəriəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a shopkeeper.

In old English law, a taverner or tavern keeper.

Tabes dorsalis /təˈbiːz dɔːrˈsɛlɪs/. In medical jurisprudence, another name for locomotor ataxia. It accompanies attacks of tabetic dementia. See Insanity.

Tabetic dementia /təˈbɛdɪk dəˈmɛnʃ(ə)l/. See Insanity.

Table, v. To suspend consideration of a pending legislative bill or other measure.

Table, n. A synopsis, condensed statement or listing bringing together numerous items or details so as to be comprehended in a single view; as genealogical tables, exhibiting the names and relationships of all the persons composing a family; life and annuity tables, used by actuaries; interest tables, etc. Term may also refer to an alphabetical, numerical, etc. listing of cases, statutes, court rules, and the like, cited or referred to in a legal publication. See Table of cases.

Tableau of distribution /təˈblower ə dɪstrəˈbjuːʃən/ /təˈbloy/ /təˈbloom/. In Louisiana, a list of creditors of an insolvent estate, stating what each is entitled to.

Table de marbre /təˈboʊ də márˈbr/ /təˈblov/. Fr. In old French law, table of Marble; a principal seat of the admiralty, so called. These Tables de Marbre are frequently mentioned in the Ordonnance of the Marine.

Table of cases. An alphabetical list of the adjudged cases cited, referred to, or digested in a legal textbook, volume of reports, or digest, with references to the sections, pages, or paragraphs where they are respectively cited, etc., which is commonly either prefixed or appended to the volume.

Table rents. In English law, payments which used to be made to bishops, etc., reserved and appropriated to their table or housekeeping.

Tabula /təˈbʌlə/. In the civil law, a table, a shopkeeper.

In old English law, a taverner or tavern keeper.

Tabulae nuptiales /təˈbʌliə ˈnaʊptɪələs/. In the civil law, a written record of a marriage; or the agreement as to the dos.

Tabula in naufragio /təˈbʌlə ɪn noʊˈfrædʒ(ə)ˈjoʊ/ /təˈbʌlə ɪn nəʊ ˈfreɪdʒ(ə)ˈjoʊ/ /təˈbʌlə ɪn nəʊˈfrædʒ(ə)ˈjoʊ/. Lat. A plank in a shipwreck. This phrase is used metaphorically to designate the power subsisting in a third mortgagee, who took without notice of the second mortgage, to acquire the first incumbrance, attach it to his own, and thus squeeze out and get satisfaction, before the second is admitted to the fund. It may be fairly said that the doctrine survives only in the unjust and much-criticised English rule of tacking. See Tacking. The use of the expression is attributed to Sir Matthew Hale.

Tabularius /tèbyalèriyas/. Lat. A notary, or tabellio.

Tac, tak /tèk/. In old records, a kind of customary payment by a tenant.

T-account. Account form shaped like the letter T with the title above the horizontal line. Debits are shown to the left of the vertical line; credits, to the right. In bookkeeping, an original form of account in which debits and credits may be recorded on the appropriate side of the "T".

Tac free /tèk frìy/. In old records, free from the common duty or imposition of tac.

Tacit /tæsat/. Existing, inferred, or understood without being openly expressed or stated; implied by silence or silent acquiescence, as a tacit agreement or a tacit understanding. State v. Chadwick, 150 Or. 645, 47 P.2d 232, 234. Done or made in silence, implied or indicated, but not actually expressed. Manifested by the refraining from contradiction or objection; inferred from the situation and circumstances, in the absence of express matter.

Tacit admission. An acknowledgment or concession of a fact inferred from either silence or from the substance of what one has said.

Tacita quaedam habentur pro expressis /tasssds kwiydam habèntor prów askprésas/. Things unexpressed are sometimes considered as expressed.

Tacit dedication. Of property for public use is dedicated to the use of the people without any express matter, by a tacit dedication, which is sometimes applied to the dedication of a property to a public use, in the absence of express dedication. Goree v. Midstates Oil Corporation, 205 La. 988, 18 So.2d 591, 596.

Tacit /tèсадiy/. Lat. Silently; impliedly; tacitly.

Tacit hypothecation. In the civil law, a species of lien or mortgage which is created by operation of law without any express agreement of the parties. In admiralty law, this term is sometimes applied to a maritime lien, which is not, strictly speaking, an hypothecation in the Roman sense of the term, though it resembles it.

Tacit relocation. A doctrine borrowed from the Roman law. It is a presumed renunciation of the contract from the period at which the former expired, and is held to arise from implied consent of parties, in consequence of their not having signified their intention that agreement should terminate at the period stipulated. Though the original contract may have been for a longer period than one year, the renewed agreement can never be for more than one year, because verbal contract of location can extend longer. Srygley v. City of Nashville, 175 Tenn. 417, 135 S.W.2d 451.

Tack. To annex some junior lien to a first lien, thereby acquiring priority over an intermediate one. See Tacking.

Tacking. The term is applied especially to the process of making out title to land by adverse possession, when the present occupant and claimant has not been in possession for the full statutory period, but adds or "tacks" to his own possession that of previous occupants under whom he claims. That doctrine which permits an adverse possessor to add his period of possession to that of a prior adverse possessor in order to establish a continuous possession for the statutory period. Deyrup v. Schmitt, 132 Vt. 423, 425, 321 A.2d 42, 44.

The term is also used in a number of other connections, as of possessions, disabilities, or items in accounts or other dealings. In these several cases the purpose of the proposed tacking is to avoid the bar of a statute of limitations. See Davis v. Cobliens, 174 U.S. 719, 19 S.Ct. 832, 43 L.Ed. 1147.

The uniting of securities given at different times, so as to prevent any intermediate purchaser from claiming a title to redeem or otherwise discharge one lien, which is prior, without redeeming or discharging the other liens also, which are subsequent to his own title. The term is particularly applied to the action of a third mortgagee who, by buying the first lien and uniting it to his own, gets priority over the second mortgagee.

Tactis sacrosanctis /tæktas sàkrissàktas/. Lat. In old English law, touching the holy evangelists. A bishop may swear visis evangelis [looking at the Gospels], and not tactis, and it is good enough.

Tacto per se sancto evangello /tæktow pèr siy sàorktow svengiyl(i)yow/. Lat. Having personally touched the holy Gospel. The description of a corporal oath.

Taft-Hartley Act. The Wagner Act was amended in 1947 by the Taft-Hartley Act to balance some of the advantages given to unions under the Wagner Act by imposing corresponding duties on unions. Principal changes imposed by the Act included the following: abolition of the closed shop, but permitting the union shop under conditions specified in the Act; exempting supervisors from coverage of the Act; requiring the N.L.R.B. to accord equal treatment to both independent and affiliated unions; permitting the employer to file a representation petition even though only one union seeks to represent the employ-

Tail. Limited; abridged; reduced; curtailed, as a fee or estate in. An estate of inheritance, which, instead of descending to heirs generally, goes to the heirs of the donee's body, which means his lawful issue, his children, and through them to his grandchildren in a direct line, so long as his posterity endures in a regular order and course of descent, and upon the death of the first owner without issue, the estate determines.

Several tail. An entail severally to two; as if land is given to two men and their wives, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten; here the donees have a joint estate for their two lives, and yet they have a several inheritance, because the issue of the one shall have his moiety, and the issue of the other the other moiety.

Tail after possibility of issue extinct. A species of estate fail which arises where one is tenant in special tail, and a person from whose body the issue was to arise; as a fee or estate in fee, to a certain order of succession, or to certain heiress.

Tail general. An estate in tail granted to one "and the heirs of his body begotten," which is called "tail general" because, how often soever such donee in tail be married, his issue in general by all and every such marriage is, in successive order, capable of inheriting the estate tail per formam doni. 2 Bl.Comm. 113. This is where an estate is limited to a man and the heirs of his body, without any restriction at all; or, according to some authorities, with no other restriction than that in relation to sex. Thus, tail male general is the same thing as tail male; the word "general," in such case, implying that there is no other restriction upon the descent of the estate than that it must go in the male line. So an estate in tail female general is an estate in tail female. The word "general," in the phrase, expresses a purely negative idea, and may denote the absence of any restriction, or the absence of some given restriction which is tacitly understood.

Tail male. When certain lands are given to a person and the male heirs of his or her body. The female heirs are not capable of inheriting it.

Tallage /tál/ Fr. In old English law, the fee which is opposed to fee-simple, because it is so minced or pared that it is not in the owner's free power to dispose of it, but it is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee,—in short, an estate-tail.

In old French law, a tax or assessment levied by the king, or by any great lord, upon his subjects, usually taking the form of an imposition upon the owners of real estate. The equivalent of the English tallage—the typical direct tax in France of the Middle Ages, as tonlieu was the generic term for an indirect tax. See Tallage.

Taint. A conviction of felony, or the person so convicted.

Take. To lay hold of; to gain or receive into possession; to seize; to deprive one of the use or possession of; to assume ownership. Thus, constitutions generally provide that a man's property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation. Fifth Amend., U.S.Const. Property may be deemed "taken" within the meaning of these constitutional provisions when it is totally destroyed or rendered valueless, or when it is damaged by a public use in connection with an actual taking by the exercise of eminent domain, or when there is interference with use of property to owner's prejudice, with resulting diminution in value thereof. Webster County v. Lutz, 234 Ky. 618, 28 S.W.2d 966, 967. A "taking" has occurred when the entity clothed with power of eminent domain substantially deprives owner of use and enjoyment of his property. Petition of Cornell Industrial Electric, Inc., 19 Pa.Cmvth. 599, 338 A.2d 752, 754. "Taking" of property within Constitution is not restricted to mere change of physical possession but includes permanent or temporary deprivation of use to owner if such deprivation amounts to abridgment or destruction by reason of actions of state of lawful rights of individual to possession, use or enjoyment of his land. Hilltop Properties, Inc. v. State, 233 Cal.App.2d 349, 43 Cal.Rptr. 605, 609, 610.

The word "take" has many shades of meaning; the precise meaning which it is to bear in any case depending on the subject with respect to which it is used.

In the law of larceny, to obtain or assume possession of a chattel unlawfully, and without the owner's consent; to appropriate things to one's own use with felonious intent. Thus, an actual taking is essential to constitute larceny. A "taking" occurs when a person with a preconceived design to appropriate property to his own use obtains possession of it by means of fraud or trickery.

To seize or apprehend a person; to arrest the body of a person by virtue of lawful process. Thus, a capias commands the officer to take the body of the defendant.

To acquire the title to an estate; to receive or be entitled to an estate in lands from another person by virtue of some species of title. Thus one is said to "take by purchase," "take by descent," "take a life-interest under the devise," etc.

See also Taking.

Take away. This term in a statute punishing every person who shall take away any female under 18 from her father for the purpose of prostitution requires only that such person procure or cause her to go away by some persuasion, enticement, or inducement offered, exercised, or held out to the girl, or by furnishing her the means or money with which to go away.

Take back. To revoke; to retract; as, to take back one's promise.

Take by stealth. To steal; feloniously to take and carry away the personal goods of another; to take without right, secretly, and without leave or consent of the owner.

Take care of. To support; maintain; look after (a person). To pay (a debt). To attend to.

Take effect. To become operative or executed. To be in force, or go into operation.

Take-home pay. The net amount of a paycheck; gross earned wages or salary reduced by deductions for income taxes, Social Security taxes, contributions to fringe benefit plans, union dues, and so on.

Take over. To assume control or management of;—not necessarily involving the transfer of absolute title. See Tender offer.

Take over bid. A tender offer (q.v.).

Taker. One who takes or acquires; particularly, one who takes an estate by devise. When an estate is granted subject to a remainder or executory devise, the devisee of the immediate interest is called the "first taker."

Take up. To pay or discharge, as a note. Also, sometimes, to purchase a note. To retire a negotiable instrument; to discharge one's liability on it;—said particularly of an indorser or acceptor. A party to a negotiable instrument, particularly an indorser or acceptor, is said to "take up" the paper, or to "retire" it, when he pays its amount, or substitutes other security for it, and receives it again into his own hands.

Taking. In criminal law and torts, the act of laying hold upon an article, with or without removing the same. It implies a transfer of possession, dominion, or control.

Under various statutes relating to sexual offenses, such as the abduction of a girl under the age of 18 years for the purpose of carnal intercourse, to constitute a "taking" no force, actual or constructive, need be exercised. The "taking" may be effected by persuasion, enticement, or inducement. And it is not necessary that the girl be taken from the control or against the will of those having lawful authority over her.

See also Constructive taking; Take.

Eminent domain. See Take.

Tale. The count or counting of money. Said to be derived from the same root as "tally." Whence also the modern word "teller."

In old pleading, the plaintiff's count, declaration, or narrative of his case. 3 Bl.Comm. 293.

Tales /téyliyz/. Lat. Such; such men. A number of jurors added to a deficient panel to supply the deficiency. When, by means of challenges or any other cause, a sufficient number of unexceptionable jurors does not appear at the trial, either party may request a "tales," as it is termed; that is, a supply of such men as are summoned on the first panel in order to make up the deficiency.

A list of such jurymen as were of the tales, kept in the king's bench office in England.

Tales de circumstantibus /téyliyz diy sárkmstèntabas/. So many of the by-standers. The emphatic words of the old writ awarded to the sheriff to make up a deficiency of jurors out of the persons present in court. 3 Bl.Comm. 365.

The order of the judge for taking such by-standers as jurors.

Talesman. A person summoned to act as a juror from among the by-standers in the court. A person summoned as one of the tales added to a jury.

Tail /téyli(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, like for like; punishment in the same kind; the punishment of an injury by an act of the same kind, as an eye for an eye, a limb for a limb, etc.

Tails interpretatio semper fienda est, ut evitetur absur- dum et inconveniens, et ne judicium sit illusorium [or nugatory].

The order of the judge for taking such by-standers as jurors.

Tails non est eadem; nam nullum similis est idem /tèylas nôn est iyéydam; nâm nálám sìmiláy est áydám/. What is like is not the same; for nothing similar is the same.

Tails res, vel tale rectum, que vel quod non est in homine ad tum superstite sed tantummodo est et consistit in consideratione et intelligentia legis, et quod alici dixerunt talen rem vel tale rectum fore in nubibus /tèylas ríyz, vél téylíy réktam, kwíy vél kwòd nôn est in homániy šédáŋk s(y)uyáwpársádiy sëd téntamówdow est et kı(t)siástad in kı(t)sìdàřéyšíyównyì ed intélajéns(y)yà liyíjas, èt kwòd éyílyyay diksírnt téylám rém vél téylíy réktam fóriy in nuyúwbabas/. Such a thing or such a right as is not vested in a person then living, but merely exists in the consideration and contemplation of law [is said to be in abeyance], and others have said that such a thing or such a right is in the clouds.
Tallter processum est /taebdær pras^sam est/. So it has proceeded. Words formerly used in pleading, by which a defendant, in justifying his conduct by the process of an inferior court, alleged the proceedings in such inferior court. Upon pleading the judgment of an inferior court, the proceedings preliminary to such judgment, and on which the same was founded, must, to some extent, appear in the pleading, but the rule is that they may be alleged with a general allegation that “such proceedings were had,” instead of a detailed account of the proceedings themselves, and this general allegation is called the “tallter processum est.” A like concise mode of stating former proceedings in a suit is adopted at the present day in chancery proceedings upon petitions and in actions in the nature of bills of revivor and supplement.

Tallage, or tallage /taelajar/. A tax or toll gatherer; mentioned by Chaucer (and spelled “talaigier”).

Tallager /taelajar/. A tax or toll gatherer, mentioned by Chaucer (and spelled “talaigier”).

Tallagium /taleyj(iy)am/. L. Lat. A term including all taxes.

Tallagium facere /taleyj(iy)am fääsary/. To give up accounts in the exchequer, where the method of accounting was by tallies.

Tallato /taleysh(iy)ow/. A keeping account by tallies.

Talley, or tally. A stick cut into two parts, on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor. It was the ancient mode of keeping accounts. One part was held by the creditor, and the other by the debtor. The use of tallies in the exchequer was abolished by St. 23 Geo. III, c. 82, and the old tallies were ordered to be destroyed by St. 4 & 5 Wm. IV, c. 15. By the custom of London, sealed tallies were effectual as a deed. They are admissible by the French and Italian Codes as evidence between traders. It is said that they were negotiable.

Tallies of loan. A term originally used in England to describe exchequer bills, which were issued by the officers of the exchequer when a temporary loan was necessary to meet the exigencies of the government, and charged on the credit of the exchequer in general, and made assignable from one person to another.

Tally trade. A system of dealing by which dealers furnish certain articles on credit, upon an agreement for the payment of the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly installments.

Tallia /tél(i)ya/. L. Lat. A tax or tribute; tallage; a share taken or cut out of any one’s income or means.

Talmud /talmuwa/telmed/. A work which embodies the civil and canonical law of the Jewish people.
Tangible evidence. Evidence which consists of something which can be seen or touched, e.g. gun in homicide trial. In contrast to testimonial evidence, tangible evidence is real evidence. See Evidence.

Tangible personal property. Property such as a chair or watch which may be touched or felt in contrast to a contract. Terms commonly used in statutes which provide for taxation of personal property.

Tangible property. That which may be felt or touched, and is necessarily corporeal, although it may be either real or personal. H. D. & J. K. Crosswell, Inc. v. Jones, D.C.S.C., 52 F.2d 880, 883.

Tantry /tänstriy/bön/. In old Irish law, a species of tenure, founded on ancient usage, which allotted the inheritance of lands, castles, etc., to the "oldest and worthiest man of the deceased's name and blood." It was abolished in the reign of James I.

Tanneria /tanir(i)ys/. In old English law, tannery; the trade or business of a tanner.

Tanteo /tanteyow/. In old English law, tannery; the trade or business of a tanner.

Tanto, right of /ráyd av tántow/. In Mexican law, the right enjoyed by an usufructuary of property, of buying the property at the same price at which the owner offers it to any other person, or is willing to take from another.

Tantum bona valent, quantum vendi possunt /təntəm bəʊnə vəndi pəsənt/. Goods are worth so much as they can be sold for.

Tantum habent de leges, quantum habent de justitia /təntəm həˈbɛnt də ˈdʒʊstiʃə/. (Precedents) have value in the law to the extent that they represent justice.

Tapping. The interception of a telephonic or telegraphic message by connecting a device to the lines, permitting a person to hear the message. It is regulated by federal and state statutes and normally requires prior judicial approval. See also Eavesdropping; Surveillance; Wiretapping.

Tarde venit /tárdvi vɨnət/. Lat. The name of a return made by the sheriff to a writ, when it came into his hands too late to be executed before the return-day.

Tare /tər/. A deficiency in the weight or quantity of merchandise by reason of the weight of the box, cask, bag, or other receptacle which contains it and is weighed with it. Also an allowance or abatement of a certain weight or quantity which the seller makes to the buyer, on account of the weight of such box, cask, etc. See Tret.

Target company. Company attempted to be taken over in tender offer. See Tender offer.

Target offense. In crime of conspiracy, the crime contemplated by the illegal agreement.

Target witness. A person whose testimony the investigating body is principally seeking as in the case of a grand jury which has, as its objective, the information which such a person may give. A witness called before a grand jury against whom the government is seeking an indictment. United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 97 S.Ct. 1814, 52 L.Ed.2d 238.

Tariff /ˈtɑːrif/. The list or schedule of articles on which a duty is imposed upon their importation into the United States, with the rates at which they are severally taxed. Also the custom or duty payable on such articles. And, derivatively, the system or principle of imposing duties on the importation of foreign merchandise.

A series of schedules or rates of duties on imported goods. Tariffs are for revenue if their primary objects are fiscal; protective if designed to relieve domestic businesses from effective foreign competition; discriminatory if they apply unequally to products of different countries; and retaliatory if they are designed to compel a country to remove artificial trade barriers against the entry of another nation's products.

A public document setting forth services of common carrier being offered, rates and charges with respect to services and governing rules, regulations and practices relating to those services. International Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. United Tel. Co. of Florida, D.C.Fla., 433 F.Supp. 352, 357.

See also GATT; Most favored nation clause.

Antidumping tariff. A tariff calculated to prevent the dumping or unloading of imported goods below cost by fixing the tariff at the difference between the price at which the goods commonly sell in the country of origin and the price at which it is to be sold in the importing country. See also Dumping Act.

Autonomous tariff. Tariff set by legislation and not by commercial treaties.

Joint tariff. Schedule of rates established by two or more carriers covering shipments between places requiring the use of facilities owned by such carriers.

Preferential tariff. Tariff aimed at favoring the products of one country over those of another. See also Most favored nation clause; Preferential tariff.

Protective tariff. Tariff designed to protect or encourage domestic goods by imposing a high rate on imported goods of a similar nature. See also Protective tariff.

Revenue tariff. Tariff designed primarily to raise revenues and to support the customs service instead of encouraging production of imported goods.

Tath /táθ/ /təθ/. In the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, the lords of manors anciently claimed the privilege of having their tenants' flocks or sheep brought at night upon their own demesne lands, there to be folded for the improvement of the ground, which liberty was called by the name of the "tath."

Tauri liberi libertas /tɔhray liˈbəri liˈbɜrtəs/. Lat. A common bull; because he was free to all the tenants within such a manor, liberty, etc.

Tautology /ˈtɔutəli/. Describing the same thing twice in one sentence in equivalent terms; a fault in rhetoric. It differs from repetition or iteration, which is repeating the same sentence in the same or equivalent terms; the latter is sometimes either excusable or necessary in an argument or address; the former (tautology) never.
Tax. To impose a tax; to enact or declare that a pecuniary contribution shall be made by the persons liable, for the support of government. Spoken of an individual, to be taxed is to be included in an assessment made for purposes of taxation.

A pecuniary burden laid upon individuals or property to support the government, and is a payment exacted by legislative authority. In re Mytinger, D.C. Tex., 31 F.Supp. 977, 978, 979. Essential characteristics of a tax are that it is not a voluntary payment or donation, but an enforced contribution, exacted pursuant to legislative authority. Michigan Employment Sec. Commission v. Patt, 4 Mich.App. 228, 144 N.W.2d 663, 665. Annual compensation paid to government for annual protection and for current support of government. Alabama Power Co. v. Federal Power Commission, C.C.A.5, 134 F.2d 602, 608. A ratable portion of the produce of the property and labor of the individual citizens, taken by the nation, in the exercise of its sovereign rights, for the support of government, for the administration of the laws, and as the means for continuing in operation the various legitimate functions of the state. An enforced contribution of money or other property, assessed in accordance with some reasonable rule or apportionment by authority of a sovereign state on persons or property within its jurisdiction for the purpose of defraying the public expenses.

In a general sense, any contribution imposed by government upon individuals, for the use and service of the state, whether under the name of toll, tribute, tallage, gabel, impost, duty, custom, excise, subsidy, aid, supply, or other name. And in its essential characteristics is not a debt. City of Newark v. Jos. Hollander, Inc., 136 N.J.Eq. 539, 42 A.2d 872, 875.

Synonyms

In a broad sense, taxes undoubtedly include assessments, and the right to impose assessments has its foundation in the taxing power of the government; and yet, in practice and as generally understood, there is a broad distinction between the two terms. "Taxes," as the term is generally used, are public burdens imposed generally upon the inhabitants of the whole state, or upon some civil division thereof, for governmental purposes, without reference to peculiar benefits to particular individuals or property. "Assessments" have reference to impositions for improvements which are specially beneficial to particular individuals or property, and which are imposed in proportion to the particular benefits supposed to be conferred. They are justified only because the improvements confer special benefits, and are just only when they are divided in proportion to such benefits. As distinguished from other kinds of taxation, "assessments" are those special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of municipal improvements which are necessary to pay for the improvement, and are laid with reference to the special benefit which the property is supposed to have derived therefrom.

Taxes differ from subsidies, in being certain and orderly, and from forced contributions, etc., in that they are levied by authority of law, and by some rule of proportion which is intended to insure uniformity of contribution, and a just apportionment of the burdens of government.

Generally

Ad valorem tax. See Ad valorem.
Amusement tax. See Amusement tax.
Capital gains tax. Provision in tax laws by which sale or exchange of capital assets are taxed at a lower rate than ordinary income.
Capital stock tax. Tax assessed as a percentage of par or assigned value of capital stock of a corporation.
Capitation tax. See that title.
Collateral inheritance tax. See that title.
Consumption tax. Tax imposed on outlay for consumption goods and services.
Direct tax. One which is demanded from the very persons who it is intended or desired should pay it. Indirect taxes are those which are demanded from one person, in the expectation and intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another. Taxes are divided into "direct," under which designation would be included those which are assessed upon the property, person, business, income, etc., of those who are to pay them, and "indirect," or those which are levied on commodities before they reach the consumer, and are paid by those upon whom they ultimately fall, not as taxes, but as part of the market price of the commodity.

Estate tax. A tax upon the right to transfer property at death, while an inheritance tax is a tax upon the right to receive. See also Estate tax; Inheritance tax.
Excess profits tax. Tax imposed on all income beyond the normal amount calculated on either a normal return on invested capital or on the average of income of previous years. Such tax is commonly imposed in war time. See Excess profits tax; also, Undistributed profits tax, infra.
Excise tax. See Excise.
Floor tax. A tax on all the distilled spirits "on the floor" of a warehouse, i.e., in the warehouse.
Franchise tax. See Franchise.
Gift tax. Tax imposed on the inter vivos transfer of property by gift. The Federal Gift Tax is imposed on the donor while some state gift taxes are imposed on the donee.
Graduated tax. A tax so structured that the rate increases as the value of the income or property increases.
Gross receipts tax. A tax based on total sales rather than on net profits.

Head tax. A flat tax imposed on a per person basis.

Income tax. See Income tax.

Indirect taxes. Those demanded in the first instance from one person in the expectation and intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another. Ordinarily all taxes paid primarily by persons who can shift the burden upon some one else, or who are under no legal compulsion to pay them, are considered indirect taxes. Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 15 S.Ct. 673, 39 L.Ed. 759.

Inheritance tax. See that title.

Land tax. See that title.

License tax. See License fee or tax.

Local taxes. Taxes imposed by municipalities such as local property taxes or city income or sales taxes.

Luxury tax. A species of property tax imposed on the manufacture, sale or purchase of luxury goods.

Normal tax. A normal tax applied to all taxable income at the same rate.

Occupation tax. See Occupation.

Payroll tax. A type of tax collected by deduction from a company's payroll and paid by either the employer or employee.

Personal property tax. A tax assessed against personal property by cities and towns. The tax is commonly levied against such items as furniture, motor vehicles, etc.

Personal tax. This term may mean either a tax imposed on the person without reference to property, as a capitation or poll tax, or a tax imposed on personal property, as distinguished from one laid on real property.

Poll-tax. See that title.

Property tax. Generic term describing a tax levied on the basis of the value of either personal or real property owned by the taxpayer. See also Ad valorem.

Proportional taxes. Taxes are "proportional" when the proportion paid by each taxpayer bears the same ratio to the amount to be raised that the value of his property bears to the total taxable value, and in the case of a special tax when that is apportioned according to the benefits received.

Public tax. A tax levied for some general public purpose or for the purposes of the general public revenue, as distinguished from local municipal taxes and assessments.

Real estate tax. Tax assessed against real property and based on the value of such property. See also Ad valorem.

Regressive tax. Tax whose structure is such that the revenue yield grows smaller as the value of the property taxed increases.

Sales tax. Tax levied on the sale of goods and based on their value. It may be a direct tax which is paid by the purchaser or a turnover tax paid by the seller on the gross sales of his business.

Severance tax. Tax levied on the mining or extraction of some natural resource such as oil or coal. It may be assessed on the value of the product extracted or on the volume.

Sinking fund tax. See Fund.

Specific tax. A tax imposed as a fixed sum on each article or item or property of a given class or kind, without regard to its value; opposed to ad valorem tax.

Stamp tax. Tax collected through the sale of stamps which must be affixed to certain documents such as deeds, stock certificates, etc. See Revenue stamps.

Stock transfer tax. Tax levied by the federal government and by certain states on the transfer or sale of shares of stock.

Succession tax. See Succession duty or tax.

Surtax. An additional tax imposed upon certain kinds of income, such as dividends from corporate stock, royalties, interest from money, notes, credits, bonds, and other securities. A surtax is sometimes imposed on incomes exceeding a specified amount. See also Surtax.

Tax certificate. A certificate of the purchase of land at a tax sale thereof, given by the officer making the sale, and which is evidence of the holder's right to receive a deed of the land if it is not redeemed within the time limited by law.

Tax-deed. The deed given upon a sale of real property made for non-payment of taxes. The deed whereby the officer of the law undertakes to convey the title of the property to the purchaser at the tax-sale. See also Tax-certificate; Tax deed; and Tax-title, infra.

Taxing district. The district throughout which a particular tax or assessment is ratably apportioned and levied upon the inhabitants; it may comprise the whole state, one county, a city, a ward, or part of a street.

Tax lease. The instrument (or estate) given to the purchaser of land at a tax sale, where the law does not permit the sale of the estate in fee for non-payment of taxes, but instead thereof directs the sale of an estate for years.

Tax levy. The total sum to be raised by a tax. Also the bill, enactment, or measure of legislation by which an annual or general tax is imposed. See also Assessment; Levy.

Tax lien. A statutory lien, existing in favor of the state or municipality, upon the lands of a person charged with taxes, binding the same either for the taxes assessed upon the specific tract of land or (in some jurisdictions) for all the taxes due from the individual, and which may be foreclosed for non-payment, by judgment of a court or sale of the land.

Taxpayer. A person chargeable with a tax; one from whom government demands a pecuniary contribution towards its support.

Taxpayers' lists. Written exhibits required to be made out by the taxpayers resident in a district, enumerating all the property owned by them and subject to taxation, to be handed to the assessors at a specified date or at regular periods, as a basis for assessment and valuation.
Tax purchaser. A person who buys land at a tax-sale; the person to whom land, at a tax-sale thereof, is struck down.

Tax roll. See Roll.

Tax sale. See Sale.

Tax-title. The title by which one holds land which he purchased at a tax sale. That species of title which is inaugurated by a successful bid for land at a collector's sale of the same for nonpayment of taxes, completed by the failure of those entitled to redeem within the specified time, and evidenced by the deed executed to the tax purchaser, or his assignee, by the proper officer.

Tonnage tax. See Tonnage duty.

Transfer tax. See Stock transfer tax, supra.

Undistributed profits tax. Tax imposed on the accumulation of surplus beyond a certain amount. It is designed to force corporations to pay dividends because it is assessed against that part of surplus which is not distributed as dividends and which is not reasonably necessary for the maintenance and growth of the business.

Use tax. Tax imposed on the use of certain goods which are not subject to a sales tax. It is commonly designed to discourage people from going out of state and purchasing goods which are not subject to sales tax at the point of purchase.

Withholding tax. A tax which is collected by deducting it from the wages of an employee, e.g. federal income taxes.

Taxa /taksa/. L. Lat. A tax. In old records, an allotted piece of work; a task.

Taxable. Subject to taxation; liable to be assessed, along with others, for a share in a tax. Something of value, subject to assessment, and to be levied upon and sold for taxes. Williams v. School Dist. No. 32 in County of Fremont, 56 Wyo. 1, 102 P.2d 48, 52.

As applied to costs in an action, the term means proper to be taxed or charged up; legally chargeable or assessable. See also Taxation (Taxation of costs).

Taxable estate. As defined in I.R.C. § 2051, the taxable estate is the gross estate of a decedent reduced by the deductions allowed by §§ 2053—2057 (e.g., administration expenses, marital and charitable deductions). The taxable estate is the amount that is subject to the unified transfer tax at death. See also Gross estate.

Taxable gift. As defined in I.R.C. § 2503, a taxable gift is the gift that is subject to the unified transfer tax. Thus, a taxable gift has been adjusted by the annual exclusion and other appropriate deductions (e.g., marital and charitable deductions).

Taxable income. Under Federal tax law, this is either the "gross income" of businesses or the "adjusted gross income" of individuals, minus deductions and exemptions. It is the income against which tax rates are applied to compute tax paid. Essence of "taxable income" is the accrual of some gain, profit or benefit to taxpayer. In re Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Corporate Income Tax 1966, 1967, 1968, 133 Vt. 132, 335 A.2d 310, 313.

Taxable year. This term in internal revenue statutes has different significations, according to its use, but when used in ordinarily accepted meaning, refers to annual accounting period of taxpayer. American-Hawaiian S. S. Co. v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 46 F.2d 592, 598. May refer to either calendar year or fiscal year upon which net taxable income is computed. New Mexico Elec. Service Co. v. Jones, 80 N.M. 791, 461 P.2d 924, 925. See also Accounting period; Fiscal year.

Tax anticipation warrants. A method of raising public money by the issuance of warrants payable out of tax receipts when collected.

Taxare /teksariy/. Lat. To rate or value. To tax; to lay a tax or tribute.

In old English practice, to assess; to rate or estimate; to moderate or regulate an assessment or rate.

Tax assessment. The value given to the property which is being taxed. Multiplying the assessed valuation by the tax rate yields the tax paid. See also Assessment.

Tax assessor. The official responsible for tax valuation of property. See also Assessor.

Taxatii /tekséday/. In old European law, soldiers of a garrison or fleet, assigned to a certain station.

Taxatio ecclesiastica /teksésh(i)yow akliyzyéstak/. The value of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of Pope Innocent IV granting to King Henry III the tenth of all spirituals for three years. This taxation was first made by Walter, bishop of Norwich, delegated by the pope to this office in 38 Hen. III, and hence called "Taxatio Norwicensis." It is also called "Pope Innocent's Valor."

Taxatio expensarum /teksésh(i)yow ékspen(t)-sérum/. In old English practice, taxation of costs.

Taxation. The process of taxing or imposing a tax. See Assessment; Equalization; Tax.

Double taxation. See Double taxation.

Progressive taxation. A taxing system in which the higher one's income, the higher the tax bracket one is put in.

Proportional taxation. A system of taxation in which the rate of taxation is uniform no matter what the size of income.

Regressive taxation. A system in which, unlike progressive taxation, as more and more income is earned, the tax rate falls.

Taxation of costs. The process of ascertaining and charging up the amount of costs in an action to which a party is legally entitled, or which are legally chargeable. See Fed.R.Civil P. 54(d). See also Costs.

Taxatio norwicensis /teksésh(i)yow nórwrachén(t)sas /"nórwrachén(t)sas/.. A valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, by
TAX AUDIT

Walter, bishop of Norwich, delegated by the pope to this office in 38 Hen. III.

Tax audit. See Audit.

Tax avoidance. The minimization of one’s tax liability by taking advantage of legally available tax planning opportunities. Tax avoidance may be contrasted with tax evasion which entails the reduction of tax liability by using illegal means.

Tax benefit rule. A rule which limits the recognition of income from the recovery of an expense or loss properly deducted in a prior tax year to the amount of the deduction that generated a tax benefit. Under the “tax benefit rule” if an amount deducted from gross income in one taxable year is recovered in a later year, the recovery is income in the later year. S. E. Evans, Inc. v. U. S., D.C.Ark., 317 F.Supp. 423, 424.

Tax certificate. Instrument issued to the buyer of property at a tax sale which entitles the holder to the property thus purchased if it is not redeemed within the period provided by law.

Tax court. The United States Tax Court is a court of record under Article I of the Constitution of the United States (see I.R.C. § 7441). The Court was created originally as the United States Board of Tax Appeals by the Revenue Act of 1924 (43 Stat. 336), an independent agency in the executive branch, and continued by the Revenue Act of 1926 (44 Stat. 105), the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. A change in name to the Tax Court of the United States was made by the Revenue Act of 1942 (56 Stat. 957), and the Article I status and change in name to United States Tax Court was made by the Tax Reform Act of 1969 (83 Stat. 730).

The Tax Court tries and adjudicates controversies involving the existence of deficiencies or overpayments in income, estate, gift, and personal holding company surtaxes in cases where deficiencies have been determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The U.S. Tax Court is one of three trial courts of original jurisdiction which decides litigation involving Federal income, death, or gift taxes. It is the only trial court where the taxpayer must not first pay the deficiency assessed by the IRS. The Tax Court will not have jurisdiction over a case unless the statutory notice of deficiency (i.e., “90-day letter”) has been issued by the IRS and the taxpayer files the petition for hearing within the time prescribed.

State tax courts. Such courts exist in certain states, e.g., Maryland, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Oregon. Generally, court has jurisdiction to hear appeals in all tax cases and has power to modify or change any valuation, assessment, classification, tax or final order appealed from. Certain of these tax courts (e.g., Minnesota) have small claims sessions at which citizens can argue their own cases without attorneys.

Tax credit. Type of offset in which the taxpayer is allowed a deduction from his tax for other taxes paid. A credit differs from a deduction to the extent that the former is subtracted from the tax while the latter is subtracted from income before the tax is computed.

Foreign tax credit. If a U.S. citizen or resident incurs or pays income taxes to a foreign country on income subject to U.S. tax, the taxpayer may be able to claim some of these taxes as a deduction or as a credit against the U.S. income.

Tax deduction. A subtraction from revenues and gains to arrive at taxable income. Tax deductions are technically different from tax exemptions, but the effect of both is to reduce gross income in computing taxable income. Both are different from tax credits, which are subtracted from the computed tax itself in determining taxes payable.

Tax deed. A proof of ownership of land given to the purchaser by the government after the land has been taken from another person by the government and sold for failure to pay taxes. See also Tax certificate.

Taxers. Two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge, England, to see the true gauge of all the weights and measures.

Tax evasion. Illegally paying less in taxes than the law permits; committing fraud in filing or paying taxes. Such act is a crime under I.R.C. § 7201. Compare Tax avoidance.

Tax exempt. Term pertains to property used for educational, religious, or charitable purposes which is ordinarily exempted by law from assessment for taxes; or to certain bonds issued by the federal government or a State or one of its subdivisions. Interest on State and local government bonds is exempt from federal income taxation, and interest on bonds of the United States or its instrumentalities is correspondingly exempt from State income taxation. See also Tax exempts.

Tax exemption. Immunity from the obligation of paying taxes in whole or in part.

Tax exempts. Investments that yield income that is tax exempt. Generally, tax exempts are municipal bonds with an interest that is not taxed by the federal government. See also Tax exempt.

Tax ferrets. Persons engaged in the business of searching for property omitted from taxation. Their activities when permitted are usually regarded as private rather than as part of a state agency. Pickett v. United States, C.C.A.Mo., 100 F.2d 909, 913.

Tax foreclosure. Seizure and sale by public authority of property for non-payment of taxes.

Tax fraud. See Fraud.

Tax-free exchange. Transfers of property specifically exempted from income tax consequences by the tax law. Examples are a transfer of property to a controlled corporation and a like-kind exchange.

Tax home. Since travel expenses of an employee are deductible only if the taxpayer is away from home, the deductibility of such expenses rests upon the definition of "tax home". The IRS position is that "tax home" is the business location, post or station of the taxpayer.

Taxing master. See Master.
Taxing power. The power of any government to levy taxes. See Sixteenth Amendment.

Tax laws. See Internal Revenue Code; Letter ruling.

Tax levy. The order for payment of taxes. Also, the determination of the total receipts to be collected by the tax. See Assessment; Levy.

Tax lien. A lien on real estate in favor of a state or local government which may be foreclosed for nonpayment of taxes. The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Federal Tax Lien Registration Act. See also Tax (Tax lien).

Federal tax lien. A lien placed on property by the federal government for unpaid federal taxes.

Taxpayer. One who pays taxes; person whose income is subject to taxation.

Tax preference. Tax imposed on preference income which is commonly investment income. It is designed to bring into tax income which otherwise escapes taxation.

Tax rate. Amount of tax imposed on personal or corporate income, capital gains, gifts, estates, sales, etc.

Tax rate schedules. Rate schedules which are used by upper income taxpayers. Separate rate schedules are provided for married individuals filing jointly, unmarried individuals who maintain a household, single taxpayers, estates and trusts and married individuals filing separate returns. See also Tax tables.

Tax rebate. Amount of money remitted by taxing authority after payment of taxes. See Rebate.

Tax redemption. The act by which a taxpayer reclaims property which has been taken for nonpayment of taxes. He does so by paying the delinquent taxes in addition to interest, costs and penalties.

Tax return. The form on which a report of income, deductions and exemptions is made and which is forwarded with the tax payment. See also Return.

Joint return. Tax return filed jointly by both spouses; permitted even though only one had income. See Split-income.

Separate return. Tax return filed by only one spouse and covering only his or her income.

Tax roll. The official record maintained by cities and towns listing the names of taxpayers and the assessed property.

Tax sale. Sale of property for nonpayment of taxes. See also Tax certificate.

Tax shelter. A device used by taxpayers to reduce or to defer payment of taxes. Common forms of tax shelter are real estate investments where such deductions as depreciation, interest, taxes, etc., are offset against taxpayer's ordinary income.

Tax "situs". A state or jurisdiction which has a substantial relationship to assets subject to taxation.

Tax surcharge. Tax added to another tax. See also Surcharge; Surtax.
TEARING OF WILL

purpose unless done with intent to revoke. Fleming v. Fleming, 367 Ill. 97, 10 N.E.2d 641, 642.

Technical. Belonging or peculiar to an art or profession. Technical terms are frequently called in the books "words of art." Immaterial, not affecting substantial rights, without substance.

Technical errors. Errors committed in course of trial which have not prejudiced the party and hence are not grounds for reversal. Fed.R.Civ.P. 61; Fed.R.Crim.P. 52. See also Harmless error.

Technical mortgage. A true and formal mortgage, as distinguished from other instruments which, in some respects, have the character of equitable mortgages.

Telling-penny. In old English law, a small tax or allowance to the sheriff from each tithing of his county towards the charge of keeping courts, etc.

Teep /tɪp/. In Hindu law, a note of hand; a promissory note given by a native banker or moneylender to zamindars and others, to enable them to furnish a trustee with security for the payment of their rents.

Teinland /tɛɪnˈlænd/ /ˈmaʊnə/. Those entitled to tithes.

Teinland /ˈtɛɪnˌlænd/ /ˈbɛɪn/. Sax. In old English law, land of a thane or Saxon noble; land granted by the crown to a thane or lord.

Telegram. A telegraphic dispatch; a message sent by telegraph. Message transmitted by radio, teletype, cable, any mechanical method of transmission or the like. U.C.C. § 1-201(41).

Telegram racket. Consists in a fictitious communication such as by radiogram or telephone call authorizing a trustee to pay out money. Cordovano v. State, 61 Ga.App. 590, 7 S.E.2d 45, 47.

Telegaphum /ˌteləˈgræfəm/. An Anglo-Saxon charter of land.

Teller. One who numbers or counts. An officer of a bank who receives or pays out money. Also one appointed to count the votes cast in a deliberative or legislative assembly or other meeting. The name was also given to certain officers formerly attached to the English exchequer.

Tellers In parliament. In the English parliament, the members of the house selected to count the members when a division takes place.

Telowe /ˈtɛləwər/. That labor which a tenant was bound to do for his lord for a certain number of days.

Tementale, or tenementale /tɛnt(ə)məntɛˈli/. A tax of two shillings upon every plow-land, a decennary.

Temere /ˈteɪməri/. Lat. In the civil law, rashly; inconsiderately. A plaintiff was said temere litigare who demanded a thing out of malice, or sued without just cause, and who could show no ground or cause of action.

Temperance. Habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions; restrained or moderate indulgence; as, temperance in eating and drinking, temperance in the indulgence of joy or mirth. Not synonymous with abstinence. Mayfield v. Fidelity Casualty Co. of New York, 16 Cal.App.2d 611, 61 P.2d 83, 89.

Tempest. A violent or furious storm; a current of wind rushing with extreme violence, and usually accompanied with rain or snow.

Templers /ˈtɛmplərz/. A religious order of knighthood, instituted about the year 1119, and so called because the members dwelt in a part of the temple of Jerusalem, and not far from the sepulcher of our Lord. They entertained Christian strangers and pilgrims charitably, and their profession was at first to defend travelers from highwaymen and robbers. The order was suppressed A.D. 1307, and their substance given partly to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other religious orders.

Temple. Two English inns of court, thus called because anciently the dwelling place of the Knights Templar. On the suppression of the order, they were purchased by some professors of the common law, and converted into hospitium or inns of court. They are called the "Inner" and "Middle Temple," in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the house of the Templars, and called the "Outer Temple," because situated without Temple Bar.

Temporalis /ˈtɛmpərərələs/. Lat. In the civil law, temporary; limited to a certain time.

Temporalis actio /ˈtɛmpərərələs əkˈʃən(y)əˈwə/. An action which could only be brought within a certain period.

Temporalis exceptio /ˈtɛmpərərələs əskˈɛpʃən(y)əˈwə/. A temporary exception which barred an action for a time only.

Temporalities /ˈtɛmpərəˈlædʒɪz/. In English law, the lay fees of bishops, with which their churches are endowed or permitted to be endowed by the liberality of the sovereign, and in virtue of which they become barons and lords of parliament. In a wider sense, the money revenues of a church, derived from pew rents, subscriptions, donations, collections, cemetery charges, and other sources.

Temporality. The laity; secular people.

Temporal lords. The peers of England; the bishops are not in strictness held to be peers, but merely lords of parliament.

Temporarily. Lasting for a time only, existing or continuing for a limited time, not of long duration, not permanent, transitory, changing, but a short time.

Temporary. That which is to last for a limited time only, as distinguished from that which is perpetual, or indefinite, in its duration. Opposite of permanent. Thus, temporary alimony is granted for the support of the wife pending the action for divorce; a temporary receiver is one appointed to take charge of property until a hearing is had and an adjudication made. As to temporary Disability; Insanity; Injunction; and Statute, see those titles.

Temporary administration. Fiduciary appointed by court to administer the affairs of a decedent estate for a short period of time before an administrator or executor can be appointed and qualified.
Temporary alimony. Interim order of payment to spouse pending final outcome of action for divorce.

Temporary detention. Temporary exercise of custody pending final determination on merits of criminal case.

Temporary disability. Healing period during which claimant is totally or partially unable to work due to injury, and continues as long as recovery or lasting improvement of injured person's condition can reasonably be expected. Corral v. McCrory Corp., Fla., 228 So.2d 900, 903.

Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals. The Economic Stabilization Act Amendments of 1971 (85 Stat. 743) created a special court known as the Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals of the United States. The court has exclusive jurisdiction of all appeals from the district courts of the United States in cases and controversies arising under the economic stabilization laws, and consists of eight district and circuit judges appointed by the Chief Justice.

Temporary Injunction. See Injunction; Temporary restraining order.

Temporary restraining order. An emergency remedy of brief duration which may issue only in exceptional circumstances and only until the trial court can hear arguments or evidence, as the circumstances require, on the subject matter of the controversy and otherwise determine what relief is appropriate. Paddington Corp. v. Foremost Sales Promotions, Inc., 13 Ill.App.3d 170, 300 N.E.2d 484, 487. One which is issued pending a hearing on an application for an injunction. Becker v. Becker, 66 Wis.2d 731, 225 N.W.2d 884, 886.

A temporary restraining order may be granted without written or oral notice to the adverse party or his attorney only if (1) it clearly appears from specific facts shown by affidavit or by the verified complaint that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the applicant before the adverse party or his attorney can be heard in opposition, and (2) the applicant's attorney certifies to the court in writing the efforts, if any, which have been made to give the notice and the reasons supporting his claim that notice should not be required. Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(b).

Temporis excepto /tēmporis eksēptō. Lat. In the civil law, a plea of time; a plea of lapse of time, in bar of an action. Corresponding to the plea of prescription, or the statute of limitations, in our law.

Tempus /tēmpas/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, time in general. A time limited; a season; e.g., tempus pessonis, mast time in the forest.

Tempus continuum /tēmpas kantīnyuwaam. In the civil law, a continuous or absolute period of time. A term which begins to run from a certain event, even though he for whom it runs has no knowledge of the event, and in which, when it has once begun to run, all the days are reckoned as they follow one another in the calendar.

Tempus enim modus tollendi obligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sul juris contemtores /tēmpas fynam mówdas tolēnday oblāgēyshiyōniiyz ēd ākshiyōniiyz, kwāya tēmpas kōhr̄t kōntōr̄ dēsadīyz ēt s(y)uway jūras kōntēmp(t)ōriȳyz/. For time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against the slothful and contemplers of their own rights.

Tempus semestre /tēmpas sēmēstr̄ȳ/. In old English law, the period of six months or half a year, consisting of one hundred and eighty-two days.

Tempus utile /tēmpas yuwd̄il̄ȳ/. In the civil law, a profitable or advantageous period of time. A term which begins to run from a certain event, only when he for whom it runs has obtained a knowledge of the event, and in which, when it has once begun to run, those days are not reckoned on which one has no experīandi potestas; i.e., on which one cannot prosecute his rights before a court. A period of time which runs beneficially: i.e., feast-days are not included, nor does it run against one absent in a foreign country, or on business of the republic, or detained by stress of weather. But one detained by sickness is not protected from its running; for it runs where there is power to act by an agent as well as where there is power to act personally; and the sick man might have deputed his agent.

Tenancy. A tenancy involves an interest in realty which passes to the tenant, and a possession exclusive even of that of landlord, except as lease permits landlord's entry, and saving his right to enter to demand rent or to make repairs. Layton v. A. I. Namm & Sons, 275 A.D. 246, 89 N.Y.S.2d 72, 74, 75. Possession or occupancy of land or premises under lease. Period of tenant's possession or occupancy. To constitute tenancy, tenant must acquire some definite control and possession of premises. Mercantile Realty Co. v. Allen Edmonds Shoe Corporation, 263 Ky. 597, 92 S.W.2d 837, 839.

General tenancy. A tenancy which is not fixed and made certain in point of duration by the agreement of the parties.

Joint tenancy. An estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will, arising by purchase or grant to two or more persons. Joint tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. The primary incident of joint tenancy is survivorship, by which the entire tenancy on the decease of any joint tenant remains to the survivors, and at length to the last survivor.

Type of ownership of real or personal property by two or more persons in which each owns an undivided interest in the whole and attached to which is the right of survivorship. Single estate in property owned by two or more persons under one instrument or contract. D'Ercole v. D'Ercole, D.C.Mass., 407 F.Supp. 1377, 1380.

See also Periodic Tenancy; Tenant.

Several tenancy. A tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

Tenancy at sufferance. See Tenant.

Tenancy at will. See Tenant.

Tenancy by the entirety. A tenancy which is created between a husband and wife and by which together they hold title to the whole with right of survivorship so that, upon death of either, other takes whole to exclusion of deceased heirs. Sams v. McDonald, 117 Ga.App. 336, 160 S.E.2d 594, 597. It is essentially a "joint tenancy," modified by the common-law theory that husband and wife are one person, and survivorship is the predominant and distinguishing feature of each. United States v. Jacobs, Ill. & N. Y., 306 U.S. 363, 59 S.Ct. 551, 555, 83 L.Ed. 763.

Tenancy for a period. A tenancy for years or for some fixed period.

Tenancy from month to month. See Tenant (Tenant at will).

Tenancy from period to period. A periodic tenancy which runs from month to month or from year to year.

Tenancy from year to year. A periodic tenancy which runs from one year to the next.

Tenancy in common. A form of ownership whereby each tenant (i.e., owner) holds an undivided interest in property. Unlike a joint tenancy or a tenancy by the entirety, the interest of a tenant in common does not terminate upon his or her prior death (i.e., there is no right of survivorship). Assume, for example, B and C acquire real estate as equal tenants in common, each having furnished one-half of the purchase price. Upon B's prior death, his one-half interest in the property passes to his estate or heirs.

Joint interest in which there is unity of possession, but separate and distinct titles. The relationship exists where property is held by several distinct titles by unity of possession, and is not an estate but a relation between persons, the only essential being a possessory right, as to which all are entitled to equal use and possession. De Mik v. Cargill, Okl., 485 P.2d 229, 233.

Tenancy in coparcenary. Of historical value only today; formerly it was a form of concurrent ownership in which property was acquired by intestacy by the female line of heirs and arose only by descent. Today, it is governed by the rules of tenancy in common.

Tenancy in partnership. Real estate held by partnership. See Uniform Partnership Act, § 25.

Tenant. In the broadest sense, one who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of right or title, whether in fee, for life, for years, at will, or otherwise. In a more restricted sense, one who holds lands of another; one who has the temporary use and occupation of real property owned by another person (called the "landlord"), the duration and terms of his tenancy being usually fixed by an instrument called a "lease." One who occupies another's land or premises in subordination to such other's title and with his assent, express or implied. One renting land and paying for it either in money or part of crop or equivalent.

See also Hold-over tenant; Lessee.

Feudal law. One who holds of another (called "lord" or "superior") by some service; as fealty or rent.

Joint tenants. Two or more persons to whom are granted lands or tenements to hold in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will. Persons who own lands by a joint title created expressly by one and the same deed or will. Joint tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. See also Tenancy (Joint tenancy).

Land tenant. See that title.

Quasi tenant at sufferance. An under-tenant, who is in possession at the determination of an original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over.

Sole tenant. He that holds lands by his own right only, without any other person being joined with him.

Tenancy at sufferance. One who after rightfully being in possession of rented premises continues after his right has terminated. He has no estate nor title but only naked possession without right and wrongfully, and stands in no privity to landlord and is not entitled to notice to quit, and is a bare licensee to whom landlord owes merely duty not wantonly nor willfully to injure him. Welch v. Rice, 61 Wyo. 511, 159 P.2d 502, 506, 509.

Tenant at will. One who holds possession of premises by permission of owner or landlord, but without fixed term. Where lands or tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold to him at the will of the lessor, by force of which lease the lessee is in possession. In this case the lessee is called "tenant at will," because he has no certain nor sure estate, for the lessor may put him out at what time it pleases him.

Tenant a volunte. L. Fr. A tenant at will.

Tenant by copy of court roll (shortly, "tenant by copy") is the old-fashioned name for a copyholder.

Tenant by the curtesy. One who, on the death of his wife seised of an estate of inheritance, after having by her issue born alive and capable of inheriting her estate, holds the lands and tenements for the term of his life.

Tenant by the manner. One who has a less estate than a fee in land which remains in the reversioner. He is so called because in avowries and other pleadings it is specially shown in what manner he is tenant of the land, in contradistinction to the veray tenant, who is called simply "tenant."

Tenant for life. One who holds lands or tenements for the term of his own life, or for that of any other person (in which case he is called "pur auter vie"), or for more lives than one.

Tenant for years. One who has the temporary use and possession of lands or tenements not his own, by virtue of a lease or demise granted to him by the owner, for a determinate period of time, as for a year or a fixed number of years.

Tenant from year to year. One who holds lands or tenements under the demise of another, where no certain term has been mentioned, but an annual rent has been reserved. One who holds over, by consent given either expressly or constructively, after the determination of a lease for years. See also Tenancy.
Tenant in capite. In feudal and old English law, tenant in chief, one who held immediately under the king, in right of his crown and dignity. 2 Bl.Comm. 60.

Tenant in common. Tenants who hold the same land together by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession, because none knows his own severalty, and therefore they all occupy promiscuously. Where two or more hold the same land, with interests accruing under different titles, or accruing under the same title, but at different periods, or conferred by words of limitation importing that the grantees are to take in distinct shares. See also Tenancy (Tenancy in common).

Tenant in dower. This arises where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance and dies; in this case the wife shall have the third part of all the lands and tenements whereof he was seised at any time during the coverture, to hold to herself for life, as her dower. 2 Bl.Comm. 129.

Tenant in fee-simple (or tenant in fee). He who has lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to hold to him and his heirs forever, generally, absolutely, and simply; without mentioning what heirs, but referring that to his own pleasure, or to the disposition of the law.

Tenant in severalty. One who holds lands and tenements in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein. 2 Bl.Comm. 179.

Tenant in tail. One who holds an estate in fee-tail, that is, an estate which, by the instrument creating it, is limited to some particular heirs, exclusive of others; as to the heirs of his body or to the heirs, male or female, of his body.

Tenant in tail ex provisione viri. Where an owner of lands, upon or previously to marrying a wife, settled lands upon himself and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and then died, the wife, as survivor, became tenant in tail of the husband's lands, in consequence of the husband's provision (ex provisione viri). Originally, she could bar the estate-tail like any other tenant in tail; but the husband's intestine having been merely to provide for her during her widowhood, and not to enable her to bar his children of their inheritance, she was early restrained from so doing, by the statute 32 Hen. VII, c. 36.

Tenant of the demesne. One who is tenant of a mesne lord; as, where A. is tenant of B, and C of A, B is the lord, A. the mesne lord, and C. tenant of the demesne.

Tenant paravalle. The under-tenant of land; that is, the tenant of a tenant; one who held of a mesne lord.

Tenants by the verge. The "same nature as tenants by copy of court roll" [i.e., copyholders]. But the reason why they be called 'tenants by the verge' is for that, when they will surrender their tenements into the hands of their lord to the use of another, they shall have a little rod (by the custome) in their hand, the which they shall deliver to the steward or to the bailiff, * * * and the steward or bailiff, according to the custome, shall deliver to him that taketh the land the same rod, or another rod, in the name of selsin; and for this cause they are called 'tenants by the verge,' but they have no other evidence [titled-deed] but by copy of court roll."

Tenant to the praecipe. Before the English fines and recoveries act, if land was conveyed to a person for life with remainder to another in tail, the tenant in tail in remainder was unable to bar the entail without the concurrence of the tenant for life, because a common recovery could only be suffered by the person seised of the land. In such a case, if the tenant for life wished to concur in barring the entail, he usually conveyed his life-estate to some other person, in order that the praecipe in the recovery might be issued against the latter, who was therefore called the "tenant to the praecipe."

Tenanted repair. Such a repair as will render premises fit for present habitation.

Tenant-right. In England, the right of tenant on termination of tenancy to payment for unexhausted improvements made on his holding.

Tenant's fixtures. This phrase signifies things which are fixed to the freehold of the demised premises, but which the tenant may detach and take away, provided he does so in season.

Tenocon. L. Fr. A dispute; a quarrel.

Tend. To have a leaning; serve, contribute, or conduce in some degree or way, or have a more or less direct bearing or effect; to be directed as to any end, object, or purpose; to have a tendency, conscious or unconscious, to any end, object or purpose. Rogers v. State, 122 Tex.Cr.R. 331, 54 S.W.2d 1010, 1012.

In old English law, to tender or offer.

Tender. An offer of money. The act by which one produces and offers to a person holding a claim or demand against him the amount of money which he considers and admits to be due, in satisfaction of such claim or demand, without any stipulation or condition. As used in determining whether one party may place the other in breach of contract for failure to perform, means a readiness and willingness to perform in case of concurrent performance by other party, with present ability to do so, and notice to other party of such readiness. Monroe St. Properties, Inc. v. Carpenter, C.A.Ariz., 407 F.2d 379, 380. Essential characteristics of tender are unconditional offer to perform coupled with manifested ability to carry out the offer and production of subject matter of tender. Collins v. Kingsberry Homes Corp., D.C. Ala., 243 F.Supp. 741, 744.

At a settlement under an agreement of sale the seller tenders the executed deed to the purchaser, who tenders the remainder of the purchase price to the seller.

The actual proffer of money, as distinguished from mere proposal or proposition to proffer it. Hence mere written proposal to pay money, without offer of cash, is not "tender."

Tender, though usually used in connection with an offer to pay money, is properly used in connection with offer of property other than money.

Tender, in common law pleading, is a plea by defendant that he has been always ready to pay the debt demanded, and before the commencement of the action tendered it to the plaintiff, and now brings it into court ready to be paid to him, etc.

Legal tender is that kind of coin, money, or circulating medium which the law compels a creditor to accept in payment of his debt, when tendered by the debtor in the right amount. See also Legal tender.

See also Legally sufficient tender.

Tender of performance. Offer to perform which is raised upon it to the appropriate mode of decision.

The common tender of an issue of fact by a defendant is expressed by the words, "and of this he puts himself upon the country."

Tender offer. An offer to purchase shares made by one company direct to the stockholders of another company, sometimes subject to a minimum and/or a maximum that the offeror will accept, communicated to the shareholders by means of newspaper advertisements and (if the offeror can obtain the shareholders list, which is not often unless it is a friendly tender) by a general mailing to the entire list of shareholders, with a view to acquiring control of the second company. Used in an effort to go around the management of the second company, which is resisting acquisition. A take-over bid. Tender offers are regulated by state and federal securities laws; e.g., Williams Act, § 14(e), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78n(e).

Tender of issue. A form of words in common law pleading, by which a party offers to refer the question raised upon it to the appropriate mode of decision. The common tender of an issue of fact by a defendant is expressed by the words, "and of this he puts himself upon the country."

Tender offer. An offer to purchase shares made by one company direct to the stockholders of another company, sometimes subject to a minimum and/or a maximum that the offeror will accept, communicated to the shareholders by means of newspaper advertisements and (if the offeror can obtain the shareholders list, which is not often unless it is a friendly tender) by a general mailing to the entire list of shareholders, with a view to acquiring control of the second company. Used in an effort to go around the management of the second company, which is resisting acquisition. A take-over bid. Tender offers are regulated by state and federal securities laws; e.g., Williams Act, § 14(e), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78n(e).

Tender of performance. Offer to perform which is commonly necessary to hold the defaulting party to a contract liable for breach.

Tenement /tëmnant/. This term, in its common acceptation, is only applied to houses and other buildings, but in its original, proper, and legal sense it signifies everything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal, kind. Thus, liberum tenementum, frank tenement, or freehold, is applicable not only to lands and other solid objects, but also to offices, rents, commons, advowsons, franchises, peerages, etc. At common law, “tenements” included lands, other inheritances, capable of being held in freehold, and rents. Wood v. Galpert, Ohio Com.Pl. 199 N.E.2d 900, 901.

Dominant tenement. One for the benefit or advantage of which an easement exists or is enjoyed.

Servient tenement. One which is subject to the burden of an easement existing for or enjoyed by another tenement. See Easement.

Tenement house. Low rent apartment building, usually in poor condition, meeting only minimal, if even that, safety and sanitary conditions.

Tenemental land /tënméntal lënd/. Land distributed by a lord among his tenants, as opposed to the demesnes which were occupied by himself and his servants.

Tenements legatis /tënaméntam lagéydas/. An ancient writ, lying to the city of London, or any other corporation (where the old custom was that men might devise by will lands and tenements, as well as goods and chattels), for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same.

Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA). A government-owned corporation that conducts a unified program of resource development for the advancement of economic growth in the Tennessee Valley region. The Authority’s program of activities includes flood control, navigation development, electric power produc-
Tenure /tényar/. Generally, tenure is a right, term, or mode of holding or occupying, and "tenure of an office" means the manner in which it is held, especially with regard to time. Winterberg v. University of Nevada System, 89 Nev. 358, 513 P.2d 1248, 1250.

Status afforded to teacher or professor upon completion of trial period, thus protecting him or her from summary dismissal. Tenure denotes relinquishment of the employer's unfettered power to terminate the employee's services. Zumwalt v. Trustees of California State Colleges, 31 Cal.App.3d 611, 107 Cal. Rptr. 573, 579.

Term of office. Duration of holding public or private office. The tenure of federal judges is during life and good behavior. The tenure of merit system employees is during satisfactory performance of duties until a fixed age of retirement unless the position is discontinued.

Feudal law. The mode or system of holding lands or tenements in subordination to some superior which, in feudal ages, was the leading characteristic of real property. Gibbs v. Titelman, D.C.Pa., 369 F.Supp. 38, 49.

Tenure is the direct result of feudalism, which separated the dominium directum (the dominion of the soil), which is placed mediately or immediately in the crown, from the dominion utile (the possessory title), the right to the use and profits in the soil, designated by the term "seisin," which is the highest interest a subject can acquire. Kavanaugh v. Cohoes Power & Light Corporation, 114 Misc. 590, 187 N.Y.S. 216, 231.

Wharton gives the following list of tenures which were ultimately developed:

Lay Tenures

I. Frank tenement, or freehold. (1) The military tenures (abolished, except grand serjeanty, and reduced to free socage tenures) were: Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry; grand serjeanty; cornage. (2) Free socage, or plow-service; either petit serjeanty, tenure in burgage, or gavelkind.

II. Villeinage. (1) Pure villeinage (whence copyholds at the lord's [nominal] will, which is regulated according to custom). (2) Privileged villeinage, sometimes called "villein socage" (whence tenure in ancient demesne, which is an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the lord's will), and is of three kinds: Tenure in ancient demesne; privileged copyholds, customary freeholds, or free copyholds; copyholds of base tenure.

Spiritual Tenures

I. Frankalmoigne, or free alms.

II. Tenure by divine service.

Tenure by divine service. Exists where an ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, holds land by a certain divine service; as, to say prayers on a certain day in every year, "or to distribute in almes to an hundred poore men an hundred pence at such a day."

Tenured faculty. Those members of a school's teaching staff who hold their position for life or until retirement. They may not be discharged except for cause.
Term. A word or phrase; an expression; particularly one which possesses a fixed and known meaning in some science, art, or profession.

A fixed period; period of determined or prescribed duration. A specified period of time; e.g. term of lease, court session, sentence. The word in a legal sense means a fixed and definite period of time which the law describes that an officer may hold an office. Sueppel v. City Council of Iowa City, 257 Iowa 1350, 136 N.W.2d 523, 527.

In civil law, a space of time granted to a debtor for discharging his obligation.

Bounds, limitation, or extent of time for which an estate is granted; as when a man holds an estate for any limited or specific number of years, which is called his “term,” and he himself is called, with reference to the term he so holds, the “termor,” or “tenant of the term.”

Portion of agreement which relates to particular matter. U.C.C. § 1-201(42). A condition in a contract, instrument, agreement, etc. See also Open price term.

When used with reference to a court, signifies the space of time during which the court holds a session. A session signifies the time during the term when the court sits for the transaction of business, and the session commences when the court convenes for the term, and continues until final adjournment, either before or at the expiration of the term. The term of the court is the time prescribed by law during which it may be in session. The session of the court is the time of its actual sitting. But “term” and “session” are often used interchangeably. See also Session; and Term of court, below.

General term. A phrase used in some jurisdictions to denote the ordinary session of a court, for the trial and determination of causes, as distinguished from a special term, for the hearing of motions or arguments or the despatch of various kinds of formal business, or the trial of a special list or class of cases. Or it may denote a sitting of the court in banc.

Regular term. A term begun at the time appointed by law, and continued, in the discretion of the court, to such time as it may appoint, consistent with the law.

Special term. In court practice in certain states, that branch of the court which is held by a single judge for hearing and deciding in the first instance motions and causes of equitable nature is called the “special term,” as opposed to the “general term,” held by three judges (usually) to hear appeals.

Peculiar or unusual conditions imposed on a party before granting some application to the favor of the court.

Term attendant on the inheritance. See Attendant terms.

Term bonds. A bond issue whose component bonds all mature at the same time. Contrast with “serial bonds.” See also Bond.

Term fee. In English practice, a certain sum which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party; payable for every term in which any proceedings subsequent to the summons shall take place.

Term for deliberating. The time given to the beneficiary heir, to examine if it be for his interest to accept or reject the succession which has fallen to him.

Term for years. An estate for years and the time during which such estate is to be held are each called a “term;” hence the term may expire before the time, as by a surrender.

Term in gross. A term of years is said to be either in gross (outstanding) or attendant upon the inheritance. It is outstanding, or in gross, when it is unattached or disconnected from the estate or inheritance, as where it is in the hands of some third party having no interest in the inheritance; it is attendant, when vested in some trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance.

Term loan. A loan with a maturity date, as opposed to a demand loan which is due whenever the lender requests payment.

Term of court. Signifies the space of time prescribed by law during which a court holds session. The court’s session may actually extend beyond the term. The October Term of the Supreme Court of the United States is now the only term during which the court sits, and lasts from October to June. The U.S. district courts do not have formal terms. 28 U.S.C.A. § 138. See also General term; Regular term; Special term, supra.

Term of lease. The word “term,” when used in connection with a lease, means the period which is granted for the lessee to occupy the premises, and does not include the time between the making of the lease and the tenant’s entry. De Pauw University v. United Electric Coal Cos., 299 Ill.App. 339, 20 N.E.2d 146, 149.

Term of office. The period during which elected officer or appointee is entitled to hold office, perform its functions, and enjoy its privileges and emoluments.

Term probatory. The period of time allowed to the promoter of an ecclesiastical suit to produce his witnesses, and prove the facts on which he rests his case.

Term to conclude. In English ecclesiastical practice, an appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are understood to renounce all further exhibits and allegations.

Term to propound all things. In English ecclesiastical practice, an appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are to exhibit all the acts and instruments which make for their respective causes.

Under terms. A party is said to be under terms when an indulgence is granted to him by the court in its discretion, on certain conditions. Thus, when an injunction is granted ex parte, the party obtaining it is put under terms to abide by such order as to damages as the court may make at the hearing.

Termes de la Ley. Terms of the law. The name of a lexicon of the law French words and other technicalities of legal language in old times.

Terminable interest. An interest in property which terminates upon the death of the holder or upon the occurrence of some other specified event. The transfer of a terminable interest by one spouse to the other spouse does not qualify for the marital deduction.

Terminable property. This name is sometimes given to property of such a nature that its duration is not perpetual or indefinite, but is limited or liable to terminate upon the happening of an event or the expiration of a fixed term; e.g., a leasehold, a life-annuity, etc.

Terminate. To put an end to; to make to cease; to end.

Terminating building societies. Societies, in England, where the members commence their monthly contributions on a particular day, and continue to pay them until the realization of shares to a given amount for each member, by the advance of the capital of the society to such members as required it, and the payment of interest as well as principal by them, so as to insure such realization within a given period of years. They have been superseded by permanent building societies.

Termination. End in time or existence; close; cessation; conclusion. Perruccio v. Allen, 156 Conn. 282, 240 A.2d 912, 914.

With respect to a lease or contract, term refers to an ending, usually before the end of the anticipated term of the lease or contract, which termination may be by mutual agreement or may be by exercise of one party of one of his remedies due to the default of the other party. As regards a partnership, term refers to a winding up and cessation of the business as opposed to only a technical ending (as upon the death of a partner) which is a dissolution. A dissolved partnership may terminate or may be continued by a partnership of the remaining partners, including perhaps the estate or heirs of the deceased partner.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, "termination" means legally ending a contract without its being broken by either side. U.C.C. § 2-106.

See also Dissolution; Expiration; Lapse.

Termination of conditional contract. To abrogate so much of it as remains unperformed, doing away with existing agreement under agreed terms and consequences. To put an end to all of the unperformed portions thereof. Blodgett v. Merritt Annex Oil Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 169, 65 P.2d 123, 125.

Termination of employment. Within policies providing that insurance should cease immediately upon termination of employment, means a complete severance of relationship of employer and employee. Edwards v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 296 Ky. 445, 177 S.W.2d 574, 577, 578.

Terminer /tärmanar/. L. Fr. To determine. See Oyer and terminer.

Termini /tärmanay/. Lat. Ends; bounds; limiting or terminating points.

Termino /termínyow/. In Spanish law, a common; common land. Common because of vicinage.
TERRA EXTENDENDA

Terra extendenda /tēhra ēkstendēnda/. A writ addressed to an escheator, etc., that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery.

Terra frusca, or frusca /tēhra friska/. Fresh land, not lately plowed.

Terrage /tēhra jē/. In old English law, a kind of tax or charge on land; a boon or duty of plowing, reaping, etc.

Terrages /tēhra jēges/. An exemption from all uncertain services.

Terra hydata /tēhra hodēyda/. Land subject to the payment of hydage.

Terra lucrabilis /tēhra l(y)uwrkēybalas/. Land gained from the sea or inclosed out of a waste.

Terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur /tēhra mēnēns(v)ākē vōkōpēntay kan(t)sēyddar/. Land lying unoccupied is given to the first occupant.

Terra normanorum /tēhra nōrmānōr/. Land held by a Norman.

Terra nova /tēhra nōwva/. Land newly converted from wood ground or arable.

Terra putura /tēhra pyuwtyūra/. Land in forests, held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein.

Terrarius /tērrēriyas/. In old English law, a landholder.

Terra sabulosa /tēhra sēbyalōwswa/. Gravelly or sandy ground.

Terra salica /tēhra sēlykas/. In Salic law, the land of the house; the land within that inclosure which belonged to a German house. No portion of the inheritance of Salic land passes to a woman, but this the male sex acquires; that is, the sons succeed in that inheritance.

Terra testamentalis /tēhra tēståmentēylys/. Gavel-kind land, being disposable by will.

Terra transit cum onere /tēhra trēnt(d)zat kām ōwnarīys/. Land passes with the incumbrances.

Terra vestita /tēhra vāstāyda/. Land sown with corn.

Terra wainabils /tēhra wēynēybalas/. Tillable land.

Terra warrenata /tēhra wōhrēnēyda/. Land that has the liberty of free-warren.

Terre-tenant /tērētenant/tär"/. He who is literally in the occupation or possession of the land, as distinguished from the owner out of possession. But, in a more technical sense, the person who is seised of the land, though not in actual occupancy of it, and locally, in Pennsylvania, one who purchases and takes land subject to the existing lien of a mortgage or judgment against a former owner.

Terrier. In English law, a landroll or survey of lands, containing the quantity of acres, tenants' names, and such like; and in the exchequer there is a terrier of all the glebe lands in England, made about 1338. In general, an ecclesiastical terrier contains a detail of the temporal possessions of the church in every parish.

Terris bonis et catallis rehaendis post purationem /tēhras bōwnas ēt katālis rī(h)bēndas pōwst purgēshiyōwnam/. A writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels, formerly seized, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged.

Terris et catallis tentis ultra debitum levatum /tēhras ēt katālis tēntis ālār dēbdōm lēvāydam/. A judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor who is distrained above the amount of the debt.

Terris liberandis /tēhras līberāndas/. A writ that lay for a man convicted by attaint, to bring the record and process before the king, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver to him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the strip and waste. Also it was a writ for the delivery of lands to the heir, after homage and relief performed, or upon security taken that he should perform them.

Territorial. Having to do with a particular area; for example, territorial jurisdiction is the power of a court to take cases from within a particular geographical area.

Territorial courts. U.S. courts in each territory, such as the Virgin Islands. They serve as both Federal and state courts.

Territorial jurisdiction. Territory over which a government or a subdivision thereof has jurisdiction. See also Extra-territorial jurisdiction.

Territorial property. The land and water over which the state has jurisdiction and control whether the legal title be in the state itself or in private individuals. See also Extra-territorial jurisdiction.

Territorial waters. Term refers to all inland waters, all waters between line of mean high tide and line of ordinary low water, and all waters seaward to a line three geographical miles distant from the coast line. C. A. B. v. Island Airlines, Inc., D.C.Hawaii, 235 F.Supp. 990, 1002. That part of the sea adjacent to the coast of a given country which is by international law deemed to be within the sovereignty of that country, so that its courts have jurisdiction over offenses committed on those waters, even by a person on board a foreign ship. See Three-mile limit.
Territory. A part of a country separated from the rest, and subject to a particular jurisdiction. Geographical area under the jurisdiction of another country or sovereign power.

A portion of the United States, not within the limits of any state, which has not yet been admitted as a state of the Union, but is organized, with a separate legislature, and with executive and judicial officers appointed by the president. See Trust territory.

An assigned geographical area of responsibility; e.g. salesman’s territory.

Territory of a judge. The territorial jurisdiction of a judge; the bounds, or district, within which he may lawfully exercise his judicial authority.

Terror. Alarm; fright; dread; the state of mind induced by the apprehension of hurt from some hostile or threatening event or manifestation; fear caused by the appearance of danger. In an indictment for riot at common law, it must have been charged that the acts done were “to the terror of the people.”

Terroristic threats. A person is guilty of a felony if he threatens to commit any crime of violence with purpose to terrorize another or to cause evacuation of a building, place of assembly, or facility of public transportation, or otherwise to cause serious public inconvenience, or in reckless disregard of the risk of causing such terror or inconvenience. Model Penal Code, § 211.3.

Tertia denunciation /tirsh(iy)as dMwn(t)siyeysh(iy)ow/. Lat. In old English law, third publication or proclamation of intended marriage.

Tertius interveniens /tirsh(iy)as int3rviyn(i)yen(d)z/. Lat. In the civil law, a third person intervening; a third person who comes in between the parties to a suit; one who interpleads.

Test. To bring one to a trial and examination, or to ascertain the truth or the quality or fitness of a thing. Something by which to ascertain the truth respecting another thing; a criterion, gauge, standard, or norm.

In public law, an inquiry or examination addressed to a person appointed or elected to a public office, to ascertain his qualifications therefor, but particularly a scrutiny of his political, religious, or social views, or his attitude of past and present loyalty or disloyalty to the government under which he is to act.

See also Competitive civil service examination; Examination.

Discovery. Requests for permission to test tangible things in civil actions are governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 34. Requests for reports or results of examinations or tests are governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 35, and Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

Testable. A person is said to be testable when he has capacity to make a will; a man of twenty-one years of age and of sane mind is testable.

Test act. The statute 25 Car. II, c. 2, which directed all civil and military officers to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and make the declaration against transubstantiation, within six months after their admission, and also within the same time receive the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England, under penalty of £500 and disability to hold the office. This was abolished by St. 9 Geo. IV, c. 17, so far as concerns receiving the sacrament, and a new form of declaration was substituted.

Test action or case. An action selected out of a considerable number of suits, concurrently depending in the same court, brought by several plaintiffs against the same defendant, or by one plaintiff against different defendants, all similar in their circumstances, and embracing the same questions, and to be supported by the same evidence, the selected action to go first to trial (under an order of court equivalent to consolidation), and its decision to serve as a test of the right of recovery in the others, all parties agreeing to be bound by the result of the test action. A lawsuit brought to establish an important legal principle or right.

Testacy /téstas(i)y/. The state or condition of leaving a will at one’s death. Opposed to “ intestacy.”

Testa de nevi /téstá da néval/. An ancient and authentic record in two volumes, in the custody of the king’s remembrancer in the exchequer, said to be compiled by John de Nevil, a justice itinerant, in the eighteenth and twenty-fourth years of Henry III. These volumes were printed in 1807, under the authority of the commissioners of the public records, and contain an account of fees held either immediately of the king or of others who held of the king in capite; fees held in frankalmoigne; sejeanties holden of the king; widows and heiresses of tenants in capite, whose marriages were in the gift of the king; churches in the gift of the king; escheats, and sums paid for scutages and aids, especially within the county of Hereford.

Testament. Under the early English law, a term that referred to the disposition of personal property by will; i.e. by “last will and testament.” The words “and testament” are no longer necessary since a will now relates to both real and personal property.

Military testament. In English law, a nuncupative will, that is, one made by word of mouth, by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law requires in other cases. See also Nuncupative will; Soldier’s will.

Mutual testaments. Wills made by two persons who leave their effects reciprocally to the survivor.

Mystic testament. A form of testament made under Spanish law which prevailed in Louisiana and California. In the law of Louisiana, a sealed testament. The mystic or secret testament, otherwise called the “closed testament,” is made in the following manner: The testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them himself or has caused them to be written by another person. The paper containing those dispositions, or the paper serving as their envelope, must be closed and sealed. The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence. Then he shall declare to the notary, in presence of the witnesses, that that paper contains his testament written by himself, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of super-scription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator, and by the notary and the witnesses. Civ.Code La. art. 1584.

Testamenta cum duo inter se pugnantia reperuntur, ultimum ratum est; sic est, cum duo inter se pugnantia reperuntur in eodem testamento /testamenta kǎm d(y)ůwów õntar sìy pāgniāsh(y)a rāpřirýnant, īltama rēydam ēst; sīk ēst, kǎm d(y)ůwów õntar sìy pāgniāsh(y)a rāpřirýnant in lyōwdam těstaměntow/.

When two conflicting wills are found, the last prevails; so it is when two conflicting clauses occur in the same will.

Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent /testaměnta lětisšamam intěrprěšš(y)ǒnam habirỳ débant/.

Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation.

Testamentary. Pertaining to a will or testament; as testamentary causes. Derived from, founded on, or appointed by a testament or will; as a testamentary guardian, letters testamentary, etc.

A paper, instrument, document, gift, appointment, etc., is said to be "testamentary" when it is written or made so as not to take effect until after the death of the person making it, and to be revocable and retain the property under his control during his life, although he may have believed that it would operate as an instrument of a different character. See In re Murphy's Estate, 193 Wash. 400, 75 P.2d 916, 920.

Letters testamentary. The formal instrument of authority and appointment given to an executor by the proper court, upon the admission of the will to probate, empowering him to enter upon the discharge of his office as executor.

Testamentary capacity. Generally defined as ability to know and understand business in which testatrix is engaged, effect of action in making will, capacity to know objects of her bounty and claims upon her, and general nature and extent of her property. Miller v. Flyr, Tex.Civ.App., 447 S.W.2d 195, 203. That measure of mental ability which is recognized in law as sufficient for the making of a will. A testator to have such capacity must have sufficient mind and memory to intelligently understand the nature of business in which he is engaged, to comprehend generally the nature and extent of property which constitutes his estate, and which he intends to dispose of, and to recollect the objects of his bounty. See also Capacity.

Testamentary character. Of the nature or pertaining to a disposition of property at death.

Testamentary class. Body of persons, uncertain in number at time of gift, ascertainable in future, and each taking in equal or in other definite proportions. A "testamentary class gift" is a gift to a group whose number at the time of the gift is uncertain but which will be ascertained at some future time when all who constitute the class will take an equal or other definite portion, the amount of the share of each being dependent upon the number that ultimately constitutes the class. Lux v. Lux, 109 R.I. 592, 288 A.2d 701, 705.

Testamentary disposition. A disposition of property by way of gift, will or deed which is not to take effect unless the grantor dies or until that event.

Testamentary guardian. A guardian appointed by the last will of parent for the person and real and personal estate of child until the latter arrives of full age. In re De Saulles, 101 Misc. 447, 167 N.Y.S. 445, 453.

Testamentary paper or instrument. An instrument in the nature of a will; an unprobated will; a paper writing which is of the character of a will, though not formally such, and, if allowed as a testament, will have the effect of a will upon the devolution and distribution of property.

Testamentary power. Power to make a will. A power of appointment exercisable only by will. Restatement, Property, § 321(1).

Testamentary trust. Trust which takes effect at the death of the settlor. See also Trust.

Testamentary trustee. See Trustee.

Testamentum factio /těstamentum faťš(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, the ceremony of making a testament, either as testator, heir, or witness.

Letters testamentary. The formal instrument of authority and appointment given to an executor by the proper court, upon the admission of the will to probate, empowering him to enter upon the discharge of his office as executor.

Testamentary capacity. Generally defined as ability to know and understand business in which testatrix is engaged, effect of action in making will, capacity to know objects of her bounty and claims upon her, and general nature and extent of her property. Testament or will; one who dies leaving a will. This clause; such as a testament containing a capias, a testament in fi. fa., and a testament ca. sa. See Testamentum.

Testamentum writ /testeydam rit/. In practice, a writ containing a testament clause; such as a testament capias, a testament in fi. fa., and a testament ca. sa. See Testamentum.

Testator /testeydar/. One who makes or has made a testament or will; one who dies leaving a will. This term is borrowed from the civil law.

Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplenda secundum Testator /testeydar/. One who makes or has made a testament or will; one who dies leaving a will. This term is borrowed from the civil law.

Testation /testeyshan/. Witness; evidence.

Teste meipso /testiy miyipsow/. Lat. In old English testimony the sovereign, used at the conclusion of charters, and other public instruments, and also of original writs out of chancery.

Teste of a writ /tSstiy av a rit/. In practice, the conclusion clause, commencing with the words, “Teste,” etc. A writ which bears the teste is sometimes said to be tested.

In English law, “teste” is a word commonly used in the last part of every writ, wherein the date is contained beginning with the words, “Teste meipso,” meaning the sovereign, if the writ be an original writ, or be issued in the name of the sovereign; but, if the writ be a judicial writ, then the word “Teste” is followed by the name of the chief judge of the court in which the action is brought, or, in case of a vacancy of such office, in the name of the senior puisne judge.

Testes /testiyz/. Lat. Witnesses.

Testes ponderantur, non numerantur /téstiyz pón- darántár, nóñ n(y)uwmarántár/. Witnesses are weighed, not numbered. That is, in case of a conflict of evidence, the truth is to be sought by weighing the credibility of the respective witnesses, not by the mere numerical preponderance on one side or the other.

Testes qui postulat dehet dare eis sumptus competentes /téstiyz kwéy pós(h)cholat débott dériy iyas sán(p)tas kòmpéntíyiyz/. Whosoever demands witnesses must find them in competent provision.

Testes, trial per /tráy(a)l pár téstiyz/. A trial had before a judge without the intervention of a jury, in which the judge is left to form in his own breast his sentence upon the credit of the witnesses examined; but this mode of trial, although it was common in the civil law, was seldom resorted to in the practice of the common law, but it is now becoming common when each party waives his right to a trial by jury.

Testibus deponentibus in pari numero, dignioribus est credendum /téstius diipyontiánbás in péray n(y)uwmarow, digni(y)órásbas ést krodéndámb/. Where the witnesses who testify are in equal number (on both sides), the more worthy are to be believed.

Testify. To bear witness; to give evidence as a witness; to make a solemn declaration, under oath or affirmation, in a judicial inquiry, for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact.

Testimonial. In the nature of testimony. Evidence is said to be testimonial when elicited from a witness in contrast to documentary evidence or real evidence.

Besides its ordinary meaning of a written recommendation to character, “testimonial” has a special meaning, under St. 39 Eliz., c. 17, § 3, passed in 1597, under which it signified a certificate under the hand of a justice of the peace, testifying the place and time when and where a soldier or mariner landed, and the place of his dwelling or birth, unto which he was to pass, and a convenient time limited for his passage. Every idle and wandering soldier or mariner not having such a testimonial, or willfully exceeding for above fourteen days the time limited thereby, or forging or counterfeiting such testimonial, was to suffer death as a felon, without benefit of clergy. This English act was repealed, in 1812, by St. 52 Geo. III, c. 31.

Testimonial evidence. Evidence elicited from a witness in contrast to documentary or real evidence. See also Evidence.

Testimonial proof. In the civil law, proof by the evidence of witnesses, i.e., parol evidence, as distinguished from proof by written instruments, which is called “literal” proof.

Testimonia ponderanda sunt, non numeranda /téstamówn(i)yow/. In Spanish law, an authentic copy of a deed or other instrument, made by a notary and given to an interested party as evidence of his title, the original remaining in the public archives.

Testimoniunm clause /téstamówn(i)ym klóz/. In conveyancing, that part of a deed which contains the words, “This indenture witnesseth.”

Testimony. Evidence given by a competent witness under oath or affirmation; as distinguished from evidence derived from writings, and other sources. Testimony is particular kind of evidence that comes to tribunal through live witnesses speaking under oath or affirmation in presence of tribunal, judicial or quasi-judicial. State v. Ricci, 107 R.I. 582, 268 A.2d 692, 697.

In common parlance, "testimony" and "evidence" are synonymous. Testimony properly means only such evidence as is delivered by a witness on the trial of a cause, either orally or in the form of affidavits or depositions.

See also Evidence; Failure to testify; Opinion evidence or testimony; Perpetuating testimony.

Expert testimony. See Evidence (Expert evidence); Expert witness.

Negative testimony. Testimony not bearing directly upon the immediate fact or occurrence under consideration, but evidencing facts from which it may not possibly have happened.

Positive testimony. Direct testimony that a thing did or did not happen.

Testis /téstas/. Lat. A witness; one who gives evidence in court, or who witnesses a document.

Testis de visu preponderat allis /téstas diy dáyz(y)uw prúpôndarat éylyyas/. An eye-witness is preferred to others.

Testis lupanaris sufficit ad factum in lupanari /téstas l(y)úwpanárás sáfósقدس ad fáktaṃ in l(y)úwpanérya/. A lewd person is a sufficient witness to an act committed in a brothel.

Testis nemo in sua causa esse potest /téstas nímyinow in ak(y)úwwo kóza éšiy pówdsst/. No one can be a witness in his own cause.

Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auritis decern /téstas okýaléydas yúwnas plás válet kwám óhráyday dész/. One eye-witness is worth more than ten ear-witnesses.

Textmoigne. An old law French term, denoting evidence or testimony of a witness.

Textmoignes ne poent testifiser le negative, mes l'affermitive. Witnesses cannot testify to a negative; they must testify to an affirmative.

Test-oath. An oath required to be taken as a criterion of the fitness of the person to fill a public or political office; but particularly an oath of fidelity and allegiance (past or present) to the established government. See also Loyalty oath.

Test-paper. In practice, a paper or instrument shown to a jury as evidence. A term used in the Pennsylvania courts.

Tests. See Test.

Textbook. A legal text or treatise which presents principles on any branch of the law. See also Hornbook.

Textus roffensis /tékstas rofén(t)sas/. In old English law, the Rochester text. An ancient manuscript containing many of the Saxon laws, and the rights, customs, tenures, etc., of the church of Rochester, drawn up by Ernulph, bishop of that see from A.D. 1114 to 1124.

Thanland /ðeymlën/d/. In old English law, the land which was granted by the Saxon kings to their thains or thanes was so called.

Thalweg /θálvéyk/. Old German spelling of Talweg, which title see.

Thanage of the king /ðeynaj av ðe kig/. A certain part of the king's land or property, of which the ruler or governor was called "thane."

Thane /ðeyn/. An Anglo-Saxon nobleman; an old title of honor, perhaps equivalent to "baron." There were two orders of thanes,—the king's thanes and the ordinary thanes. Soon after the Conquest this name was disused.

Thanelands /ðeymlën/dz/. Such lands as were granted by charter of the Saxon kings to their thanes with all immunities, except from the trinoda necessitas.

Thaneship /ðeynship/. The office and dignity of a thane; the seigniory of a thane.

That. A relative pronoun equivalent to who or which, either singular or plural.

Thawies Inn. An inn of chancery. See Inns of chancery.

The. An article which particularizes the subject spoken of. "Grammatical niceties should not be resorted to without necessity; but it would be extending liberality to an unwarrantable length to confound the articles 'a' and 'the'. The most unlettered persons understand that 'a' is indefinite, but 'the' refers to a certain object."

Theft. A popular name for larceny. The taking of property without the owner's consent. People v. Sims, 29 Ill.App.3d 815, 331 N.E.2d 178, 179. The fraudulent taking of personal property belonging to another, from his possession, or from the possession of some person holding the same for him, without his consent, with intent to deprive the owner of the value of the same, and to appropriate it to the use or benefit of the person taking.

It is also said that theft is a wider term than larceny and that it includes swindling and embezzlement and that generally, one who obtains possession of property by unlawful means and thereafter appropriates the property to the taker's own use is guilty of a "theft". Kidwell v. Paul Revere Fire Ins. Co., 294 Ky. 833, 172 S.W.2d 639, 640; People v. Pillsbury, 59 Cal.App.2d 107, 138 P.2d 320, 322.

Theft is any of the following acts done with intent to deprive the owner permanently of the possession, use or benefit of his property: (a) Obtaining or exerting unauthorized control over property; or (b) Obtaining by deception control over property; or (c) Obtaining by threat control over property; or (d) Obtaining control over stolen property knowing the property to have been stolen by another.

See also Auto theft; Embezzlement; Extortion; Intimidation; Larceny; Robbery; Theft by false pretense.
Theft of services. Obtaining services from another by deception, threat, coercion, stealth, mechanical tampering or use of false token or device.

Theft-bote /ˈθeftboʊt/. The offense committed by a party who, having been robbed and knowing the felon, takes back his goods again, or receives other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute. Farmers’ Nat. Bank of Somerset v. Tarter, 256 Ky. 70, 75 S.W.2d 756, 760.

Theft-bote est emenda furti capta, sine consideratone curia domini regis /ˈθeftboʊt ˈɛst ˈɛmənə fɜrdəi ˈkemptə, ˈsæniɬi ˈkæn(ə)t ˈsidərəʃələ ˈwʌnli ˈkjuəərəli ˈdoʊmənəi ˈrɪfəs/. Theft-bote is the paying money to have goods stolen returned, without having any respect for the court of the king.

Theft by false pretext. Obtaining property by means of false pretext with intent to deprive owner of value of property without his consent and to appropriate it to own use, followed by such appropriation. Hoovel v. State, 125 Tex.Cr.R. 545, 69 S.W.2d 104, 106.

Thegn /ˈθɛŋn/. An Anglo-Saxon term meaning a retainer. Afterwards it came to designate the territorial nobility. At a later period these were king’s thegns, who were persons of great importance, and inferior thegns. Military service appears to have run through it all. After the Conquest, they were merged into the class of knights.

Thegnage tenure /ˈθɛŋnədʒe ˈtɜrnər/. A kind of tenure in Northumbria in the 13th century and beyond, of which little is known.

Thelono irrationabill habendo /ˈθelənəʊ(ə)n ɪˌræʃənəbəl ˈhæbəndəʊ/. A writ that formerly lay for him that had any part of the king’s demesne in fee-farm, to recover reasonable toll of the king’s tenants there, if his demesne had been accustomed to be tolled.

Thelonium /ˈθelənəʊ(ə)niəm/. An abolished writ for citizens or burgesses to assert their right to exemption from toll.

Thelonmannus /ˈθelənənmənəs/. The toll-man or officer who receives toll.

Thelusson Act. The statute 39 & 40 Geo. III, c. 98, which restricted accumulations to a term of twenty-one years from the testator’s death. It was passed in consequence of litigation over the will of one Thelusson.

Theme. In Saxon law, the power of having jurisdiction over naifs or villeins, with their suits or offspring, lands, goods, and chattels.

Theommaglum /ˈθæməməɡləm/. A duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theme or team.

Then. This word, as an adverb, means “at that time,” referring to a time specified, either past or future. It has no power in itself to fix a time. It simply refers to a time already fixed. It may also denote a contingency, and be equivalent to “in that event.”

Then and there. At the time and place last previously mentioned or charged. Context, however, may give the phrase a more remote antecedent than the time and place last previously mentioned or charged.

Thence. In surveying, and in descriptions of land by courses and distances, this word, preceding each course given, imports that the following course is continuous with the one before it.

Thence down the river. This phrase as used in field notes of a surveyor of a patent, is construed to mean with the meanders of the river, unless there is positive evidence that the meander line as written was where the surveyor in fact ran it; for such lines are to show the general course of the stream and to be used in estimating acreage, and not necessarily boundary lines.

Theocracy. Government of a state by the immediate direction of God (or by the assumed direction of a supposititious divinity), or the state thus governed.

Theoden. In Saxon law, a husbandman or inferior tenant; an under-thane.

Theof. In Saxon law, offenders who joined in a body of seven to commit depredations.

Theophilus' Institutes /ˈθiːfoʊləs ɪˈnstətjuːts/. See Institutes.

Theory of case. Facts on which the right of action is claimed to exist. The basis of liability or grounds of defense. Higgins v. Fuller, 48 N.M. 218, 148 P.2d 575, 579. See Cause of action.

Theory of law. The legal premise or set of principles on which a case rests.

Theory of pleading doctrine. The pre-code principle that one must prove his case as pleaded. Otherwise, he fails though he has set forth facts sufficient to sustain his case on a theory different from his pleadings. The various codes and rules of civil procedure have abolished this principle; see e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 15 which permits amendment of pleadings to conform to evidence.

Theowes, theowmen, or thew /θəʊz/əʊz/θəʊzəʊmən/. In feudal law, slaves, captives, or bondmen.

There. In or at that place.

Thereabout. About that place.

Thereafter. After the time last mentioned; after that; after that time; afterward; subsequently; thenceforth. Dauwe v. State, 147 Tex.Cr.R. 384, 180 S.W.2d 925, 927.

Thereby. By that means; in consequence of that.

Therefore. For that thing: for it, or them.

Therein. In that place.

Thereupon. Without delay or lapse of time. Immediately where the terms thereupon and thereby are distinguished. Following on; in consequence of. Yuma County Water Users' Ass'n v. Schlecht, 262 U.S. 138, 43 S.Ct. 498, 500, 67 L.Ed. 909.

Thelasaurus absconditus /θɛsəˈloʊrəs əbˈskɔndədəs/. In old English law, treasure hidden or buried.
Thesaurus

Thesaurus competit domino regi, et non domino liberatili, nisi sit per verba specialia /θəsəˈhɔːrəs kɒmpəd dəmənəʊ rɪˈʃeɪ, ət ðə dəmənəʊ libərˈtɛdəs, náɪsə sɪt pər vɜːbə spɛʃɪˈsiːəli/ A treasure belongs to the king, and not to the lord of a liberty, unless it be through special words.

Thesmothete /θəˈməθiːt/. A law-maker; a law-giver.

Thin corporation. When debt owed by a corporation to its shareholders is large in relationship to its capital structure (i.e., stock and shareholder equity), the I.R.S. may contend that the corporation is thinly capitalized. In effect, this means that some or all of the debt will be reclassified as equity. The immediate result is to disallow any interest deduction to the corporation on the reclassified debt. To the extent of the corporation's earnings and profits, interest payments and loan repayments are treated as dividends to the shareholders. I.R.C. § 385.

Things. The objects of dominion or property as contradistinguished from "persons." Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Bush, 191 Ark. 1085, 89 S.W.2d 723, 725; Gayer v. Whelan, 59 Cal.App.2d 255, 138 P.2d 768. The object of a right; i.e., whatever is treated by the law as the object over which one person exercises a right, and with reference to which another person lies under a duty.

The word "estate" in general is applicable to anything of which riches or fortune may consist. The word is likewise relative to the word "things," which is the second object of jurisprudence, the rules of which are applicable to persons, things, and actions. Ctv.Code La. art. 448.

Such permanent objects, not being persons, as are sensible, or perceptible through the senses. Things are distributed into three kinds: (1) Things real or immovable, comprehending lands, tenements, and hereditaments; (2) things personal or moveable, comprehending goods and chattels; and (3) things mixed, partaking of the characteristics of the two former, as a title-deed, a term for years. The civil law divided things into corporeal (tangi possessum) and incorporeal (tangi non possuum).

Things in action. A right to recover money or other personal property by a judicial proceeding. See Chose in action.

Things of value. To be the subject of gaming may refer to any thing affording the necessary lure to indulge the gambling instinct. Painter v. State, 163 Tenn. 627, 45 S.W.2d 46, 47; Heartley v. State, 178 Tenn. 254, 157 S.W.2d 1, 3.

Things personal. Goods, money, and all other moveables, which may attend the owner's person wherever he may go. Things personal consist of goods, money, and all other moveables, and of such rights and profits as relate to moveables. Also all vegetable productions, as the fruit or other parts of a plant when severed from the body of it, or the whole plant itself, when severed from the ground. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Bush, 191 Ark. 1085, 89 S.W.2d 723, 725. See also Property (Personal property).

Things real. Such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place; as lands and tenements and hereditaments. 2 Bl.Comm. 16. Western Union Telegraph v. Bush, 191 Ark. 1085, 89 S.W.2d 723, 725. See also Property (Real property).

Thingsus. In Saxon law, a thane or nobleman; knight or freeman.

Think. To believe, to consider, to conclude, to esteem; to recollect or call to mind.

Third. Following next after the second; also, with reference to any legal instrument or transaction or judicial proceeding, any outsider or person not a party to the affair nor immediately concerned in it.

Thirdborough, or thirdborow /θɜːdˈbɔːrə/. An under-constable.

Third conviction. Before charge can be considered a "third conviction" of a felony in contemplation of Habitual Criminal Act, accused must have been convicted of a second felony subsequent to his conviction of first one and after he had paid penalty inflicted for it, and third conviction should be subsequent to second, and after he had paid penalty for it. Cobb v. Commonwealth, 267 Ky. 176, 101 S.W.2d 418, 420.

Third degree. The process of securing a confession or information from a suspect or prisoner by prolonged questioning, the use of threats, or actual violence. See also Interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Thirdings /θɜːdɪŋz/. In old English law, the third part of the corn growing on the land, due to the lord for a heriot on the death of his tenant, within the manor of Turfat, in Hereford.
Third market. See Over-the-counter market.

Third-party beneficiary. One for whose benefit a promise is made in a contract but who is not a party to the contract. Chitlik v. Allstate Ins. Co., 34 Ohio App.2d 193, 295 N.E.2d 295, 297, 63 O.O.2d 364. A person not a party to an insurance contract who has legally enforceable rights thereunder. See also Privity.

Third party claim proceeding. A proceeding for the purpose of determining whether the debtor has any right, title or interest in the property upon which the levy has been made and the judgment of the court in such proceedings is only made conclusive as to the right of the plaintiff or other person in whose favor the writ runs to have the property taken and to subject it to payment for other satisfaction of his judgment. Deevey v. Lewis, 54 Cal.App.2d 24, 128 P.2d 577, 579. See also Third party complaint.

Third party complaint. A complaint filed by the defendant against a third-party (i.e., a person not presently a party to the lawsuit). This complaint alleges that the third party is or may be liable for all or part of the damages which the plaintiff may win from the defendant. See Fed.R.Civil P. 14. For requisite content of third party claim under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, see Complaint.

Third-party practice. Procedural device whereby defendant in an action may bring in additional party in claim against such party because of a claim that is being asserted against the defendant. Denneler v. Aubel Ditching Service, Inc., 203 Kan. 117, 453 P.2d 88, 91. See also Third-party complaint; Vouching in.

Thirds. The designation, in colloquial language, of that portion of a decedent's personal estate (one-third) which goes to the widow where there is also a child or children.

Thirteenth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution which abolished slavery and involuntary servitude in 1865.

Thirty-day letter. A letter which accompanies a revenue agent's report (RAR) issued as a result of an Internal Revenue Service audit of a taxpayer (or the rejection of a taxpayer's claim for refund). The letter outlines the taxpayer's appeal procedure before the Internal Revenue Service. If the taxpayer does not request any such procedure (i.e., District Conference or Appellate Division Conference) within the 30-day period, the Internal Revenue Service will issue a statutory notice of deficiency (the "90-day letter"). See also Ninety-day letter.

Thirty-nine articles. See Articles of faith.
THREE-DOLLAR PIECE

Three-dollar piece. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of three dollars; authorized by the seventh section of the act of February 21, 1853.

Three-judge courts. Most cases in federal district courts are heard and determined by only a single judge. For many years, however, Congress has provided for a special three-judge panel in certain categories of cases thought to require special safeguards against arbitrary action, with direct review in the Supreme Court. Three judges were first required in certain ICC and Sherman Act cases; these provisions (formerly 28 U.S.C.A. Section 2325 and 15 U.S.C.A. Section 28) were repealed by P.L. 93-584, 88 Stat. 1917 (1975), and P.L. 93-528, 88 Stat. 1706 (1974), respectively. Three judges are required in condemnation suits involving the TVA, 16 U.S.C.A. Section 81X, and in certain actions under the 1964 Civil Rights and 1965 Voting Rights Acts, 42 U.S.C.A. Sections 1971(g), 1973(a), 1973(c), 1973h(c), 2000a-5(b), 2003–6(b). Of most significance, however, were 28 U.S.C.A. Sections 2281 and 2282, which required three judges in suits to enjoin enforcement of state or federal statutes, or state administrative orders, on constitutional grounds. Sections 2281 and 2282 were however repealed in 1976 and § 2284 amended to restrict the convening of three-judge courts to when otherwise required by Congress, or to when an action is filed challenging the constitutionality of congressional apportionment.

Three-mile limit. The distance of one marine league or three miles offshore normally recognized as the limit of territorial jurisdiction. See Territorial waters.

Threnges. Vassals, but not of the lowest degree; those who held lands of the chief lord.

Thrithing /θrɪθɪŋ/. In Saxon and old English law, the third part of a county; a division of a county consisting of three or more hundreds. Gradually corrupted to “riding”. 1 Bl.Comm. 116.

Through. By means of, in consequence of, by reason of; in, within; over; from end to end, or from one side to the other. By the intermediary of; in the name or as agent of; by the agency of; because of. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. City of Richmond, 193 Va. 931, 33 S.E.2d 795, 802. “Through” is function word capable of several meanings depending on its use; it may indicate passage from one side to another, means of communication, or movement from point to point within a broad expanse or area. State v. Smith, Mo., 431 S.W.2d 74 78.

Through bill of lading. That species of bill of lading which is used when more than one carrier is required for shipping.

Through lot. A lot that abuts upon a street at each end.

Throwback Rule. In taxation of trusts, the throwback rule requires that the amount distributed in any tax year which is in excess of that year’s distributable net income must be “thrown back” to the preceding year and treated as if it had then been distributed. The beneficiary is taxed in the current year although the computation is made as if the excess had been distributed in the previous year. If the trust did not have undistributed accumulated income in the preceding year, the amount of the throwback is tested against each of the preceding years; in other words, the throwback rule may require consideration of the trust income and its distributions for all of the years preceding the tax year. I.R.C. §§ 665–668.

Thrown from automobile. This phrase within accident policy means tossed or hurled out of automobile by some force. Independence Ins. Co. v. Blanford’s Adm’x, 276 Ky. 692, 125 S.W.2d 249, 251.

Throw out. To ignore (e.g. a bill of indictment) or dismiss a cause of action.

Thrusting. Within the meaning of a criminal statute, is not necessarily an attack with a pointed weapon; it means pushing or driving with force, whether the point of the weapon be sharp or not.

Thrymsa /θrímsə/. A Saxon coin worth fourpence.

Thude-weald /θuːdweːld/. A woodward, or person who looks after a wood.

Ticket In contracts, a slip of paper containing a certificate that the person to whom it is issued, or the holder, is entitled to some right or privilege therein mentioned or described; such, for example, are railroad tickets, theater tickets, pawn tickets, lottery tickets, etc. Independence Ins. Co. v. Blanford’s Adm’x, 276 Ky. 692, 125 S.W.2d 249, 251.

Ticket of leave. In English law, a license or permit given to a convict, as a reward for good conduct, particularly in the penal settlements, which allows him to go at large, and labor for himself, before the expiration of his sentence, subject to certain specific conditions and revocable upon subsequent misconduct. English equivalent of parole.

Ticket-of-leave man. A convict who has obtained a ticket of leave.

Ticket speculator. One who purchases and then resells tickets at a price over their face value. A scalper.

Tidal. Affected by or having tides. In order that a river may be “tidal” at a given spot, it may not be necessary that the water should be salt, but the spot must be one where the tide, in the ordinary and regular course of things, flows and refloows.
Tide. The ebb and flow of the sea. As affecting determination of upland boundary of shore, "tide" is rising and falling of water of the sea that is produced by attraction of sun and moon, uninfluenced by special winds, seasons or other circumstances, and meteorological influences should be distinguished as "meteorological tides," and "atmospheric meteorological tides" should be distinguished. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Sun Oil Co., C.A.Tex., 190 F.2d 191, 195. See also Mean high tide; Mean low tide.

Neap tides. Those tides which happen between the full and change of the moon twice in every 24 hours.

Tideland. Land between the lines of the ordinary high and low tides, covered and uncovered successively by the ebb and flow thereof; land covered and uncovered by the ordinary tides; land over which the tide ebbs and flows; land which is daily covered and uncovered by water by the ordinary ebb and flow of normal tides; land usually overflowed by the neap or ordinary tides; such land as is affected by the tide, that lies between ordinary high-water mark and low-water mark, and which is alternately covered and left dry by the ordinary flux and reflux of the tides; that portion of the shore or beach covered and uncovered by the ebb and flow of ordinary tides. White v. State, 18 Cal.App.3d 729, 96 Cal.Rptr. 173, 174.

Tide-water. Water which falls and rises with the ebb and flow of the tide. The term is not usually applied to the open sea, but to coves, bays, rivers, etc.

Tidesmen. In English law, are certain officers of the custom-house, appointed to watch or attend upon ships until the customs are paid; and they are so called because they go aboard the ships at their arrival in the mouth of the Thames, and come up with the tide.

Tie, v. To bind.

Tie, n. When, at an election, neither candidate receives a majority of the votes cast, but each has the same number, there is said to be a "tie." Exists also when the number of votes cast in favor of any measure, in a legislative or deliberative body, is equal to the number cast against it. The Vice President of the United States has the deciding vote in the event of tie votes in the Senate. Art. I, § 3, U.S.Const.

Tied product. Tying arrangement exists when a person agrees to sell one product, the "tying product," only on the condition that the vendee also purchase another product, the "tied product." Northern v. McGraw-Edison Co., C.A.Mo., 542 F.2d 1336, 1344. See also Tie-in arrangement; Tying arrangement.

Tie-in arrangement. A "tie-in", which is generally illegal under the Clayton Act or the Sherman Act, is an arrangement under which vendor will sell one product only on condition that buyer also purchase another and different product. N. W. Controls, Inc. v. Outboard Marine Corp., D.C.Del., 333 F.Supp. 493, 500. See also Tied product; Tying arrangement.

Tiel. L. Fr. Such. Nul tiel record, no such record.
Time charter. A time charter is a specific and express contract by which the owner lets a vessel or some particular part thereof to another person for a specified time or use; the owner continues to operate the vessel, contracting to render services by his master and crew to carry goods loaded on the vessel, and the master and crew remain servants of the owner. Atlantic Banana Co. v. M. V. “Calanca”, D.C.N.Y., 342 F.Supp. 447, 453.

Time deposit. Another term for a savings account in a commercial bank. It is so called because in theory a person must wait a certain amount of time after notice of desire to withdraw part or all of his or her savings. Cash in a bank earning interest; contrast with demand deposit. See Deposit.

Time draft. See Time bill, supra.

Time immemorial. Time whereof the memory of a man is not to the contrary.

Time is the essence of contract. Means that performance by one party at time or within period specified in contract is essential to enable him to require performance by other party. Hayes Mfg. Corporation v. McCaulley, C.C.A.Ohio, 140 F.2d 187, 189. When this phrase is in a contract, it means that a failure to do what is required by the time specified is a breach of the contract.

Time of memory. In English law, time commencing from the beginning of the reign of Richard I. 2 Bl.Comm. 31. Lord Coke defines time of memory to be “when no man alive hath had any proof to the contrary, nor hath any connexion to the contrary.”

Time order. An order which becomes a market or limited price order at a specified time.

Time out of memory. Time beyond memory; time in which memory does not extend.

Time-policy. A policy of marine insurance in which the risk is limited, not to a given voyage, but to a certain fixed term or period of time.

Time-price differential. Method by which seller charges one price for immediate cash payment and a different (advance in) price when payment is made at future date or in installments and the former is the cash price and the latter the “time-price” or credit price and difference in price is the “time-price differential”. State ex rel. Guste v. Council of City of New Orleans, La.App., 297 So.2d 518, 525.

Timocracy. An aristocracy of property; government by men of property who are possessed of a certain income.

Timores vanl sunt estimandli qui non cadunt constantem virum /tamótyrz véymy santé štámáenday kwây nón kéydat kan(š)štámtám váyram/. Fears which do not assail a resolute man are to be accounted vain.

Tinel. L. Fr. A place where justice was administered.

Tineman /táynman/. Sax. In old forest law, a petty officer of the forest who had the care of vert and venison by night, and performed other servile duties.

Tinewald /táynwold/tín*/. The ancient parliament or annual convention in the Isle of Man, held upon Midsummer-day, at St. John’s chapel.

Tinkermen /tíikarmann/. Fishermen who destroyed the young fry on the river Thames by nets and unlawful engines.

Tipenny. A tribute paid for the liberty of digging in tin-mines.

Tip. A sum of money given, as to a servant, waif, bellman, or the like, for services rendered, with the amount commonly varying upon the quality of such service. Tip income is taxable. I.R.C. § 61(a). Restaurants and Patissiories Longchamps, Inc. v. Pedrick, D.C.N.Y., 52 F.Supp. 174. A gift. Williams v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., C.C.A.Fla., 118 F.2d 324, 325.

Advance information which, if acted upon, will presumably give the actor a profit or an advantage as in the case of advance information as to likelihood of a rise or fall of the price of a security in the market. See Tippees.

Tippees. Persons given information by insiders in breach of trust. Ross v. Licht, D.C.N.Y., 263 F.Supp. 395, 410. The purpose of Rule 10b-5 (q.v.) is to prevent corporate insiders and their “tippees” from taking unfair advantage of the uninformed outsiders. Radiation Dynamics Inc. v. Goldmuntz, 464 F.2d 876. Conspiracy between corporate insiders and person to whom insiders have furnished information pertaining to corporation is not required in order for such person to be categorized as a “tippee” thus precluding him from the benefit of Securities and Exchange Commission rule prohibiting employment of any device to defraud or engagement in any act of course of business which operates as fraud or deceit. Kuehnert v. Texstar Corp., D.C.Tex., 286 F.Supp. 340, 345. See also Insider; Tip.

Tipping house. A place where intoxicating drinks are sold in drams or small quantities to be drunk on the premises, and where men resort for drinking purposes.

Tipstaff. An officer appointed by the court, whose duty is to wait upon the court when it is in session, preserve order, serve process, guard juries, etc. See Bailiff.

In English law, an officer appointed by the marshal of the king’s bench to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipped with silver, who take into their custody all prisoners, either committed or turned over by the judges at their chambers, etc.

Tithe. A tenth part of one’s income, contributed for charitable or religious purposes. Broadly, any tax or assessment of one tenth. See also Titles; Titling.

Tiber /táý december/. One who gathers tithes.

Tithes /táýdz/. In English law, the tenth part of the increase, yearly arising and renewing from the profits of lands, the stock upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants. 2 Bl.Comm. 24. A species of incorporeal hereditament, being an ecclesiastical inheritance collateral to the estate of the land, and due only to an ecclesiastical person by ecclesiastical law. See also Tithe.

Great tithes. In English ecclesiastical law, tithes of corn, peas and beans, hay and wood.
Minute tithes. Small tithes, such as usually belong to a vicar, as of wool, lambs, pigs, butter, cheese, herbs, seeds, eggs, honey, wax, etc.

Mixed tithes. Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground, e.g., colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc.

Personal tithes. Personal tithes are tithes paid of such profits as come by the labor of a man's person; as by buying and selling, gains of merchandize and handicrafts, etc.

Predial tithes. Such as arise immediately from the ground; as, grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, and herbs.

Tithe-free. Exempted from the payment of tithes.

Tithe rent-charge. A rent-charge established in lieu of tithes, under the tithes commutation act, 1836 (St. 6 § 7 Wm. IV, c. 71). As between landlord and tenant, the tenant paying the tithe rent-charge is entitled, in the absence of express agreement, to deduct it from his rent, under section 70 of the above act. And a tithe rent-charge unpaid is recoverable by distress as rent in arrear.

Tithing /ˈteɪθɪŋ/. Act of paying tithes. One of the civil divisions of England, being a portion of that greater division called a “hundred.” It was so called because ten freeholders with their families composed one. It is said that they were all knit together in one society, and bound to the king for the peaceable behavior of each other. In each of these societies there was one chief or principal person, who, from his office, was called “teothing-man,” now “tithing-man.”

Tithing-man /ˈteɪθɪŋmæn/. A constable. After the introduction of justices of the peace, the offices of constable and tithing-man became so similar that they were regarded as precisely the same.

In New England, a parish officer annually elected to preserve good order in the church during divine service, and to make complaint of any disorderly conduct.

In Saxon law, the head or chief of a tithing or decennary of ten families; he was to decide all lesser causes between neighbors. In modern English law, he is the same as an under-constable or peace-officer.

Tithing-penny /ˈteɪθɪŋpɛnɪ/. In Saxon and old English law, money paid to the sheriff by the several tithings of his county.

Titius /ˈtɪʃ(ɪ)əs/. In Roman law, a proper name, frequently used in designating an indefinite or fictitious person, or a person referred to by way of illustration. “Titius” and “Seius,” in this use, correspond to “John Doe” and “Richard Roe,” or to “A.B.” and “C.D.”

Title. A mark, style, or designation; a distinctive appellation; the name by which anything is known. Thus, in the law of persons, a title is an appellation of dignity or distinction, a name denoting the social rank of the person bearing it; as “duke” or “count.” So, in legislation, the title of a statute is the heading or preliminary part, furnishing the name by which the act is individually known. It is usually prefixed to the statute in the form of a brief summary of its contents; as “An act for the prevention of gaming.” Again, the title of a patent is the short description of the invention, which is copied in the letters patent from the inventor’s petition; e.g., “a new and improved method of drying and preparing malt.”

The title of a book, or any literary composition, is its name; that is, the heading or caption prefixed to it, and disclosing the distinctive appellation by which it is to be known. This usually comprises a brief description of its subject-matter and the name of its author.

Law of Trade-Marks

A title may become a subject of property; as one who has adopted a particular title for a newspaper, or other business enterprise, may, by long and prior usage, or by compliance with statutory provisions as to registration and notice, acquire a right to be protected in the exclusive use of it.

Real Property Law

Title is the means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property. The union of all the elements which constitute ownership. Full independent and fee ownership. The right to or ownership in land; also, the evidence of such ownership. Such ownership may be held individually, jointly, in common, or in cooperate or partnership form.

One who holds vested rights in property is said to have title whether he holds them for his own benefit or for the benefit of another. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2, Comment d.

See also Deed; Estate.

Procedure

Every action, petition, or other proceeding has a title, which consists of the name of the court in which it is pending, the names of the parties, etc. Administration actions are further distinguished by the name of the deceased person whose estate is being administered. Every pleading, summons, affidavit, etc., commences with the title. In many cases it is sufficient to give what is called the “short title” of an action, namely, the court, the reference to the record, and the surnames of the first plaintiff and the first defendant. See also Caption.

Generally

Absolute title. As applied to title to land, an exclusive title, or at least a title which excludes all others not compatible with it. An absolute title to land cannot exist at the same time in different persons or in different governments. See also Fee simple.

Abstract of title. See that title.

Adverse title. A title set up in opposition to or adverse to the title of another, or one acquired or claimed by adverse possession. See Adverse possession.
TITLE

Bond for title. See Bond.

By accession. Title acquired by additions innocently acquired such as in the case of intermingling of another's property with one's own. See Accession.

By accretion. Title acquired by additions to one's property as in the case of deposits of soil from a stream. See Accretion.

By adverse possession. See Adverse possession.

Chain of title. See that title; also Abstract of title.

Clear title, good title, merchantable title, marketable title, are synonymous; "clear title" meaning that the land is free from incumbrances, "good title" being one free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts, comprising both legal and equitable titles and fairly deducible of record. See Marketable title.

Clear title of record, or clear record title. Title free from apparent defects, grave doubts, and litigious uncertainties, and is such title as a reasonably prudent person, with full knowledge, would accept. A title dependent for its validity on extraneous evidence, ex parte affidavits, or written guaranties against the results of litigation is not a clear title of record, and is not such title as equity will require a purchaser to accept. See Marketable title.

Color of title. See that title.

Covenants for title. Covenants usually inserted in a conveyance of land, on the part of the grantor, and binding him for the completeness, security, and continuance of the title transferred to the grantee. They comprise "covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty." See Covenant.

Defective title. Title which has some defect or is subject to litigation and hence may not be transferred to another. See Unmarketable title.

Document of title. See Document.

Doubtful title. See that title.

Equitable title. A right in the party to whom it belongs to have the legal title transferred to him; or the beneficial interest of one person whom equity regards as the real owner, although the legal title is vested in another. See also Equitable ownership.

Examination of title. See Examination; Title search.

Good title. Title which is free of defects and litigation and hence may be transferred to another. See Marketable title.

Imperfect title. One which requires a further exercise of the granting power to pass the fee in land, or which does not convey full and absolute dominion.

Legal title. See that title.

Lucrative title. In the civil law, title acquired without the giving of anything in exchange for it; the title by which a person acquires anything which comes to him as a clear gain, as, for instance, by gift, descent, or devise. Opposed to "onerous title," as to which see infra.

Marketable title. See that title.

Onerous title. In the civil law, title to property acquired by the giving of a valuable consideration for it, such as the payment of money, the rendition of services, the performance of conditions, the assumption of obligations, or the discharge of liens on the property; opposed to "lucrative title," or one acquired by gift or otherwise without the giving of an equivalent.

Paper title. A title to land evidenced by a conveyance or chain of conveyances; the term generally implying that such title, while it has color or plausibility, is without substantial validity.

Perfect title. Various meanings have been attached to this term: (1) One which shows the absolute right of possession and of property in a particular person. See Fee simple. (2) A grant of land which requires no further act from the legal authority to constitute an absolute title to the land taking effect at once. (3) A title which does not disclose a patent defect suggesting the possibility of a lawsuit to defend it; a title such as a well-informed and prudent man paying full value for the property would be willing to take. (4) A title which is good both at law and in equity. (5) One which is good and valid beyond all reasonable doubt. (6) A marketable or merchantable title. See Marketable title.

Presumptive title. A barely presumptive title, which is of the very lowest order, arises out of the mere occupation or simple possession of property (jus possessionis), without any apparent right, or any pretense of right, to hold and continue such possession.

Record title. See Record.

Root of title. Root of title means that conveyance or other title transaction or other link in the chain of title of a person, purporting to create the interest claimed by such person, upon which he relies as a basis for the marketability of his title, and which was the most recent to be recorded or established as of a date forty years prior to the time when marketability is being determined. The effective date of the "root of title" is the date on which it is recorded.

Singular title. The title by which a party acquires property as a singular successor.

Tax title. See Tax.

Title by adverse possession or prescription. The right which a possessor acquires to property by reason of his adverse possession during a period of time fixed by law. See Adverse possession.

The elements of title by prescription are open, visible and continuous use under a claim of right, adverse to and with knowledge of owner. Dry Gulch Ditch Co. v. Hutton, 170 Or. 656, 133 P.2d 601, 610. Such title is equivalent to a "title by deed" and cannot be lost or divested except in the same manner, and mere recognition of title in another after such acquisition will not operate to divest the adverse claimant of that which he has acquired. Maloney v. Bedford, 290 Ky. 647, 162 S.W.2d 198, 199.

Title by descent. That title which one acquires by law as heir to the deceased owner.

Title by prescription. See Title by adverse possession, supra.

Title deeds. Deeds which constitute or are the evidence of title to lands. See Deed.
Title defective in form. Title on face of which some defect appears, not one that may prove defective by circumstances or evidence dehors the instrument. Title defective in form cannot be basis of prescription.

Title insurance. See Insurance.

Title of a cause. The distinctive appellation by which any cause in court, or other juridical proceeding, is known and distinguished from others. See Caption.

Title of an act. The heading, or introductory clause, of a statute, wherein is briefly recited its purpose or nature, or the subject to which it relates.

Title of clergymen (to orders). Some certain place where they may exercise their functions; also an assurance of being preferred to some ecclesiastical benefice.

Title of declaration. That preliminary clause of a declaration which states the name of the court and the term to which the process is returnable.

Title of entry. The right to enter upon lands.

Title registration. See Torrens title system.

Title retention. A form of lien, in the nature of a chattel mortgage, to secure the purchase price. American Indemnity Co. v. Allen, for Use and Benefit of Commerce Union Bank, 176 Tenn. 134, 138 S.W.2d 445, 446.

Title to orders. In English ecclesiastical law, a title to orders is a certificate of preferment or provision required by the thirty-third canon, in order that a person may be admitted into holy orders, unless he be a fellow or chaplain in Oxford or Cambridge, or master of arts of five years' standing in either of the universities, and living there at his sole charges; or unless the bishop himself intends shortly to admit him to some benefice or curacy.

Unmarketable title. See that title.

Warranty of title. See Warranty.

Title documents. Those instruments necessary for establishing or for conveying good title; e.g. deed.

Title guaranty company. A business organization which searches title to determine whether any defects or encumbrances are recorded and which then gives the buyer of the property or the mortgagor a guaranty of the title.

Title Insurance. See Insurance.

Title search. An examination of the records of the registry of deeds or other office which contains records of title documents to determine whether title to the property is good; i.e. whether there are any defects in the title. The examiner then prepares an abstract of the documents examined. See also Abstract of title; Examination.

Title standards. Criteria by which a title to real estate may be evaluated to determine whether it is defective or marketable. Many states through associations of conveyancers and real estate attorneys have adopted such standards.

Title transaction. Any transaction affecting title to any interest in land, including title by will or descent, title by tax deed, or deed by trustee, referee, guardian, executor, administrator, master in chancery, sheriff, or any other form of deed, or decree of any court, as well as warranty deed, quitclaim deed, mortgage, or transfer or conveyance of any kind.

Titulada/tituladə/. In Spanish law, title.

Titulus/títulus/. Lat. Title. In the civil law, the source or ground of possession; the means whereby possession of a thing is acquired, whether such possession be lawful or not.

In old ecclesiastical law, a temple or church; the material edifice. So called because the priest in charge of it derived therefrom his name and title.

Titulus est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est; dictur a tuendo/títulas est justa kóka posádeiday id kwó nóstram est, díssar e y(y)uwendow/. A title is the just right of possessing that which is our own; it is so called from “tuendo,” defending.

To. While this is ordinarily a word of exclusion, when used in describing premises, it has been held that the word in a statute may be interpreted as exclusionary or inclusionary depending on the legislative intent as drawn from the whole statute. Clark v. Bunnell, 172 Colo. 32, 470 P.2d 42, 44. It may be a word of inclusion, and may also mean “into.”

Toft. A place or piece of ground on which a house formerly stood, which has been destroyed by accident or decay.

Toftman. In old English law, the owner of a toft.

Togal/tóga/. Lat. In Roman law, advocates; so called under the empire because they were required, when appearing in court to plead a cause, to wear the toga, which had then ceased to be the customary dress in Rome.

To have and to hold. The words in a conveyance which show the estate intended to be conveyed. Thus, in a conveyance of land in fee-simple, the grant is to “A. and his heirs, to have and to hold the said [land] unto and to the use of the said A., his heirs and assigns forever.”

Strictly speaking, however, the words “to have” denote the estate to be taken, while the words “to hold” signify that it is to be held of some superior lord, i.e., by way of tenure (q.v.). The former clause is called the “habendum;” the latter, the “tenendum.”

Token. A sign or mark; a material evidence of the existence of a fact. A sign or indication of an intention to do something as in the case of one who places a small order to show good faith to a seller with a view towards placing a larger order at a future time.

Token-money. A conventional medium of exchange consisting of pieces of metal, fashioned in the shape and size of coins, and circulating among private persons, by consent, at a certain value. No longer permitted or recognized as money.

Tolerate. To allow so as not to hinder; to permit as something not wholly approved of; to suffer; to endure.
Toleration. The allowance of religious opinions and modes of worship which are contrary to, or different from, those of the established church or belief.

Toleration Act. The statute 1 W. & M. St. 1, c. 18, for exempting Protestant dissenters from the penalties of certain laws is so called.

Toll, v. To bar, defeat, or take away; thus, to toll the entry means to deny or take away the right of entry.

To suspend or stop temporarily as the statute of limitations is tolled during the defendant’s absence from the jurisdiction and during the plaintiff’s minority.

Toll, n. A sum of money for the use of something, generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, bridge, or the like, of a public nature. Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U.S. 288, 8 S.Ct. 113, 31 L.Ed. 149; Rogge v. United States, C.C.A.Alaska, 128 F.2d 800, 802. The price of the privilege of travel over that particular highway and it is a quid pro quo and rests on principle that he who receives the toll does or has done something as an equivalent to him who pays it. State ex rel. Washington Toll Bridge Authority v. Yelle, 195 Wash. 636, 82 P.2d 120, 125. Charge for long-distance telephone calls.

Tollage. Payment of toll; money charged or paid as toll; the liberty or franchise of charging toll.

Tollbooth. A prison; a customhouse; an exchange; also the place where goods are weighed or tolls collected.

Tolldish. A vessel by which the toll of corn for grinding is measured.

Toller. One who collects tribute or taxes.

Tollere /tólɛri/. Lat. In the civil law, to lift up or extend; to elevate; to build up.

Tolle voluntatem et erit omnis actus indifferens /tôliy volantéydam èd èhrad ómní æktás indifaren(d)z/. Take away the will, and every action will be indifferent.

Tolls. In general sense, any manner of customs, subsidy, prestation, imposition, or sum of money demanded for exporting or importing of any goods or merchandise to be taken of the buyer. For fair and reasonable tolls, see that title. See also Toll.

Tolsester /tôlséstər/. In old English law, an excuse; a duty paid by tenants of some manors to the lord for liberty to brew and sell ale.

Tolt. In old English law, a writ whereby a cause depending in a court baron was taken and removed into a county court.

Tolta /tôltə/. In old English law, wrong; rapine; extortion.

Tomb /tùm/. An excavation in earth or rock, intended to receive the dead body of a human being.

Tombstone /tùmstôwn/. Stone marking place of burial and usually inscribed with memorial of deceased.
In French law, a species of association or partnership formed among persons who are in receipt of perpetual or life annuities, with the agreement that the shares or annuities of those who die shall accrue to the survivors. This plan is said to be thus named from Tonti, an Italian, who invented it in the seventeenth century. The principle is used in some forms of life insurance.

Took and carried away. In criminal pleading, technical words necessary in an indictment for simple larceny.

Top lease. A subsequent oil and gas lease which covers one or more mineral interests that are subject to a valid, subsisting prior lease.

Torrens title system. /t6hran(d)z taydal sistm/. A system for registration of land under which, upon the landowner’s application, the court may, after appropriate proceedings, direct the issuance of a certificate of title. With exceptions, this certificate is conclusive as to applicant’s estate in land. System of registration of land title as distinguished from registration or recording of evidence of such title. The originator of the system was Sir Richard Torrens, 1814–1884, reformation of Australian Land Laws.

Tort (from Lat. torquere, to twist, tortus, twisted; Torrens title system). A system for recording of land title as distinguished from registration or recording of evidence of such title. The originator of the system was Sir Richard Torrens, 1814–1884, reformation of Australian Land Laws.

Tort claims acts. See Federal Tort Claims Act; Governmental immunity.

Tort-feasor. A wrong-doer; one who commits or is guilty of a tort. See also Joint tort-feasors.

Tortious. /t0rshas/. Wrongful; of the nature of a tort.

Torture. To inflict intense pain to body or mind for punishment, information, or sadistic pleasure. In old criminal law, the infliction of violent bodily pain upon a person, by means of the rack, wheel, or other engine, under judicial sanction and superintendence, in connection with the interrogation or examination of the person, as a means of extorting a confession of guilt, or of compelling him to disclose his accomplices.

Tortuous. /t0rshas/. Wrongful; of the nature of a tort. The word “tortuous” is used throughout the Restatement, Second, Torts, to denote the fact that conduct whether of act or omission is of such a character as to subject the actor to liability, under the principles of the law of torts. (§6). To establish “tortious act” plaintiff must prove not only existence of actionable wrong, but also that damages resulted therefrom. James v. Public Finance Corp., 47 C.A.3d 995, 121 Cal.Rptr. 570, 575.

Formerly certain modes of conveyance (e.g., feoffments, fines, etc.) had the effect of passing not merely the estate of the person making the conveyance, but the whole fee-simple, to the injury of the person really entitled to the fee; and they were hence called “tortious conveyances.”

Torture legum pessima. /tort(yl)ªra liyam pészima/. The torture or wrestling of laws is the worst [kind of torture].

Torture. To inflict intense pain to body or mind for purposes of punishment, or to extract a confession or information, or for sadistic pleasure. In old criminal law, the infliction of violent bodily pain upon a person, by means of the rack, wheel, or other engine, under judicial sanction and superintendence, in connection with the interrogation or examination of the person, as a means of extorting a confession of guilt, or of compelling him to disclose his accomplices.

Tory. Originally a nickname for the Irish in Ulster. Afterwards given to, and adopted by, one of the two great parliamentary parties which alternately governed Great Britain after the Revolution in 1688.
The name was also given, in America, during the struggle of the colonies for independence, to the party of those residents who favored the side of the British Crown and opposed independence.

Tot. In old English practice, a word written by the foreign oppressor or other officer opposite to a debt due the king, to denote that it was a good debt; which was hence said to be toted.

Tota curia /tōwda kyuriya/. L. Lat. In the old reports, the whole court.

Total. Whole, not divided, lacking no part, entire, full, complete, the whole amount. Utter, absolute. Glaze v. Hart, 225 Mo.App. 1205, 36 S.W.2d 684.

Total disability. Total disability, whether temporary or permanent, is that which prevents the employee from performing work obtainable or inability to secure work, and not absolute helplessness or entire physical disability. Clark v. Gilley, Ky., 311 S.W.2d 391, 392. See also Disability.

Total eviction. That which occurs when the possessor is wholly deprived of his rights in the premises.

Total loss. Fire insurance. The complete destruction of the insured property by fire, so that nothing of value remains from it; as distinguished from a partial loss, where the property is damaged, but not entirely destroyed. Test whether building burned is "total loss" is whether substantial portion is left standing in condition reasonably suitable as basis on which to reconstruct building in like condition as to strength, security, and utility as it was before fire. Commerce Ins. Co. v. Sergi, Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 1046. Total loss is such destruction of a building as that, after the fire, there remains standing in place no substantial remnant thereof which a reasonably prudent owner, uninsured, desiring to restore the building to its original condition, would utilize as a basis of such restoration. Crutchfield v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 306 S.W.2d 948, 952.

Actual total loss. The total loss of the vessel covered by a policy of insurance, by its real and substantive destruction, by injuries which leave it no longer existing in specie, by its being reduced to a wreck irretrievably beyond repair, or by its being placed beyond the control of the insured and beyond his power of recovery. Distinguished from a constructive total loss, which occurs where the vessel, though injured by the perils insured against, remains in specie and capable of repair or recovery, but at such an expense, or under such other conditions, that the insured may claim the whole amount of the policy upon abandoning the vessel to the underwriters. In such cases the insured is entitled to indemnity as for a total loss. See Actual total loss, supra.

Constructive total loss. Where an injury results to the vessel from a peril insured against, but where the loss is neither actually nor constructively total. See also Fire insurance, supra.

Toted verbi /tōdād dam vīrba/. Lat. In so many words.

Totties quoties /tōwshiy(i)y/z kwówshiy(i)y/z/. Lat. As often as occasion shall arise.

Totis viribus /tōwds vāýrba/. Lat. With all one's might or power; with all his might; very strenuously.

Totted /tōdə/. A good debt to the crown, i.e., a debt paid to the sheriff, to be by him paid over to the king.

Totten trust. See Trust.

Totum pretendit uncuique partit /tōwdam prəfrədər yuwnak(yuə)yəkwiə pərdəy/. The whole is preferable to any single part.

Touch. In marine insurance law, to stop at a port, usually for a brief period.

Touch and stay. Words introduced in policies of insurance, giving the party insured the right to stop and stay at certain designated points in the course of the voyage. A vessel which has the power to touch and stay at a place in the course of the voyage must confine herself strictly to the terms of the liberty so given; for any attempt to trade at such a port during such a stay, as, by shipping or landing goods, will amount to a species of deviation which will discharge the underwriters, unless the ship have also liberty to trade as well as to touch and stay at such a place.

Touching a dead body. It was an ancient superstition that the body of a murdered man would bleed freshly when touched by his murderer. Hence, in old criminal law, this was resorted to as a means of ascertaining the guilt or innocence of a person suspected of the murder.

Toujours et encore prist /tuwzhūr ey onkər prɛyi/. L. Fr. Always and still ready. This is the name of a plea of tender.

Tour d’échelle /tuːɛʁ deshəl/. In French law, an easement consisting of the right to rest ladders upon the adjoining estate, when necessary in order to repair a party-wall or buildings supported by it.

Tourna d’/tuwνa/. In old English law, a court of record, having criminal jurisdiction, in each county, held before the sheriff, twice a year, in one place after another, following a certain circuit or rotation.

Tout /tuw/. Fr. All; whole; entirely. Tout temps prist, always ready.

Tout ce que la loi ne defend pas est permis /tuw se(o) ka la lwa na deyfon pə ey permɪ/. Everything is permitted which is not forbidden by law.

Toute exception non surveillée tend à prendre la place du principe /tuwt eksepsiyəwɔn non sərvəyəy tɔnd a prɔnd la plas djuw prənsiŋ/. Every exception not watched tends to assume the place of the principle.

Tout temps prist /tuw ton prɛyi/. L. Fr. Always ready. The emphatic words of the old plea of tender; the defendant alleging that he has always been ready, and still is ready, to discharge the debt.

Tout un sound /tuwən səwmd/. L. Fr. All one sound; sounding the same; idem sonans.
Towage. The act or service of towing ships and vessels, usually by means of a small steamer called a “tug.” That which is given for towing ships in rivers. The drawing a ship or barge along the water by another ship or boat, fastened to her, or by men at horses, etc., on land. It is also money which is given by bargemen to the owner of ground next a river, where they tow a barge or other vessel.

Towage service. In admiralty law, a service rendered to a vessel, by towing, for the mere purpose of expediting her voyage, without reference to any circumstances of danger. It is confined to vessels that have received no injury or damage.

Toward. In the direction of, or, on a course or line leading to. Coming soon; not long before.

To wit. That is to say; namely; scilicet; videlicet.

Town. A civil and political division of a state, varying in extent and importance, but usually one of the divisions of a county. In the New England states, the town is the political unit, and is a municipal corporation. In some other states, where the county is the unit, the town is merely one of its subdivisions, but possesses some powers of local self-government. In still other states, such subdivisions of a county are called “townships,” and “town” is the name of a village, borough, or smaller city. The word “town” is quite commonly used as a generic term and as including both cities and villages.

Town-clerk. In those states where the town is the unit for local self-government, the town-clerk is a principal officer who keeps the records, issues calls for town-meetings, and performs generally the duties of a secretary to the political organization.

Town collector. One of the officers of a town charged with collecting the taxes assessed for town purposes.

Town commissioner. In some of the states where the town is the political unit the town commissioners constitute a board of administrative officers charged with the general management of the town’s business.

Town-crier. An officer in a town whose business it is to make proclamations.

Town-hall. The building maintained by a town for town-meetings and the offices of the municipal authorities.

Town house. Type of dwelling unit normally having two, but sometimes three, stories; usually connected to a similar structure by a common wall, and commonly (particularly in planned unit developments) sharing and owning in common the surrounding grounds.

Town-meeting. Under the municipal organization of the New England states, the town-meeting is a legal assembly of the qualified voters of a town, held at stated intervals or on call, for the purpose of electing town officers, and of discussing and deciding on questions relating to the public business, property, and expenses of the town.

Town order or warrant. An official direction in writing by the auditing officers of a town, directing the treasurer to pay a sum of money.

Town pound. A place of confinement maintained by a town for estrays.

Town purpose. When it is said that taxation by a town, or the expenditure of the town’s money, must be for town purposes, it is meant that the purposes must be public with respect to the town; i.e., concern the welfare and advantage of the town as a whole.

Town-reeve. The reeve or chief officer of a town.

Township. Township, in government survey, is square tract six miles on each side containing thirty-six square miles of land. U. S. v. Weyerhaeuser Co., C.A.Or., 392 F.2d 448, 449. In some of the states, this is the name given to the civil and political subdivisions of a county.

Township trustee. One of a board of officers to whom, in some states, affairs of a township are intrusted.

Townsite. Portion of public domain segregated by proper authority and procedure as site for a town.

Town tax. Such tax as a town may levy for its peculiar expenses; as distinguished from a county or state tax.

Town treasurer. The treasurer of a town which is an organized municipal corporation.

Toxic /tɔksɪk/. (Lat. toxicum; Gr. toxikon.) Poisonous; having the character or producing the effects of a poison; referable to a poison; produced by or resulting from a poison.

Toxicant /tɔksɪkænt/. A poison; a toxic agent; any substance capable of producing toxication or poisoning.

Toxicate /tɔksɪkeɪt/. To poison. Not used to describe the act of one who administers a poison, but the action of the drug or poison itself.

Auto-intoxication. Self-empoisonment from the absorption of the toxic products of internal metabolism, e.g., ptomaine poisoning.

Intoxication. The state of being poisoned; the condition produced by the administration or introduction into the human system of a poison. This term is properly used as equivalent to “drunkenness,” which, however, is more accurately described as “alcoholic intoxication.” See also Intoxication.

Toxicology. The science of poisons; that department of medical science which treats of poisons, their effect, their recognition, their antidotes, and generally of the diagnosis and therapeutics of poisoning.

Toxin. In its widest sense, this term may denote any poison or toxicant; but as used in pathology and medical jurisprudence it signifies, in general, any dif fusible alkaloidal substance (as, the ptomaines, abrin, brucin, or serpent venoms), and in particular the poisonous products of pathogenic (disease-producing) bacteria.

Tracea /træʃ(i)yə/. In old English law, the track or trace of a felon, by which he was pursued with the hue and cry; a foot-step, hoof-print, or wheel-track.
Tracing. A tracing is a mechanical copy or facsimile of an original, produced by following its lines, with a pen or pencil, through a transparent medium, called tracing paper. See also Skiptracing.

Tract. A lot, piece or parcel of land, of greater or less size, the term not importing, in itself, any precise dimension, though term generally refers to a large piece of land. Holt v. Wichita County Water Improvement Dist. No. 2, Tex.Civ.App., 48 S.W.2d 527, 529.

Tradas in ballium /tréydas in béliyam/. You deliver to bail. In old English practice, the name of a writ which might be issued in behalf of a party who, upon the writ de odio et atia, had been found to have been maliciously accused of a crime, commanding the sheriff that, if the prisoner found twelve good and lawful men of the county who would be mainpernors for him, he should deliver him in bail to those twelve, until the next assize.

Trade. The act or the business of buying and selling for money; traffic, barter. May v. Sloan, 101 U.S. 231, 25 L.Ed. 797. Trade is not a technical word and is ordinarily used in three senses: (1) in that of exchanging commodities by barter or by buying and selling for money; (2) in that of an occupation generally; (3) in that of a mechanical employment, in contradistinction to the learned professions, agriculture, or the liberal arts. People v. Polar Vent of America, Inc., 10 Misc.2d 378, 174 N.Y.S.2d 789, 793.

The business which a person has learned and which he carries on for procuring subsistence, or for profit; occupation or employment, particularly mechanical employment; distinguished from the liberal arts and learned professions, and from agriculture. A line of work or a form of occupation pursued as a business or calling, as for a livelihood or for profit; anything practiced as a means of getting a living, money, booty, etc.; mercantile or commercial business in general, or the buying and selling, or exchanging, of commodities, either by wholesale or retail within a country or between countries. Helvering v. Wilmington Trust Co., C.C.A.3, 124 F.2d 156, 158.

Trade acceptance. A draft or bill of exchange drawn by the seller on the purchaser of goods sold, and accepted by such purchaser, and its purpose is to make the book account liquid, and permit the seller to raise money on it before it is due under the terms of the sale, and its principal function is to take the place of selling goods on an open account and when properly drawn, it is negotiable. Gilliland & Echols Farm Supply & Hatchery v. Credit Equipment Corp., 269 Ala. 190, 112 So.2d 331, 332.

A draft drawn by a seller which is presented for signature (acceptance) to the buyer at the time goods are purchased and which then becomes the equivalent of a note receivable of the seller and the note payable of the buyer.

Trade agreement. Agreement between two countries or among many nations concerning buying and selling of each country's goods. See also Collective bargaining agreement; Most favored nation clause; Reciprocal trade agreements.

Trade and commerce. The words "trade" and "commerce," when used in juxtaposition impart to each other enlarged signification, so as to include practically every business occupation carried on for subsistence or profit and into which the elements of bargain and sale, barter, exchange, or traffic, enter. See Commerce.

Trade association. An association of business organizations having similar problems and engaged in similar fields formed for mutual protection, interchange of ideas and statistics and for maintenance of standards within their industry.

Trade commission. See Federal Trade Commission.

Trade discount. A discount from list price offered to all customers of a given type; e.g. discount offered by lumber dealer to building contractor. Contrast with a discount offered for prompt payment and quantity discount.

Trade dispute. Within Unemployment Insurance Act barring benefit payments to persons who leave work because of trade dispute, the term includes controversy over working conditions, American-Hawaiian S. S. Co. v. California Employment Commission, 24 Cal.2d 716, 151 P.2d 213, 215; and, unwillingness to cross picket lines, Mattson Terminals v. California Employment Commission, 24 Cal.2d 695, 151 P.2d 202, 206. See Unfair labor practice.

Trade dollar. A silver coin of the United States, of the weight of four hundred and twenty grains, troy.

Trade fixtures. Personal property used by tenants in business. Such fixtures retain the character of personal property; e.g. shelves used to display merchandise. See also Fixture.

Trade libel. Intentional disparagement of quality of property, which results in pecuniary damage to plaintiff. Erlich v. Etner, 224 C.A.2d 69, 36 Cal.Rptr. 256, 258.

Trade-mark. Generally speaking, a distinctive mark of authenticity, through which the products of particular manufacturers or the vendible commodities of particular merchants may be distinguished from those of others. It may consist in any symbol or in any form of words, but, as its office is to point out distinctively the origin or ownership of the articles to which it is affixed, it follows that no sign or form of words can be appropriated as a valid trade-mark which, from the nature of the fact conveyed by its primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth and with equal right for the same purpose. Jantzen Knitting Mills v. West Coast Knitting Mills, Cust. & Pat.App., 46 F.2d 182, 184.

A distinctive mark, motto, device, or emblem, which a manufacturer stamps, prints, or otherwise affixes to the goods he produces, so that they may be identified in the market, and their origin be vouched for. Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U.S. 82, 87, 25 L.Ed. 550. Exclusive rights to use a trade-mark are granted by the federal government for twenty-eight years.

The term "trade-marks" includes any word, name, symbol, or device or any combination thereof adopted and used by a manufacturer or merchant to identify his goods and distinguish them from those manufactured or sold by others. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.
Trade-name. A "trade-name" is any designation which is descriptive of a manufacturer or dealer and applies to business and its goodwill, whereas "trade-mark" is applicable only to vendable commodities, and different legal principles govern protection of the two. Junior Food Stores of West Florida, Inc. v. Jr. Food Stores, Inc., Fla., 226 So.2d 333, 336; American Steel Foundries v. Robertson, 269 U.S. 372, 46 S.Ct. 160, 162, 70 L.Ed. 317.

Trade-name. A "trade-name" is any designation which (a) is adopted and used by person to denominate goods which he markets, or services which he renders, or business which he conducts, or has come to be so used by others, and (b) through its association with such goods, services or business, has acquired a special significance as the name thereof, and (c) the use of which for the purpose stated in (a) is prohibited neither by legislative enactment nor by otherwise defined public policy. Walters v. Building Maintenance Service, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 291 S.W.2d 377, 382. A "trade-name" is descriptive of the manufacturer or dealer for protection in trade, to avoid confusion in business, and to secure the advantages of a good reputation and is applied more to the goodwill of a business than as an identification of a product. Mary Muffet, Inc. v. Smelansky, Mo.App., 158 S.W.2d 168, 170.

A name used in trade to designate a particular business of certain individuals considered somewhat as an entity, or the place at which a business is located, or of a class of goods, but which is not a technical trade-mark either because not applied or affixed to goods sent into the market or because not capable of exclusive appropriation by anyone as a trade-mark. Trade-names may, or may not, be exclusive. Non-exclusive "trade-names" are names that are publici juris in their primary sense, but which in a secondary sense have come to be understood as indicating the goods or business of a particular trader. See Secondary meaning.

The terms "trade-name" and "commercial name" include individual names and surnames, firm names and trade names used by manufacturers, industrialists, merchants, agriculturists, and others to identify their businesses, vocations, or occupations; the names or titles lawfully adopted and used by persons, firms, associations, corporations, companies, unions, and any manufacturing, industrial, commercial, agricultural, or other organizations engaged in trade or commerce and capable of suing and being sued in a court of law. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.

See also Certification mark; Collective mark; Service mark. Compare Trade-mark.

Trader. A merchant; a retailer. One who makes it his business to buy merchandise, goods, or chattels and to sell the same at a profit. People v. Terkanian, 27 Cal.App.2d 460, 51 P.2d 251, 253. One who sells goods substantially in the form in which they are bought; one who has not converted them into another form by his skill or labor. Albuquerque Lumber Co. v. Bureau of Revenue of New Mexico, 42 N.M. 58, 75 P.2d 334, 336.

In securities, one who as a member of a stock exchange buys and sells on the floor of the exchange either for brokers or on his own account. Likewise, in commodity market, one who buys and sells commodities (e.g. grain) and commodity futures for others and for his own account in anticipation of a speculative profit.

Trade secret. A formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business and which gives one opportunity to obtain advantage over competitors who do not know or use it. Rimes v. Club Corp. of America, Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 906, 913. A plan or process, tool, mechanism, or compound known only to its owner and those of his employees to whom it is necessary to confide it. A formula process or formula not patented, but known only to certain individuals using it in compounding some article of trade having a commercial value.

Tradesman. A mechanic, craftsman, or artificer of any kind, whose livelihood depends primarily on the labor of his hands.

Trade-union. A combination of workers of the same trade or of several allied trades, for the purpose of securing by united action the most favorable conditions regarding wages, hours of labor, etc., for its members. See also Union.

Trade usage. The usage or customs commonly observed by persons conversant in, or connected with, a particular trade.

A usage of trade is any practice or method of dealing having such regularity of observance in a place, vocation or trade as to justify an expectation that it will be observed with respect to the transaction in question. The existence and scope of such a usage are to be proved as facts. If it is established that such a usage is embodied in a written trade code or similar writing the interpretation of the writing is for the court. U.C.C. § 1–205(2).

Tradition /trăd’ələs’əm/. Span. In Spanish law, delivery.

Trading. Engaging in trade (q.v.); pursuing the business or occupation of trade or of a trader.

Trading corporation. See Corporation.

Trading stamps. The name for a method of conducting some kinds of retail business which consists of an agreement between a number of merchants and a corporation that the latter shall print the names of the former in its subscribers' dictionary and circulate a number of copies of the book, and that the merchants shall purchase of the corporation a number of so-called trading stamps, to be given to purchasers with their purchases, and by them preserved and pasted in the books aforesaid until a certain number have been secured, when they shall be presented to the corporation in exchange for the choice of certain articles kept in stock by the corporation.
Trading voyage. One which contemplates the touching and stopping of the vessel at various ports for the purpose of traffic or sale and purchase or exchange of commodities on account of the owners and shippers, rather than the transportation of cargo between terminal points, which is called a "freighting voyage."

Trading with the enemy. Carrying on commerce with a country or with a subject of a nation with whom the U.S. is at war. Federal laws prohibit commercial intercourse with nations and with subjects and allies of nations with whom the U.S. is at war. 50 U.S.C.A. App. § 1 et seq.

Traditio /tradish(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, delivery; transfer of possession; a derivative mode of acquiring, by which the owner of a corporeal thing, having the right and the will of aliening it, transfers it for a lawful consideration to the receiver.

Quasi traditio. A supposed or implied delivery of property from one to another. Thus, if the purchaser of an article was already in possession of it before the sale, his continuing in possession is considered as equivalent to a fresh delivery of it, delivery being one of the necessary elements of a sale; in other words, a quasi traditio is predicated.

Traditio brevi manu. A species of constructive or implied delivery. When he who already holds possession of a thing in another's name agrees with that other that thenceforth he shall possess it in his own name, in this case a delivery and redelivery are not necessary.

Traditio clavium. Delivery of keys; a symbolical kind of delivery, by which the ownership of merchandise in a warehouse might be transferred to a buyer.

Traditio longa manu. A species of delivery which takes place where the transferor places the article in the hands of the transferee, or, on his order, delivers it at his house.

Traditio rei. Delivery of the thing.

Traditio loquē facit chartam /tradish(iy)ow lōwkwāy féyst kārdam/. Delivery makes a deed speak. Delivery gives effect to the words of a deed.

Tradition. Delivery. A close translation or formation of an article was already in possession of it before the sale, his continuing in possession is considered as equivalent to a fresh delivery of it, delivery being one of the necessary elements of a sale; in other words, a quasi traditio is predicated.

Traditio nihil amplius transferre debet vel potest, ad eum qui accepit, quam est apud eum qui tradit /tradish(iy)ow nāy(h)al ąmplīyas tran(i)tās fāriy dēbat vel pōvdast, ād įyam kwāy āksapat, kwēm ēst āpōd įyam kwāy trēydāt/. Delivery ought to, and can, transfer nothing more to him who receives than is with him who delivers.

Tridor /trēdādor/trēy*/. In old English law, a traitor; one guilty of high treason.

Triditur in ballium /tradadar in baliyam/. In old practice, means delivered to bail. Emphatic words of the old Latin ball-piece.

Traffic. Commerce; trade; sale or exchange of merchandise, bills, money, and the like. The passing of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money. The subjects of transportation on a route, as persons or goods; the passing to and from of persons, animals, vehicles, or vessels, along a route of transportation, as along a street, highway, etc. See Commerce.

Traffic balances. Balances of moneys collected in payment for the transportation of passengers and freight.

Trafficing. Trading or dealing in certain goods and commonly used in connection with illegal narcotic sales.

Traffic regulations. Prescribed rules of conduct to promote the orderly and safe flow of traffic.

Trahens /trey(h)en(d)z/. Lat. In French law, the drawer of a bill.

Trail-baston. Justices of trail-baston were justices appointed by King Edward I, during his absence in the Scotch and French wars, about the year 1305. They were so styled, says Hollingshed, for trailing or drawing the staff of justice. Their office was to make inquisition, throughout the kingdom, of all officers and others, touching extortion, bribery, and such like grievances, of intruders into other men's lands, barra- tors, robbets, breakers of the peace, and divers other offenders.

Trailer. A separate vehicle, not driven or propelled by its own power, but drawn by some independent power. A semi-trailer is a separate vehicle which is not driven or propelled by its own power, but, which, to be useful, must be attached to and become a part of another vehicle, and then loses its identity as a separate vehicle. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Cross, C.C.A. Tex., 112 F.2d 58, 60.

Trainbands. The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercises.

Traitor. One who, being trusted, betrays; one guilty of treason (q.v.).

Traitorously /trēydrōsliy/. In criminal pleading at common law, an essential word in indictments for treason. The offense must be laid to have been committed traitorously.

Trajectitia pećunia /trajektish(iy)a pēkyūn(i)yə/. A loan to a shipper to be repaid only in case of a successful voyage. The lender could charge an extraordinary rate of interest, nauticum foenus.

Trajectitus /trajektish(iy)as/. Lat. In the civil law, sent across the sea.

Tramp. One who roams about from place to place, begging or living without labor or visible means of support; a vagrant.
Tramp steamer. A ship which is not governed by any pre-arranged ports of call but which stops at those ports for which it has cargo.

Transact. To “transact” means to prosecute negotiations; to carry on business; to have dealings; to carry through; to bring about; to perform; to carry on or conduct; to pass back and forth as in negotiations or trade; to bring into actuality or existence. Knoepfie v. Sukor, N.D., 108 N.W.2d 456, 462. The word embraces in its meaning the carrying on or prosecution of business negotiations, but it is a broader term than the word “contract” and may involve business negotiations which have been either wholly or partly brought to a conclusion. Bozied v. Edgerton, 239 Minn. 227, 58 N.W.2d 313, 316. See also Negotiate; Transaction.

Transacting business. Term “transacting business,” within statute providing that no foreign corporation transacting business in State without a certificate of authority shall maintain an action in State if it has not obtained a certificate of authority, is not susceptible of precise definition automatically resolving every case; each case must be dealt with on its own circumstances to determine if foreign corporation has engaged in local activity or only in interstate commerce. Materials Research Corp. v. Metron, Inc., 64 N.J. 74, 312 A.2d 147, 150.

Test of whether or not a corporation is transacting business, in a district, for purpose of section of the Clayton Act providing that an action may be brought against a corporation in any district wherein it transacts business, is the practical everyday business or commercial concept of doing business of any substantial character. Interstate Cigar Co. v. Corral Wodiska y Ca, D.C.N.Y., 30 F.R.D. 354, 355; Kolb v. Chrysler Corp., D.C.Wis., 357 F.Supp. 357, 504, 508.

See also Doing business; Minimal contacts.

“Doing business” distinguished. The concept of “transacting business” under venue provisions of Investment Company Act of 1940, Securities Act of 1933, and Securities Exchange Act of 1934, requires less business activity than that necessary to sustain jurisdiction under a “doing business” or “minimum contacts” standard, and is intended to have a more flexible and broader meaning than the jurisdictional predicates. Zorn v. Anderson, D.C.N.Y., 263 F.Supp. 745, 747.

Transaction. Act of transacting or conducting any business; negotiation; management; proceeding; that which is done; an affair. It may involve selling, leasing, borrowing, mortgaging or lending. Something which has taken place, whereby a cause of action has arisen. It must therefore consist of an act or agreement, or several acts or agreements having some connection with each other, in which more than one person is concerned, and by which the legal relations of such persons between themselves are altered. It is a broader term than “contract”. Hoffman Machinery Corporation v. Ebenstein, 150 Kan. 790, 96 P.2d 661, 663. See also Transact.

Civil law. An agreement between two or more persons, who, for preventing or putting an end to a lawsuit, adjust their differences by mutual consent, in the manner which they agree on. This contract must be reduced into writing. Civ. Code La. art. 3071.

Evidence. A “transaction” between a witness and a decedent, within statutory provisions excluding evidence of such transactions, embraces every variety of affairs which can form the subject of negotiations, interviews, or actions between two persons, and includes every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another. An action participated in by witness and decedent and to which decedent could testify of his own personal knowledge, if alive. Nelson v. Janssen, 144 Neb. 811, 14 N.W.2d 662, 665. A personal or mutual transaction wherein deceased and witness actively participate.

Transaction without occurrence. See Transaction (Immunity from prosecution).

Transacctional immunity. See Immunity (Immunity from prosecution).

Transaction or occurrence test. Fed.R.Civ.P. 13(a) provides that a claim qualifies as a compulsory counterclaim if it arises out of the “transaction or occurrence” that is the subject matter of the opposing party’s claim. Courts have agreed that these words should be interpreted liberally in order to further the general policies of the federal rules which are to avoid multiple suits and to encourage the determination of the entire controversy among the parties. Thus, the “transaction” test does not require the court to differentiate between opposing legal and equitable claims or between claims in tort and those in contract. Most courts, rather than attempting to define the key terms of Rule 13(a) precisely, have preferred to suggest standards by which the compulsory or permissive nature of specific counterclaims can be determined. Four tests have been suggested:

(1) Are the issues of fact and law raised by the claim and counterclaim largely the same? (2) Would res judicata bar a subsequent suit on defendant’s claim absent the compulsory counterclaim rule? (3) Will substantially the same evidence support or refute plaintiff’s claim as well as defendant’s counterclaim? (4) Is there any logical relation between the claim and the counterclaim? Old Homestead Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 47 F.R.D. 560, 563.

Cross-claims. Most courts have held that the above standards used for dealing with the “transaction or occurrence” test for compulsory counterclaims also apply to cross-claims under Fed.R.Civ.P. 13(g). Old Homestead Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 47 F.R.D. 560, 563.

Transazione / tran(d)zatsiyowney/. An Italian term which technically refers to an instrument whereby parties agree to put an end to a dispute by means of mutual concessions and is the equivalent of “transaction” under the Roman law, the principles of which have been carried into the common law and are found in agreements of accord and satisfaction and compromise and settlement.

Transcript. That which has been transcribed. A copy of any kind, though commonly the term refers to a copy of the record of a trial, hearing or other proceeding. A writing made from or after an original. A copy of an original writing or deed and suggests the idea of an original writing. O’Quinn v. Tate, Tex.Civ.App., 187 S.W.2d 241, 243.

An official copy of the record of proceedings in a trial or hearing. Word-for-word typing of everything that was said “on the record” during the trial. The stenographer types this transcription which is paid for by the parties requesting it.

Transcript of record. Refers to the printed record as made up in each case of the proceedings and pleadings necessary for the appellate court to review the history of the case.

Transfer. v. To convey or remove from one place, person to another; pass or hand over from one to another; specifically, to change over the possession or control of (as, to transfer a title to land). To sell or give. Chappell v. State, 216 Ind. 666, 25 N.E.2d 999, 1001.

Transfer of a cause. The removal of a cause from the jurisdiction of one court or judge to another by lawful authority. See Forum non conveniens.

Transferor. One who makes a transfer.

Transfer of a cause. The removal of a cause from the jurisdiction of one court or judge to another by lawful authority. See Forum non conveniens.

Transfer payments. Payments made by the government to individuals for which no services are rendered in return. A transfer payment might be a Social Security check or an unemployment check.

Transferred intent. doctrine of. If a person intentionally directs force against one person wrongfully but, instead, hits another, his intent is said to be transferred from one to the other and he is liable to the other though he did not intend it in the first instance.

Transfer tax. A tax upon the passing of the title to property or a valuable interest therein out of or from the estate of a decedent, by inheritance, devise, or bequest. See Estate tax; Inheritance tax; Unified transfer tax.

Transfer of a cause. The removal of a cause from the jurisdiction of one court or judge to another by lawful authority. See Forum non conveniens.

Transferor. One who makes a transfer.

Transfer payments. Payments made by the government to individuals for which no services are rendered in return. A transfer payment might be a Social Security check or an unemployment check.

Transferred intent. doctrine of. If a person intentionally directs force against one person wrongfully but, instead, hits another, his intent is said to be transferred from one to the other and he is liable to the other though he did not intend it in the first instance.

Transfer tax. A tax upon the passing of the title to property or a valuable interest therein out of or from the estate of a decedent, by inheritance, devise, or bequest. See Estate tax; Inheritance tax; Unified transfer tax.

Tax on the transfer of property, particularly of an incorporeal nature, such as bonds or shares of stock, between living persons. A tax imposed by New York State when a security is sold or transferred from one person to another. Also, a tax imposed by states on each deed conveying real estate. The tax is paid by the seller. See also Revenue stamps.

Transfer ticket. An undertaking on the part of a common carrier to continue the carriage further without additional charge if the passenger, in accordance with its terms, again presents himself at the proper place for carriage. It generally designates the point at which the journey is to be renewed, but contains no contract, express or implied, for safety in making the Transferuntur dominia sine titulo et traditione, per usu-captionem, sella, per longam continuam et pacificam possessionem. In old English law, a crossing of the strait [of Dover]; a passing or sailing over from England to France. The royal passages or voyages to Gascony, Brittany, and other parts of France were so called, and time was sometimes computed from them.

Transgressio est cum modo non servatur nec mensura. When transgression is multiplied, let the infliction of punishment be increased.

Transient person. An agent who has no residence in the state but who has a fixed place of business therein and who transacts business for hire in the state only temporarily.

Transhipment. In maritime law, the act of taking the cargo out of one ship and loading it in another.

Translation. The reproduction in one language of a book, document, or speech in another language. The translation of a legal document is necessary to ensure that the meaning of the original text is accurately conveyed in the translated version.

Transit. A stop-over privilege on a continuous journey granted by carrier by which a break de facto in continuity of carriage of goods is disregarded and two legs of a journey are treated as though covered without interruption, uniting both legs into a through route for which a joint rate can be published. Galveston Truck Line Corporation v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 797, 802; Baltimore and O. R. Co. v. United States, D.C.N.Y., 24 F.Supp. 734, 735. Within policy covering goods in transit, term has significance of activity and of motion and direction; literally it means in course of passing from point to point, and ordinarily goods in transit would imply that foods will lawfully be picked up at given place and hauled to place designated by owner or one with authority to so designate. Simons v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 398 S.W.2d 833, 834. Term may also be applied to a check which is mailed for collection while it is still in the mails and uncollected. See also in transitu; Stoppage in transit.

Transitory covenant. See Covenant.

Transitory action. A lawsuit that may be brought in any one of many places. Actions are "transitory" when transaction on which they are based might take place anywhere, and are "local" when they could not occur except in some particular place; the distinction being in nature of subject of injury and not in means used or place at which cause of action arises. Howle v. Twin States Exp., 237 N.C. 667, 75 S.E.2d 732, 736. A transitory action may be brought in any court of general jurisdiction in any district wherein defendant can be found and served with process, whereas in a "local action" the defendant must bring suit in the court designated, if not statutorily required to do otherwise. Moreland v. Rucker Pharmacal Co., D.C.La., 59 F.R.D. 537, 540.

Transit terra cum onere. Land passes subject to any burden affecting it.

office, did not usually publish an entirely new edict, but retained the whole or a part of that promulgated by his predecessor, as being of an approved or permanently useful character. The portion thus repeated or handed down from year to year was called the "edictum translatitum."

Translative fact. A fact by means of which a right is transferred or passes from one person to another; one, that is, which fulfills the double function of terminating the right of one person to an object, and of originating the right of another to it.

Transmission. In the civil law, the right which heirs or legatees may have of passing to their successors the inheritance or legacy to which they were entitled, if they happen to die without having exercised their rights.

Transmit. To send or transfer from one person or place to another, or to communicate. State v. Robbins, 253 N.C. 47, 116 S.E.2d 192, 193.

Transportation. The movement of goods or persons from one place to another, by a carrier. Railroad Co. v. Pratt, 22 Wall. 133, 22 L.Ed. 827; Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 14 S.Ct. 1125, 38 L.Ed. 1047; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U.S. 196, 5 S.Ct. 826, 29 L.Ed. 158.

Criminal law. A species of punishment consisting in removing the criminal from his own country to another (usually a penal colony), there to remain in exile for a prescribed period. Fong Yue Ting v. U.S., 149 U.S. 698, 13 S.Ct. 1016, 37 L.Ed. 905. See Deportation.

Trap. A device, as a pitfall, snare, or machine that shuts suddenly as with a spring, for taking game and other animals. Hence, any device or contrivance by which one may be caught unawares, strategem; snare; gin. It imports an affirmative intent or design either malicious or mischievous, to cause injury. Gumbart v. Waterbury Club Holding Corporation, D.C.Conn., 27 F.Supp. 228, 229, 230. The doctrine of "trap" as ground for recovery by trespasser is rested upon theory that owner expected trespasser and prepared an injury. Moseley v. Alabama Power Co., 246 Ala. 416, 21 So.2d 305, 307. The "trap" or "pitfall" which would raise duty of care on part of owner or occupier of land running to a licensee must be an ultrahazardous hidden peril of which occupier has knowledge but licensee does not, and it is not necessary that such trap or pitfall be designed or intended to catch or entrap anything. Bichsel v. Blumbost, Mo.App., 429 S.W.2d 301, 306. See also Entrapment.

Traslado /tra(n)sładow/. In Spanish law, a copy; a sight.

Traverse. In common law pleading, a traverse signifies a denial. Thus, where a defendant denies any material allegation of fact in the plaintiff's declaration, he is said to traverse it, and the plea itself is hence frequently termed a "traverse."

Common traverse. A simple and direct denial of the material allegations of the opposite pleading, and without inducement or abisque hoc.

Criminal practice. To put off or delay the trial of an indictment until a succeeding term. More properly, to deny or take issue upon an indictment. 4 Bl. Comm. 351.

General traverse. One preceded by a general inducement, and denying in general terms all that is last before alleged on the opposite side, instead of pursuing the words of the allegations which it denies.

Special traverse. A peculiar form of traverse or denial, the design of which, as distinguished from a common traverse, is to explain or qualify the denial, instead of putting it in the direct and absolute form. It consists of an affirmative and a negative part, the first setting forth the new affirmative matter tending to explain or qualify the denial, and technically called the "inducement," and the latter constituting the direct denial itself, and technically called the "abisque hoc."

Traverse jury. A petit jury; a trial jury; a jury impaneled to try an action or prosecution, as distinguished from a grand jury. See Jury.

Traverse of indictment or presentment. The taking issue upon and contradicting or denying some chief point of it.

Traverse upon a traverse. One growing out of the same point or subject-matter as is embraced in a preceding traverse on the other side.

Traverser. In pleading, one who traverses or denies. A prisoner or party indicted; so called from his traversing the indictment.

Traversing note. A pleading in chancery, consisting of a denial put in by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant, generally denying all the statements in the plaintiff's bill. The effect of it is to put the plaintiff upon proof of the whole contents of his bill, and is only resorted to for the purpose of saving time, and in a case where the plaintiff can safely dispense with an answer. A copy of the note must be served on the defendant.

T.R.E. An abbreviation of "Tempore Regis Edwardi," (in the time of King Edward), of common occurrence in Domesday, when the valuation of manors, as it was in the time of Edward the Confessor, is recounted.

Treachery. Deliberate and wilful betrayal of trust and confidence.

Tread-mill, or tread-wheel. An instrument of prison discipline, being a wheel or cylinder with an horizontal axis, having steps attached to it, up which the prisoners walk, and thus put the axis in motion. The men hold on by a fixed rail, and, as their weight presses down the step upon which they tread, they ascend the next step, and thus drive the wheel.

Treason. The offense of attempting by overt acts to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance; or of betraying the state into the hands of a foreign power. Treason consists of two elements: Adherence to the enemy, and rendering him aid and comfort. Cramer v. U. S., U.S. N.Y., 325 U.S. 1, 65 S.Ct. 918, 932, 89 L.Ed. 1441. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 2381. A person can be convicted of treason only on the testimony of two witnesses, or confession in open court. Art. III, Sec. 3, U.S. Constitution.

Constructive treason. Treason imputed to a person by law from his conduct or course of actions, though his deeds taken severally do not amount to actual treason. This doctrine is not known in the United States.

High treason. In English law, treason against the king or sovereign, as distinguished from petit or petty treason, which might formerly be committed against a subject.

Mispriision of treason. See Mispriision of treason.

Petit treason. In English law, the crime committed by a wife in killing her husband, or a servant his lord or master, or an ecclesiastic his lord or ordinary. 4 Bl. Comm. 75.

Treason-felony. Under the English statute 11 & 12 Vict., c. 12, passed in 1848, is the offense of compassing, devising, etc., to depose her majesty from the crown; or to levy war in order to intimidate either house of parliament, etc., or to stir up foreigners by any printing or writing to invade the kingdom. This offense is punishable with penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than five years, etc., under statutes 11 & 12 Vict., c. 12, § 3; 20 & 21 Vict., c. 3, § 2; 27 & 28 Vict., c. 47, § 2. By the statute first above mentioned, the government is enabled to treat as felony many offenses which must formerly have been treated as high treason.

Treasurer, Lord High. Formerly the chief treasurer of England, who had charge of the moneys in the exchequer, the chancellor of the exchequer being under him. He appointed all revenue officers and escheaters, and leased crown lands. The office is obsolete, and his duties are now performed by the lords commissioners of the treasury.

Treasurer of the United States. See Treasury Department.
Treasurer's Remembrancer. In English law, he whose charge was to put the lord treasurer and the rest of the judges of the exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behalf.

Treasure-trove. Literally, treasure found. Money or coin, gold, silver, plate or bullion found hidden in the earth or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown. 1 Bl.Comm. 295. Called in Latin "thesaurus Inventus," and in Saxon "fynderinge." Finder of treasure trove is entitled thereto as against owner of land where such treasure is found and all the world save the true owner, in absence of statute. Schley v. Couch, 284 S.W.2d 333, 335.

Treasury. A place or building in which stores of wealth are reposed; particularly, a place where the public revenues are deposited and kept, and where money is disbursed to defray the expenses of government.

That department of government which is charged with the receipt, custody, and disbursement (pursuant to appropriations) of the public revenues or funds.

Treasury bench. In the English house of commons, the first row of seats on the right hand of the speaker is so called, because occupied by the first lord of the treasury or principal minister of the crown.

Treasury bill. Short-term obligations of the federal government. Treasury bills are for specified terms of three, six and twelve months. An obligation of the U.S. Treasury with a maturity date less than one year from the date of issue and bearing no interest but sold at a discount. Distinguished from a certificate of indebtedness, which also provides for the redemption at par before maturity. Treasury bills are reposited; particularly, a place where the public revenues are deposited and kept, and where money is disbursed to defray the expenses of government.

TRESPASS

Treble damages. See Costs.

Treble damages. Damages given by statute in certain cases, consisting of the single damages found by the jury, actually tripled in amount. See e.g. Section 4 of Clayton Act which provides for treble damages for antitrust violations. 15 U.S.C.A. § 15.

Tresayle /trasēy(ə)l/. An abolished writ sued on ouster

Tres faciunt collegium /triyz friysh(iy)ant kaliy(jiy)om/. Three make a corporation; three members are requisite to constitute a corporation. 1 Bl.Comm. 469.

Trespass. An unlawful interference with one's person, property, or rights. At common law, trespass was a form of action brought to recover damages for any injury to one's person or property or relationship with another.

Trespass comprehends any misfeasance, transgression or offense which damages another person's health, reputation or property. King v. Citizens Bank of De Kalb, 88 Ga.App. 40, 76 S.E.2d 86, 91. Doing of unlawful act or of lawful act in unlawful manner to injury of another's person or property. Waco Cotton Oil Mill of Waco v. Walker, Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 1071, 1072. An unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, causing injury to the person, property, or relative rights of another. It comprehends not only forcible wrongs, but also acts the consequences of which make them tortious. Mawson v. Voss Beverage Co., Mo.App., 173 S.W.2d 606, 612, 613, 614.

See also Forcible trespass; Intruder.

Continuing trespass. One which is in its nature a permanent invasion of the rights of another; as, where a person builds on his own land so that a part of the building overhangs his neighbor's land or dumps rubbish on the land of another. In such a case, there is a continuing wrong so long as the offending object remains.

A trespass may be committed by the continued presence on the land of a structure, chattel, or other thing which the actor or his predecessor in legal interest has placed on the land: (a) with the consent of the person then in possession of the land, if the actor fails to remove it after the consent has been effectively terminated, or (b) pursuant to a privilege conferred on the actor irrespective of the possessor's consent, if the actor fails to remove it after the privilege has been terminated, by the accomplishment of its purpose or otherwise. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 160.

Criminal trespass. Criminal trespass is entering or remaining upon or in any land, structure, vehicle, aircraft or watercraft by one who knows he is not authorized or privileged to do so; and (a) He enters or remains therein in defiance of an order not to enter or to leave such premises or property personally communicated to him by the owner thereof or other authorized person; or (b) Such premises or property are posted in a manner reasonably likely to come to the attention of intruders, or are fenced or otherwise enclosed. See also Criminal.

Joint trespass. Exists where two or more persons unite in committing it, or where some actually commit the tort, the others command, encourage or direct it.

Permanent trespass. One which consists of a series of acts, done on successive days, which are of the same nature, and are renewed or continued from day to day, so that, in the aggregate, they make up one indivisible wrong. 3 Bl.Comm. 212.

Trespass ab initio. One who innocently or with a privilege enters upon land may become a trespasser "from the beginning" if his subsequent conduct constitutes trespass by an abuse of such privilege.

Trespass de bonis asportatis /trespas diy bōwṇas aσpɔrtiθados/. (Trespass for goods carried away.) A form of action supplemental to an action of ejectment, brought against the tenant in possession to recover the profits which he has wrongfully received during the time of his occupation. 3 Bl.Comm. 205.

Trespass on the case. The form of action, at common law, adapted to the recovery of damages for some injury resulting to a party from the wrongful act of another, unaccompanied by direct or immediate force, or which is the indirect or secondary consequence of defendant's act. Commonly called, by abbreviation, "Case."

Trespass quare clausum fugit /trespas kwɔri joθɔ yfiθoʃət/. "Trespass wherefore he broke the close." The common-law action for damages for an unlawful entry or trespass upon the plaintiff's land. In the Latin form of the writ, the defendant was called upon to show why he broke the plaintiff's close; i.e., the real or imaginary structure inclosing the land, whence the name. It is commonly abbreviated to "trespass qu. cl. fr." See also Trespass to try title, infra.

Trespass to chattels. An unlawful and serious interference with the possessor rights of another to personal property.

Trespass to land. At common law, every unauthorized and direct breach of the boundaries of another's land was an actionable trespass. No intent to commit a trespass was required. All that was necessary was that the act resulting in the trespass be volitional, and that the resulting trespass be direct and immediate. Nor did actual damage need be shown. Any trespass justified at least nominal damages. The present prevailing position of the courts, and Restatement of Torts, finds liability for trespass only in the case of intentional intrusion, or negligence, or some "abnormally dangerous activity" on the part of the defendant. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 166. See Zimmer v. Stephenson, 66 Wash.2d 477, 403 P.2d 343. Compare Nuisance.

Extent of trespasser's liability for harm. A trespass on land subjects the trespasser to liability for physical harm to the possessor of the land at the
TRESPASS

Trespasser. One who has committed trespass. One versus concerning title or right to possession is settled. Procedure by which rival claims to title or right to committed upon the same by the defendant. A profession of real property, with damages for any trespass several of the states for the recovery of the possession of the property, with damages for any injury committed by the defende trespass with force and arms. The common-law action in that title must be proved.

Trespasser ab initio. Trespasser from the beginning. A term applied to a tort-feasor whose acts relate back so as to make a previous act, at the time innocent, unlawful; as if he enter peaceably, and subsequently commit a breach of the peace, his entry is considered a trespass.

Trestormare. In old English law, to turn aside; to divert a stream from its course. To turn or alter the course of a road.

Tresviri. Lat. In Roman law, officers who had the charge of prisons, and the execution of condemned criminals.

Tret. An allowance made for the water or dust that may be mixed with any commodity. It differs from tare (q.v.).

Trethinga. In old English law, a trithing; the condition created by the trespasser, irrespective of cause by any act done, activity carried on, or condition created by the trespasser, irrespective of whether his conduct is such as would subject him to liability were he not a trespasser. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 162.

Failure to remove thing tortiously placed on land. A trespass may be committed by the continued presence on the land of a structure, chattel, or thing which the actor has tortiously placed there, whether or not the actor has the ability to remove it. A trespass may be committed by the continued presence on the land of a structure, chattel, or thing which the actor’s predecessor in interest therein has tortiously placed there, if the actor, having acquired his legal interest in the thing with knowledge of such tortious conduct or having thereafter learned of it, fails to remove the thing. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 161.

Intrusions upon, beneath, and above surface of land. (1) Except as stated in Subsection (2), a trespass may be committed on, beneath, or above the surface of the earth. (2) Flight by aircraft in the air space above the land of another is a trespass if, but only if, (a) it enters into the immediate reaches of the air space next to the land, and (b) it interferes substantially with the other’s use and enjoyment of his land. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 159.

Liability for intentional intrusions on land. One is subject to liability to another for trespass, irrespective of whether he thereby causes harm to any legally protected interest of the other, if he intentionally (a) enters land in the possession of the other, or causes a thing or a third person to do so, or (b) remains on the land, or (c) fails to remove from the land a thing which he is under a duty to remove. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 158.

Trespass to try title. The name of the action used in several of the states for the recovery of the possession of real estate, without damages for any trespass committed upon the same by the defendant. A procedure by which rival claims to title or right to possession of land may be adjudicated, and as an incident partition may also be had when the controversy concerning title or right to possession is settled. It is different from “trespass quare clausum fregit,” in that title must be proved.

Trespass vi et armis. Trespass with force and arms. The common-law action for damages for any injury committed by the defendant with direct and immediate force or violence against the plaintiff or his property. See Mawson v. Vess Beverage Co., Mo.App., 173 S.W.2d 606, 613.

Joint trespassers. Two or more who unite in committing a trespass.
TRIAL PER PAIS

A listing of account balances; all accounts with debit balances are totaled separately from accounts with credit balances. The two totals should be equal. Trial balances are taken as a partial check of the arithmetic accuracy of the entries previously made.

Trial by certificate. A form of trial formerly allowed in cases where the evidence of the person certifying was the only proper criterion of the point in dispute. Under such circumstances, the issue might be determined by the certificate alone, because, if sent to a jury, it would be conclusive upon them, and therefore their intervention was unnecessary.

Trial by court or judge. Trial before judge alone, in contrast to trial before jury and judge.

Trial by fire. See Ordeal.

Trial by Grand Assize. A peculiar mode of trial formerly allowed in England on writs of right. See Assize;

Trial by jury. A trial in which the issues of fact are to be determined by the verdict of a jury, duly selected, impaneled, and sworn. The terms "jury" and "trial by jury" were used at the adoption of the constitution, and always, it is believed, before that time, and almost always since, in a single sense. A jury for the trial of a cause was a body of twelve men, described as upright, well-qualified, and lawful men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by officers free from all bias in favor of or against either party, duly impaneled under the direction of a competent court, sworn to render a true verdict according to the law and the evidence given them, who, after hearing the parties and their evidence, and receiving the instructions of the court relative to the law involved in the trial, and deliberating, when necessary, apart from all extraneous influences, must return their unanimous verdict upon the issue submitted to them. In federal court, and as well in many state courts, the parties may stipulate that the jury shall consist of less than twelve members or that a verdict of a stated majority of the jurors shall be taken as the verdict of the jury. See Fed.R.Civil P. 48; Fed.R.Crim.P. 23.

The Seventh Amendment to Federal Constitution provides that "In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved." See also Fed.R.Civil P. 38(a). The right to a jury trial is also preserved in state constitutions. The parties, however, by stipulation may waive the right to a jury trial, and consent to trial by the court sitting without a jury. See also Jury trial.

Trial by news media. The process by which the news media in reporting an investigation of a person on trial leads its readers to act as judge and jury in determining guilt, liability or innocence before the person is tried in a judicial forum. Failure to protect accused from inherently prejudicial publicity may constitute deprivation of right to fair and impartial trial as guaranteed by due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment. Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333, 86 S.Ct. 1507, 16 L.Ed.2d 600.

Local court rules have been widely adopted, seeking to set a proper balance between a free press and a fair trial by putting restrictions on the release of information by attorneys and courthouse personnel, making special provision for the conduct of proceedings in extensively publicized and sensational cases, and barring photography, radio, and television equipment from the courtroom and its environs.

See also Gag order.

Trial by proviso. A proceeding formerly allowed where the plaintiff in an action desists from prosecuting his suit, and does not bring it to trial in convenient time. The defendant, in such case, may take out the venire facias to the sheriff, containing these words, "proviso quod," etc., i.e., provided that. If plaintiff take out any writ to that purpose, the sheriff shall summon but one jury on them both. This is called "going to trial by proviso."

Trial by the record. A form of trial resorted to where issue is taken upon a plea of null tiet record, in which case the party asserting the existence of a record as pleaded is bound to produce it in court on a day assigned. If the record is forthcoming, the issue is tried by inspection and examination of it. If the record is not produced, judgment is given for his adversary. 3 Bl.Comm. 330.

Trial by wager of battel. See Wager of battel.

Trial by wager of law. In old English law, a method of trial, where the defendant, coming into court, made oath that he did not owe the claim demanded of him, and eleven of his neighbors, as compurgators, swore that they believed him to speak the truth. 3 Bl.Comm. 343. See Wager of law.

Trial by witnesses. The name "trial per testes" was used for a trial without the intervention of a jury, was the only method of trial known to the civil law, and was adopted by depositions in chancery. The judge was thus left to form, in his own breast, his sentence upon the credit of the witnesses examined. Such type trial was very rarely used at common law.

Trial de novo. A new trial or retrial had in which the whole case is retried as if no trial whatever had been had in the first instance. Housing Authority of City of Newark v. Norfolk Realty Co., 71 N.J. 314, 334 A.2d 1052, 1058. See New trial, supra. See also Motion for new trial; Plain error rule.

Trial jury. See Jury.

Trial list. A list of cases marked down for trial for any one term. See Trial calendar.

Trial calendar. Comprehensive list of cases awaiting trial and containing the dates for trial, names of counsel, expected time required for trial, etc. In some states it is maintained by the trial judge and in others, by the clerk of court. See e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 79. See also Calendar; Docket.

Trial court. The court of original jurisdiction; the first court to consider litigation. Used in contrast to appellate court.

Trial on merits. Trial of substantive issues in case. Ennis v. Kennedy Valve Mfg. Co., 282 A.D. 971, 125 N.Y.S.2d 535, 537. Term used in contrast to a hearing on motion or on other interlocutory matters.

Trial per palls. Historically, a trial by one's peers.
Tribute /tribyuwt/. A contribution which is raised by a tributary, /tribyat(eh)riy/. Paying or yielding tribute adj. Tributary, /tribyat(eh)riy/. Any stream flowing directly into a river. Bull v. Siegrist, 169 Or. 180, 126 P.2d 832, 834.

Tribunal. The seat of a judge; the place where he administers justice. The whole body of judges who compose a jurisdiction; a judicial court; the jurisdiction which the judges exercise.

In Roman law, an elevated seat occupied by the praetor, when he judged, or heard causes in form. Originally a kind of stage made of wood in the form of a square, and movable, but afterwards built of stone in the form of a semicircle.

Trigild. In Saxon law, a triple gild, geld, or payment; three times the value of a thing, paid as a composition or satisfaction.

Trinity House. In English law, a society at Deptford Strond, incorporated by Hen. VIII in 1515, for the promotion of commerce and navigation by licensing and regulating pilots, and ordering and erecting beacons, lighthouses, buoys, etc.

Trinity Masters. Elder brethren of the Trinity House. If a question arising in an admiralty action depends upon technical skill and experience in navigation, the judge or court is usually assisted at the hearing by two Trinity Masters who sit as assessors, and advise the court on questions of a nautical character.

Trinity term. One of the four terms of the English courts of common law, beginning on the 22d day of May, and ending on the 12th of June.

Triniogold /triniogold/. In Old French law, extraordinary kind of composition for an offense, consisting of three times nine, or twenty-seven times the single geld or payment.

Trinum /trid(y)uwam/. In old English law, the space of three days.

Triennial Act /trayeniyal eekt/. An act of parliament of 1641, which provided that if in every third year parliament was not summoned and assembled before September 3, it should assemble on the second Monday of the next November.

Also an act of 1694, which provided that a parliament be called within three years after dissolution, and that the utmost limit of a parliament be three years. This was followed by the Septennial Act of 1716.

Tryens /träyen(d)z/. Lat. In feudal law, dowry or third. 2 Bl.Comm. 129.

In Roman law, a subdivision of the as, containing four uncia; the proportion of four-twelfths or one-third. 2 Bl.Comm. 462, note m. A copper coin of the value of one-third of the as.

Trier of fact. Term includes (a) the jury and (b) the court when the court is trying an issue of fact other than one relating to the admissibility of evidence. Calif.Evid.Code. Commonly refers to judge in jury waived trial or jury which, in either case, has the exclusive obligation to make findings of fact in contrast to rulings of law which must be made by judge.

Trifurcated trial. A trial which is divided into three stages or parts as for example, a trial on issue of liability, trial for general damages, and trial for special damages.

Tribuere /trabyuwariy/. Lat. In the civil law, to give; to distribute.

Tribuere /trabyuwariy/. Lat. In the civil law, to give; to distribute.

Tribuna /trasezama/. An ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called because thirty burgesses paid 1d. rent for their houses to the bishop, who was lord of the manor.

Tribuna /trasezama/. An ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called because thirty burgesses paid 1d. rent for their houses to the bishop, who was lord of the manor.

Triumphal Arch. Originally a kind of stage made of wood in the form of a semicircle.
Tripartite /traryptayt/. In conveyancing, of three.

Triplicacion /tripbakyown/. L. Fr. In old pleading, the action on the case, and originally lay for the recovery of damages against a person who had found another's goods and wrongfully converted them to his own use. Such remedy lies only for wrongful appropriation of goods, chattels, or personal property which is specific enough to be identified. See also Conversion.

Trivials. Trifling; inconsiderable; of small worth or importance. In equity, a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court.

TRO. Temporary restraining order.

Tronage /trownaj/. In English law, a customary duty or toll for weighing wool; so called because it was weighed by a common trona, or beam.

Tronator /trowneydar/. A weigher of wool.

Trophy. Anything taken from an enemy and shown or treasured up in proof of victory. A price or token of victory in any contest; hence, a memento of victory or success; an ornamental group of objects hung together on a wall, or any collection of objects typical of some event, art, industry, or branch of knowledge; a memento or memorial. In re Vortex Cup Co., Cust. & Pat.App., 83 F.2d 821, 822.

Trophy money. Money formerly collected and raised in London, and the several counties of England, towards providing harness and maintenance for the militia, etc.

Trover /trowvər/. In common-law practice, the action of trover (or trover and conversion) is a species of action on the case, and originally lay for the recovery of damages against a person who had found another's goods and wrongfully converted them to his own use. Subsequently the allegation of the loss of the goods by the plaintiff and the finding of them by the defendant was merely fictitious, and the action became the remedy for any wrongful interference with or detention of the goods of another. In form a fiction; in substance, a remedy to recover the value of personal chattels wrongfully converted by another to his own use. A possessor action wherein plaintiff must show that he has either a general or special property in thing converted and the right to its possession at the time of the alleged conversion. Such remedy lies only for wrongful appropriation of goods, chattels, or personal property which is specific enough to be identified. See also Conversion.

Truancy. Wilful and unjustified failure to attend school by one who is required to attend. It is a punishable offense within the juvenile system in some states and, in others, it is the basis of a petition for a child in need of services.

Truce. In international law, a suspension or temporary cessation of hostilities by agreement between belligerent powers; an armistice.

Truce of God. In medieval law, a truce or suspension of arms promulgated by the church, putting a stop to private hostilities at certain periods or during certain sacred seasons.

True. Conformable to fact; correct; exact; actual; genuine; honest. In one sense, that only is “true” which is conformable to the actual state of things. In that sense, a statement is “untrue” which does not express things exactly as they are. But in another and broader sense the word “true” is often used as a True admission. A formal act done in course of judicial proceedings which waives or dispenses with production of evidence by conceding for purposes of litigation that proposition of fact alleged by opponent is true. Maltz v. Jackoway-Katz Cap Co., 336 Mo. 1000, 82 S.W.2d 909, 917. See also Admission; Stipulation.

True bill. The endorsement made by a grand jury upon a bill of indictment, when they find it sustained by the evidence laid before them, and are satisfied of the truth of the accusation. The endorsement made by a grand jury when they find sufficient evidence to warrant a criminal charge. An indictment.

True copy. A true copy does not mean an absolutely exact copy but means that the copy shall be so true that anybody can understand it.

True, public, and notorious. These three qualities were formally predicated in the libel in the ecclesiastical courts, of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article severally.

True value. For tax assessment purposes, term refers to the market value of the property at fair and bona fide sale at private contract, and is in essence the value property has in exchange for money. City of Newark v. West Milford Tp., Passaic County, 9 N.J. 295, 88 A.2d 211, 214. See also Market value; Value.

True value rule. Under this rule, one who subscribes for and receives corporate stock must pay therefor the par value thereof either in money or in money's worth, so that the real assets of the corporation shall at least square with its books, and whenever, whether by fraud, accident or mistake, the true value of property, labor or services received in payment does not equal par value, stock is deemed unpaid for to the full extent of the difference, and holders are liable to creditors for the difference, notwithstanding good faith of directors. Johansen v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 345 Mo. 135, 131 S.W.2d 599, 603.

True verdict. The voluntary conclusion of the jury after deliberate consideration, and it is none the less a true verdict because the respective jurors may have been liberal in concessions to each other, if conscientiously and freely made. A verdict is not a "true verdict," when it is the result of any arbitrary rule or order, whether imposed by themselves, or by the court or officer in charge.

Trust. A right of property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another. King v. Richardson, C.C.A.N.C., 136 F.2d 849, 856, 857. A confidence reposed in one person, who is termed trustee, for the benefit of another, who is called the cestui que trust, respecting property which is held by the trustee for the benefit of the cestui que trust. State ex rel. Wirt v. Superior Court for Spokane County, 10 Wash.2d 362, 116 P.2d 752, 755. Any arrangement whereby property is transferred with intention that it be administered by trustee for another's benefit.

A fiduciary relation with respect to property, subjecting person by whom the property is held to equitable duties to deal with the property for the benefit of another person which arises as the result of a manifestation of an intention to create it. An obligation on a person arising out of confidence reposed in him to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence; as being in nature of deposition by which proprietor transfers to another property of subject intrusted, not that it should remain with him, but that it should be applied to certain uses for the benefit of third party.

A trust can be created for any purpose which is not illegal, and which is not against public policy. Collins v. Lyon, Inc., 181 Va. 230, 24 S.E.2d 572, 579.

Essential elements of trust are designated beneficiary and trustee, fund sufficiently identified to enable title to pass to trustee, and actual delivery to trustee with intention of passing title. City Bank Farmers' Trust Co. v. Charity Organization Soc. of City of New York, 238 App.Div. 720, 265 N.Y.S. 267.

An association or organization of persons or corporations having the intention and power, or the tendency, to create a monopoly, control production, interfere with the free course of trade or transportation, or to fix and regulate the price of commodities. In the history of economic development, the "trust" was originally a device by which several corporations engaged in the same general line of business might combine for their mutual advantage, in the direction of eliminating destructive competition, controlling the output of their commodity, and regulating and maintaining its price, but at the same time preserving their separate individual existence, and without any consolidation or merger. This device was the erection of a central committee or board, composed, perhaps, of the presidents or general managers of the different corporations, and the transfer to them of a majority of the stock in each of the corporations, to be held "in trust" for the several stockholders so assigning their holdings. These stockholders received in return "trust certificates" showing that they were entitled to receive the dividends on their assigned stock, though the voting power of it had passed to the trustees. This last feature enabled the trustees or committee to elect all the directors of all the corporations, and through them the officers, and thereby to exercise an absolutely controlling influence over the policy and operations of each constituent company, to the ends and with the purposes above mentioned. Though the "trust," in this sense, is now seldom if ever resorted to as a form of corporate organization, having given place to the "holding corporation" and other devices, the word became current in statute laws as well as popular speech, to designate almost any form of combination of a monopolistic character or tendency. Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U.S. 197, 24 S.Ct. 436, 48 L.Ed. 679; Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. State of Missouri, 238 U.S. 41, 35 S.Ct. 671, 673, 59 L.Ed. 1192.

In a looser sense the term is applied to any combination of establishments in the same line of business for securing the same ends by holding the individual interests of each subservient to a common authority for the common interests of all. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. State of Missouri, 238 U.S. 41, 35 S.Ct. 671, 673, 59 L.Ed. 1192.
A trust, as the term is used in the Restatement, when not qualified by the word "charitable," "resulting" or "constructive," is a fiduciary relationship with respect to property, subjecting the person by whom the title to the property is held to equitable duties to deal with the property for the benefit of another person, which arises as a result of a manifestation of an intention to create it. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 2.

Accumulation trust. Trust in which trustees are directed to accumulate income and gains from sales of trust assets for ultimate disposition when the trust is terminated. Many states have laws governing the time over which accumulations may be made. See also Accumulation trust.

Active trust. One which imposes upon the trustee the duty of taking active measures in the execution of the trust, as, where property is conveyed to trustees with directions to sell and distribute the proceeds among creditors of the grantor; distinguished from a "passive" or "dry" trust.

In a "passive trust" the legal and equitable titles are merged in the beneficiaries and beneficial use is converted into legal ownership, while in an "active trust" the title remains in trustee for purpose of the trust. Johnson v. Thornton, 264 S.C. 252, 214 S.E.2d 124, 127.

Alimony trust. Device used to secure obligation of husband to pay support or alimony for wife. Transfer by husband to trustee of property from which wife as beneficiary will be supported after divorce or separation.

Annuity trust. An annuity trust is a trust from which the trustee is required to pay a sum certain annually to one or more individual beneficiaries for their respective lives or for a term of years, and thereafter either transfer the remainder to or for the use of a qualified charity or retain the remainder for such a use. The sum certain must not be less than 5% of the initial fair market value of the property transferred to the trust by the donor. A qualified annuity trust must comply with the basic statutory requirements of I.R.C. § 664. See also Annuity trust.

Bond trust. A trust, the res of which consists in bonds which yield interest income.

Business trust. See Business; Massachusetts trust; Trust estates as business companies.

Cestui que trust. The person for whose benefit a trust is created or who is to enjoy the income or the avails of it. See Beneficiary.

Charitable remainder trust. A trust which consists of assets which are paid over to the trust after the expiration of a life estate or intermediate estates and designated for charitable purposes. See also Charitable remainder annuity trust.

Charitable trusts. Trusts designed for the benefit of a class or the public generally. They are essentially different from private trusts in that the beneficiaries are uncertain. In general, such must be created for charitable, educational, religious or scientific purposes.

Clifford trust. Under this tax planning device, a transfer of income-producing property is made to a trust which provides that the income is either to be paid or accumulated for the benefit of a beneficiary other than the grantor for a period of more than ten years, at which time the trust is to terminate and the property reverts back to the grantor. This transfer is made at the cost of a gift tax and if the gift tax paid is less than the income tax which will be saved as the result of the shifting of the income from the high-bracket grantor to the low-bracket beneficiary, the technique has merit from a tax point of view. Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331, 60 S.Ct. 554, 84 L.Ed. 788; I.R.C. §§ 671–678.

Community trust. An agency organized for the permanent administration of funds placed in trust for public health, educational and charitable purposes.

Complete voluntary trust. One completely created, the subject-matter being designated, the trustee and beneficiary being named, and the limitations and trusts being fully and perfectly declared.

Complex trust. A complex trust is any trust other than a simple trust. One in which the trustees have discretion as to whether to distribute and discretion as to amounts distributed. Such trusts are governed for tax purposes by I.R.C. §§ 661–663.

Constructive trust. A trust raised by construction of law, or arising by operation of law, as distinguished from an express trust. Wherever the circumstances of a transaction are such that the person who takes the legal estate in property cannot also enjoy the beneficial interest without necessarily violating some established principle of equity, the court will immediately raise a constructive trust, and fasten it upon the conscience of the legal owner, so as to convert him into a trustee for the parties who in equity are entitled to the beneficial enjoyment.

Constructive trusts do not arise by agreement or from intention, but by operation of law, and fraud, active or constructive, is their essential element. Actual fraud is not necessary, but such a trust will arise whenever circumstances under which property was acquired made it inequitable that it should be retained by him who holds the legal title. Constructive trusts have been said to arise through the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel, or under the broad doctrine that equity regards and treats as done what in good conscience ought to be done, and such trusts are also known as "trusts ex maleficio" or "ex delicto" or "involuntary trusts" and their forms and varieties are practically without limit, being raised by courts of equity whenever it becomes necessary to prevent a failure of justice. See also Involuntary trust, infra.

Contingent trust. An express trust depending for its operation upon a future event.
Creation of trust. A trust may be created by: (a) a declaration by the owner of property that he holds it as trustee for another person; or (b) a transfer inter vivos by the owner of property to another person as trustee for the transferor or for a third person; or (c) a transfer by will by the owner of property to another person as trustee for a third person; or (d) an appointment by one person having a power of appointment to another person as trustee for the donee of the power or for a third person; or (e) a promise by one person to another person whose rights thereunder are to be held in trust for a third person. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 17.

Directory trust. One which is not completely and finally settled by the instrument creating it, but only defined in its general purpose and to be carried into detail according to later specific directions.

Direct trust. An express trust, as distinguished from a constructive or implied trust.

Discretionary trust. Trust in which trustees have discretion as to types of investment and also as to whether and when distributions may be made to beneficiaries.

Dry trust. One which merely vests the legal title in the trustee, and does not require the performance of any active duty on his part to carry out the trust.

Educational trusts. Trusts for the founding, endowment, and supporting schools for the advancement of all useful branches of learning, which are not strictly private.

Equipment trust. Financing method commonly used by railroads in which the equipment's title is transferred to trustees as security for the financing.

Estate trust. An estate trust is a trust, for all or part of the income of which is to be accumulated during the surviving spouse's life and added to corpus, with the accumulated income and corpus being paid to the estate of the surviving spouse at death. This type of trust is commonly used to qualify property for the marital deduction.

Executed trust. A trust of which the scheme has in the outset been completely declared. A trust in which the estates and interest in the subject-matter of the trust are completely limited and defined by the instrument creating the trust, and require no further instruments to complete them.

Executory trust. One which requires the execution of some further instrument, or the doing of some further act, on the part of the creator of the trust or of the trustee, towards its complete creation or full effect.

Express active trust. Where will confers upon executor or administrator to manage property of estate and pay over net income to devisees or legatees, such authority creates an "express active trust".

Express private passive trust. Such exists where land is conveyed to or held by one person in trust for another, without any power being expressly or impliedly given trustee to take actual possession of land or exercise acts of ownership over it, except by beneficiary's direction.

Express trust. A trust created or declared in express terms, and usually in writing, as distinguished from one inferred by the law from the conduct or dealings of the parties. A trust directly created for specific purposes in contrast to a constructive or resulting trust which arises by implication of law or the demands of equity. Trusts which are created by the direct and positive acts of the parties, by some writing, or deed, or will, or by words expressly or impliedly evincing an intention to create a trust. Conconnon v. Conconnon, 116 R.I. 323, 356 A.2d 487, 491.

Fixed trust. A non-discretionary trust in which the trustee may not exercise his own judgment.

Foreign situs trust. A trust which owes its existence to foreign law. It is treated for tax purposes as a non-resident alien individual.

Foreign trust. A trust created and administered under foreign law.

Grantor trust. A trust in which the grantor transfers or conveys property in trust for his own benefit alone or for himself and another.

Honorary trust. Trust for specific non-charitable purposes where there is no definite ascertainable beneficiary and hence unenforceable in the absence of statute.

Illusory trust. A trust arrangement which takes the form of a trust, but because of powers retained in the settlor has no real substance and in reality is not a completed trust. In re Herron's Estate, Fla.App., 237 So.2d 563, 566.

Imperfect trust. An executory trust (q.v.); see also Executed trust, supra.

Implied trust. A trust raised or created by implication of law; a trust implied or presumed from circumstances. Constructive and resulting trusts are implied trusts because they arise by implication of law or by demands of equity.

Indestructible trust. A trust which may not be terminated or revoked. See Claflin trust.

Instrumental trust. See Ministerial trusts, infra.

Insurance trust. A trust, the res of which consists of insurance policies or their proceeds. See also Insurance.

Inter vivos trust. Trust created by an instrument which becomes operative during the settlor's lifetime as contrasted with a testamentary trust which takes effect on the death of the settlor.

Involuntary trust. Involuntary or "constructive" trusts embrace all those instances in which a trust is raised by the doctrines of equity, for the purpose of working out justice in the most efficient manner, when there is no intention of the parties to create a trust relation. This class of trusts usually be referred to fraud, either actual or constructive, as an essential element.

Irrevocable trust. Trust which may not be revoked after its creation as in the case of a deposit of money by one in the name of another as trustee for the benefit of a third person (beneficiary).

Land trust. See Land trust.

Limited trust. Trust created for a limited period of time in contrast to a perpetual trust.
Liquidation trust. Trust created for purpose of terminating a business or other undertaking and for distributing the res.

Living trust. An inter vivos trust created and operative during the lifetime of the settlor and commonly for benefit or support of another person.

Marital deduction trust. A testamentary trust created to take full advantage of the marital deduction (q.v.) provisions of the Int.Rev.Code.

Massachusetts or business trusts. See Business; Massachusetts trust; Trust estates as business companies.

Ministerial trusts. (Also called “instrumental trusts.”) Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; as to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding.

Naked trust. A dry or passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee, beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust.

Nominee trust. An arrangement for holding title to real property under which one or more persons or corporations, pursuant to a written declaration of trust, declare that they will hold any property that they acquire as trustees for the benefit of one or more undisclosed beneficiaries.

Non-discretionary trust. A fixed trust under which the trustees may exercise no judgment or discretion at least as to distributions.

Passive trust. A trust as to which the trustee has no active duty to perform. “Passive trust,” which equity court may terminate before it ends by its terms, is one in which the trustee does not have responsibilities or discretionary duties to perform. Nickson v. Filitrol Corp., Del.Ch., 262 A.2d 267, 271.

Perpetual trust. A trust which is to continue as long as the need for it continues as for the lifetime of a beneficiary or the term of a particular charity.

Personal trust. Trusts created by and for individuals and their families in contrast to business or charitable trusts.

Pour-over trust. A provision in a will in which the testator leaves the residue of his estate to a trustee of a living trust for purpose of that pour-over trust.

Power of appointment trust. Type of trust used to qualify property for the marital deduction. Property is left in trust for a surviving spouse. The trustee is required to distribute income to the spouse for life and the spouse is given an unqualified power to appoint the property to herself or to her estate.

Precatory trust. Where words employed in a will or other instrument do not amount to a positive command or to a distinct testamentary disposition, but are terms of entreaty, request, recommendation, or expectation, they are termed “precatory words,” and from such words the law will raise a trust, called a “precatory trust,” to carry out the wishes of the testator or grantor.

Private trust. One established or created for the benefit of a certain designated individual or individuals, or a known person or class of persons, clearly identified or capable of identification by the terms of the instrument creating the trust, as distinguished from trusts for public institutions or charitable uses.

Public trust. One constituted for the benefit either of the public at large or of some considerable portion of it answering a particular description; public trusts and charitable trusts may be considered in general as synonymous expressions.

Real estate investment trust (REIT). Type of tax shelter wherein investors purchase certificates of ownership in trust which invests such funds in real estate and then distributes profits to investors.

Reciprocal trust. Trust which one person creates for the benefit of another who in turn creates a trust for the benefit of the first party.

Resulting trust. One that arises by implication of law, or by the operation and construction of equity, and which is established as consonant to the presumed intention of the parties as gathered from the nature of the transaction. It arises where the legal estate in property is disposed of, conveyed, or transferred, but the intent appears or is inferred from the terms of the disposition, or from the accompanying facts and circumstances, that the beneficial interest is not to go or be enjoyed with the legal title.

Revocable trust. A trust in which the settlor reserves the right to revoke.

Savings bank trust. A Totten trust (q.v.).

Secret trusts. Where a testator gives property to a person, on a verbal promise by the legatee or devisee that he will hold it in trust for another person.

Shifting trust. An express trust which is so settled that it may operate in favor of beneficiaries additional to, or substituted for, those first named, upon specified contingencies.

Short term trust. Trust which by its terms is to be administered for a short period of time and then terminated. Such a trust, if properly drawn, may have tax advantages to those in high brackets. See also Clifford trust, supra.

Simple trust. A simple trust corresponds with the ancient use, and arises where property is simply vested in one person for the use of another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settlor, is left to the construction of law. A simple trust is a trust which provides that all of its income is required to be distributed currently, even if it is not in fact distributed, does not provide that any amounts are to be paid, permanently set aside, or used for charitable purposes; and does not distribute any amount other than current income.

Simple trusts are those that are not complex trusts. Such trusts may not have a charitable beneficiary, accumulate income, nor distribute corpus.

Special trust. One in which a trustee is interposed for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and is not, as in case of a simple trust, a mere passive depositary of the estate, but is required to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention; as, where a conveyance is made to trustees upon trust to reconvey, or to sell for the payment of debts.

Special trusts have been divided into (1) ministerial (or instrumental) and (2) discretionary. The former, such as demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; the latter, such as cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment.

Spendthrift trust. See Spendthrift trust.

Split-Interest trust. Type of charitable trust commonly consisting of a life estate to an individual and a remainder to a charity. The Tax Reform Act of 1969 has placed restrictions on this type of trust.

Sprinkling trust. A trust which calls for distribution of income to various beneficiaries at different times, though provision may also be made for accumulation.

Tentative trust. See Totten trust, infra.

Testamentary trust. Trust created within a will and executed with the formalities required of a will in contrast to an inter vivos trust. A trust which does not take effect until the death of the settlor. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trust Act.

Totten trust. A trust created by the deposit by one person of his own money in his own name as a trustee for another and it is a tentative trust revocable at will until the depositor dies or completes the gift in his lifetime by some unequivocal act or declaration such as delivery of the passbook or notice to the beneficiary and if the depositor dies before the beneficiary without revocation or some decisive act or declaration of disaffirmance the presumption arises that an absolute trust was created as to the balance on hand at the death of the depositor.

Transgressive trust. A name sometimes applied to a trust which transgresses or violates the rule against perpetuities.

Trust allotments. Allotments to Indians, in which a certificate or trust patent is issued declaring that the United States will hold the land for a designated period in trust for the allottee. U. S. v. Bowling, 256 U.S. 484, 41 S.Ct. 561, 562, 65 L.Ed. 1054.

Trust certificate. An obligation issued to finance railroad equipment and by which title to the equipment is held by trustees as security for repayment of the money invested.

Trust company. A corporation formed for the purpose of taking, accepting, and executing all such trusts as may be lawfully committed to it, and acting as testamentary trustee, executor, guardian, etc. To these functions are sometimes (but not necessarily) added the business of acting as fiscal agent for corporations, attending to the registration and transfer of their stock and bonds, serving as trustee for their bond or mortgage creditors, and transacting a general banking and loan business. A bank which is authorized to serve in fiduciary capacity as executor, administrator, etc.

Trust deed. The document by which one creates a trust. An indenture by which property is transferred to a trust. May also include a deed from the trustees. In some states, a mortgage deed.

A species of mortgage given to a trustee for the purpose of securing a numerous class of creditors, as the bondholders of a railroad corporation, with power to foreclose and sell on failure of the payment of their bonds, notes, or other claims. In some of the states, a trust deed or deed of trust is a security resembling a mortgage, being a conveyance of lands to trustees to secure the payment of a debt, with a power of sale upon default, and upon a trustee to apply the net proceeds to paying the debt and to turn over the surplus to the grantor.

A trust deed on real estate as security for a bond issue is, in effect, a mortgage on property executed by the mortgagor to a third person as trustee to hold as security for the mortgage debt as evidenced by the bonds, for the benefit of the purchasers of the bonds as lenders.

See also Deed (Deed of trust).

Trust deposit. Where money or property is deposited to be kept intact and not commingled with other funds or property of bank and is to be returned in kind to depositor or devoted to particular purpose or requirement of depositor or payment of particular debts or obligations of depositor. Also called "special deposit". See also Deposit.

Trust estate. This term may mean either the estate of the trustee,—that is, the legal title,—or the estate of the beneficiary, or the corpus of the property which is the subject of the trust.

Trust ex delicto. See Trust ex maleficio, infra.

Trust ex maleficio. A species of constructive trust arising out of some fraud, misconduct, or breach of faith on the part of the person to be charged as trustee, which renders it an equitable necessity that a trust should be implied. See also Constructive trust, supra.

Trust fund. A fund held by a trustee for the specific purposes of the trust; in a more general sense, a fund which, legally or equitably, is subject to be devoted to a particular purpose and cannot or should not be diverted therefrom. In this sense it is often said that the assets of a corporation are a "trust fund" for the payment of its debts. See also Trust fund.

Trust fund doctrine. In substance, where corporation transfers all its assets with a view to going out of business and nothing is left with which to pay debts, transferee is charged with notice of the circumstances of the transaction, and takes the assets subject to an equitable lien for the unpaid debts of the transferring company; the property of a corporation being a fund subject to be first applied to the payment of debts. Meikle v. Export Lumber Co., C.C.A.6, 67 F.2d 301, 304.

Under such doctrine, if insolvent corporation's assets are distributed among its stockholders before its debts are paid, each stockholder is liable to creditors for full amount received by him. Scott v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.8, 117 F.2d 36, 39.

See Common trust fund; Trust fund; Trust fund theory.
Trust in invitum. A constructive trust imposed by equity, contrary to the trustee's intention and will, upon property in his hands.

Trust legacy. See Legacy.

Trust receipt. See Trust receipt.

Unitrust. A unitrust is a trust from which the trustee is required, at least annually, to pay a fixed percentage which is not less than five percent of the net fair market value of the trust assets, valued annually, to one or more beneficiaries, at least one of which is not a charity, for life or for a term of years, with an irrevocable remainder interest to be held for the benefit of, or paid over to, charity. A qualified unitrust is a charity, for life or for a term of years, with an irrevocable remainder interest to be held for the benefit of, or paid over to, charity. A qualified unitrust must comply with the basic statutory requirements of I.R.C. § 664.

Vertical trust. In antitrust law, a combination which gathers together under a single ownership a number of businesses or plants engaged in successive stages of production or marketing.

Voluntary trust. An obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another, as distinguished from an "involuntary" trust, which is created by operation of law. According to another use of the term, "voluntary" trusts are such as are made in favor of a volunteer, that is, a person who gives nothing in exchange for the trust, but receives it as a pure gift; and in this use the term is distinguished from "trusts for value," the latter being such as are in favor of purchasers, mortgagees, etc. A "voluntary trust" is an equitable gift, and in order to be enforceable by the beneficiaries must be complete. The difference between a "gift inter vivos" and a "voluntary trust" is that, in a gift, the thing itself with title passes to the donee, while, in a voluntary trust, the actual title passes to a cestui que trust while the legal title is retained by the settlor, to be held by him for the purposes of the trust or is by the settlor transferred to another to hold for the purposes of the trust.

Voting trust. A trust which holds the voting rights to stock in a corporation. It is a useful device when a majority of the shareholders in a corporation cannot agree on corporate policy. See also Voting trust.

Trustee. Person holding property in trust. The person appointed, or required by law, to execute a trust; one in whom an estate, interest, or power is vested, under an express or implied agreement to administer or exercise it for the benefit or to the use of another called the cestui que trust. Person who holds title to and administers it for others' benefit. Reinecke v. Smith, Ill., 289 U.S. 172, 53 S.Ct. 570, 77 L.Ed. 1109. In a strict sense, a "trustee" is one who holds the legal title to property for the benefit of another, while, in a broad sense, the term is sometimes applied to anyone standing in a fiduciary or confidential relation to another, such as agent, attorney, bailee, etc. See State ex rel. Lee v. Sartorius, 344 Mo. 912, 130 S.W.2d 547, 549, 550.

See also Bare trustee.

Joint trustees. Two or more persons who are intrusted with property for the benefit of one or more others.

Judicial trustee. One appointed by a decree of court to execute a trust, as distinguished from one appointed by the instrument creating the trust.

Testamentary trustee. A trustee appointed by or acting under a will; one appointed to carry out a trust created by a will. The term does not ordinarily include an executor or an administrator with the will annexed, or a guardian, except when they act in the execution of a trust created by the will and which is separable from their functions as executors, etc.

Trustee ad litem. Trustee appointed by a court in contrast to a trustee selected by a settlor or executor.

Trustee de son tort. Person who is treated as a trustee because of his wrongdoing with respect to property entrusted to him or over which he exercised authority which he lacked.

Trustee ex maleficio. A person who, being guilty of wrongful or fraudulent conduct, is held by equity to the duty and liability of a trustee, in relation to the subject-matter, to prevent him from profiting by his own wrong. Trust arising by implication of law from the wrongdoing of a person.

Trustee in bankruptcy. A person in whom the property of a bankrupt is vested in trust for the creditors. See Bankruptcy Act, § 321 et seq.; § 1501 et seq. (United States Trustees).

Trustee process. The name given, in certain New England states, to the process of garnishment or foreign attachment. See Process.

Trust estates as business companies. A practice originating in Massachusetts of vesting a business or certain real estate in a group of trustees, who manage it for the benefit of the beneficial owners; the ownership of the latter is evidenced by negotiable (or transferable) shares. The trustees are elected by the shareholders, or, in case of a vacancy, by the board of trustees. Provision is made in the agreement and declaration of trust to the effect that when new trustees are elected, the trust estate shall vest in them without further conveyance. The declaration of trust specifies the powers of the trustees. They have a common seal; the board is organized with the usual officers of a board of trustees; it is governed by by-laws; the officers have the usual powers of like corporate officers; so far as practicable, the trustees in their collective capacity, are to carry on the business under a specified name. The trustees may also hold shares as beneficiaries. Provision may be made for the alteration or amendment of the agreement or declaration in a specified manner. In Elliot v. Freeman, 220 U.S. 178, 31 S.Ct. 360, 55 L.Ed. 424, it was held that such a trust was not within the corporation tax provisions of the tariff act of Aug. 5, 1909. See also Zonne v. Minneapolis Syndicate, 220 U.S. 187, 31 S.Ct. 361, 55 L.Ed. 428. See also Massachusetts trust.

Trust fund. Money or property set aside as a trust for the benefit of another and held by a trustee. The majority of states have adopted the Uniform Common Trust Fund Act. See also Common trust fund; Trust (Trust fund; Trust fund doctrine); Trust fund theory.
Trust fund theory. Generic term used in many contexts to describe the imposition of fiduciary obligations on persons who control money or property of another under certain circumstances. A creature of equity which operates to treat officers, directors, or majority shareholders of a corporation as holding in trust for the benefit of creditors such corporate assets as have been improperly appropriated. Whisenhunt v. Park Lane Corp., D.C.Tex., 418 F.Supp. 1096, 1098. See also Common trust fund; Trust (Trust fund; Trust fund doctrine).

Trust indenture. The document which contains the terms and conditions which govern the conduct of the trustee and the rights of the beneficiaries. Commonly used when a corporation floats bonds.

Trust Indenture Act. Federal Act (1939) designed to protect investors in certain types of bonds by requiring that the trust indenture include certain protective clauses and exclude certain exculpatory clauses, and that trustees be independent of the issuing company.

Trust instrument. The formal document which creates the trust and contains the powers of the trustees and the rights of the beneficiaries. It may be a deed in trust or a formal declaration of trust. See also Trust (Trust deed).

Trust receipt. A pre-U.C.C. security device now governed by Article 9 of the Code. A receipt stating that the wholesale buyer has possession of the goods for the benefit of the financier. Today there usually must be a security agreement coupled with the filing of a financing statement. Method of financing commercial transactions by means of which title passes directly from manufacturer or seller to bank or lender who as owner delivers goods to dealer in whose behalf he is acting secondarily, and to whom title goes ultimately when primary right of bank or lender has been satisfied. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Bosse, 76 Idaho 409, 283 P.2d 937, 938.

Trust res. The property of which the trust consists. It may be real or personal and the trustee has legal title.

Trust territory. A territory or colony placed under the administration of a country by the United Nations.

Trusty. A prisoner who, because of good conduct, is given some measure of freedom in and around the prison.

Truth. There are three conceptions as to what constitutes “truth”: agreement of thought and reality; eventual verification; and consistency of thought with itself. For “Fact” and “truth” distinguished, see Fact.

Truth-in-Lending Act. The purpose of the Truth-in-Lending Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1601 et seq.) is to assure that every customer who has need for consumer credit is given meaningful information with respect to the cost of that credit. In most cases the credit cost must be expressed in the dollar amount of finance charges, and as an annual percentage rate computed on the unpaid balance of the amount financed. Other relevant credit information must also be disclosed so that the customer may compare the various credit terms available to him from different sources and avoid the uninformed use of credit. The Act further provides a customer the right, in certain circumstances, to cancel a credit transaction which involves a lien on his residence. The Truth in Lending Act was amended in 1970 to regulate the issuance, holder’s liability, and fraudulent use of credit cards. See also Consumer Credit Protection Act; Regulation Z; Uniform Consumer Credit Code.

Try. To examine judicially. To examine and investigate a controversy, by the legal method called “trial,” for the purpose of determining the issues it involves.

Tuchas /tʃuχas/. In Spanish law, objections or exceptions to witnesses.

Tucker Act. The Tucker Act, which was passed in 1887, was a response by Congress to the inadequacies of the original Court of Claims legislation. By this act, the jurisdiction of the court was extended to include claims founded upon the Constitution, act of Congress, or executive department regulation, as well as claims for liquidated or unliquidated damages in cases not sounding in tort, in addition to all claims within the scope of the earlier statutes. The present provisions of the Tucker Act are embodied in 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346(a)(2), 1491.

Tuerto /tuerto/. In Spanish law, tort.

Tullianum /tauliyɔnəm/. Lat. In Roman law, that part of a prison which was under ground. Supposed to be so called from Servius Tullius, who built that part of the first prison in Rome.

Tumbrel /tʌmbriəl/. A castigatory, trebucket, or dunking stool, anciently used as a punishment for common scolds.

Tumultuous petitioning /tʌmilchuəwəs petʃiʃiŋ/. Under English St. 13 Car. II, St. 1, c. 5, this was a misdemeanor, and consisted in more than twenty persons signing any petition to the crown or either house of parliament for the alteration of matters established by law in church or state, unless the Turf and twig. A piece of turf, or a twig or a bough, Turbery /tarbarriy/. Turbery, or common of turbary, is Turba /tarba/. Lat. In the civil law, a multitude; a Tunnage. A duty in England anciently due upon all Tungreve /tiggriyv/. A town-reeve or bailiff. Tun. A measure of wine or oil, containing four hogsheads. Turn, or toum /t$m/. In English law, the great court- Turncoat witness. A witness whose testimony was expected to be favorable but who turns around and becomes an adverse witness. Turned to a right. In English law, this phrase means that a person whose estate is divested by usurpation cannot expel the possessor by mere entry, but must have recourse to an action, either possessory or drotural.

Turning State's evidence. See State's evidence.

Turnkey. A person, under the superintendence of a jailer, who has the charge of the keys of the prison, for the purpose of opening and fastening the doors.

Turn-key contract. Term used in building trade to designate those contracts in which builder agrees to complete work of building and installation to point of readiness for occupancy. It ordinarily means that builder will complete work to certain specified point, such as building a complete house ready for occupancy as a dwelling, and that builder agrees to assume all risk.

In oil drilling industry a job wherein driller of oil well undertakes to furnish everything and does all work required to complete well, place it on production, and turn it over ready to turn the key and start oil running into tanks. Retsal Drilling Co. v. Commission of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Tex., 127 F.2d 355, 357. A turn-key contract to drill a well involves the testing of the formation contemplated by the parties and completion of a producing well or its abandonment as a dry hole, all done for an agreed-upon total consideration, putting the risk of rising costs, well trouble, weather, and the like upon the driller, but it does not, in the absence of a clear expression, require the driller to guarantee a producing well. Totah Drilling Co. v. Abraham, 64 N.M. 380, 328 P.2d 1083, 1091.

Turntable doctrine. Also termed “attractive nuisance” doctrine. This doctrine requires the owner of premises not to attract or lure children into unsuspected danger or great bodily harm, by keeping thereon attractive machinery or dangerous instrumentalities in an exposed and unguarded condition, and where injuries have been received by a child so enticed the entry is not regarded as unlawful, and does not necessarily preclude a recovery of damages; the attractiveness of the machine or structure amounting to an implied invitation to enter. It imposes a liability on a property owner for injuries to a child of tender years, resulting from something on his premises that can be operated by such a child and made dangerous by him, and which is attractive to him and calculated to induce him to use it, where he fails to protect the thing so that a child of tender years cannot be hurt by it.

Doctrine is that who maintains or creates upon his premises or upon the premises of another in any public place an instrumentality or condition which may reasonably be expected to attract children of tender years and to constitute a danger to them is under duty to take the precautions that a reasonably prudent person would take under similar circumstance, to prevent injury to such children. Schock v. Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows, 5 Wash.2d 599, 105 P.2d 838, 843.

The dangerous and alluring qualities of a railroad turntable gave the “attractive nuisance rule” the name of “Turntable Doctrine.” Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 292 Ky. 120, 166 S.W.2d 43, 46.

See also Attractive nuisance doctrine.

Turpis /tirpas/. Lat. In the civil law, base; vile; disgraceful; infamous; unlawful. Applied both to things and persons.

Turpis causa /tirpas koza/. A base cause; a vile or immoral consideration; a consideration which, on account of its immorality, is not allowed by law to be sufficient either to support a contract or found an action; e.g., future illicit intercourse.

Turpis contractus /tirpas kantrekteksa/. An immoral or iniquitous contract.

Turpis est pars que non convenit cum suo toto /tirpas est parz kwiy n`on konvijnat kim syjydow t`owdow/. The part which does not agree with its whole is of mean account [entitled to small or no consideration].

Turpitudo /tirpoty`owd/. In its ordinary sense, inherent baseness or vileness of principle or action; shameful wickedness; depravity. In its legal sense, everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals. An action showing gross depravity. Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Russell, Tex.Civ. App., 99 S.W.2d 1079, 1084.

Turpitudo. A term of frequent occurrence in statutes, especially those providing that a witness’ conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude may be shown as tending to impeach his credibility. In general, it means neither more nor less than “turpitude," i.e., anything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals. It is also commonly defined as an act of baseness, vileness, or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellow man or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man.

Although a vague term, it implies something immoral in itself, regardless of its being punishable by law. Thus excluding unintentional wrong, or an improper act done without unlawful or improper intent. It is also said to be restricted to the gravest offenses, consisting of felonies, infamous crimes, and those that are malum in se and disclose a depraved mind. Bartos v. United States District Court for District of Nebraska, C.C.A.Neb., 19 F.2d 722, 724.

Tutuludo /turpat(y)uwdow/. Lat. Baseness; infamy; immorality; turpitude.

Tuta est custodia que sibimet creditur /t(y)uwda est turpitudo /tarpat(y)uwdow/. Lat. Baseness; infamy; immorality; turpitude.

Tutela/t(y)uwtiyliy®ksh(i)yow/. Lat. Legal tutelage; tutorship by nature. Upon the death of either parent, the tutorship of minor children belongs of right to the father or mother dying last. This is called "tutela testamentaria," because not a free person, caput liberum.

Tutela legítima/t(y)uwtiylyalajidama/. Legal tutelage; tutelage created by act of law, as where none had been created by testament.

Tutelam reddere/t(y)uwtiylym rédarya/. Lat. In the civil law, to render an account of tutelage. Tutelam reposcere, to demand an account of tutelage.

Tutela testamentaria/t(y)uwtiylytéstamentéri(y)ow/. Testamentary tutelage or guardianship; that kind of tutelage which was created by will.

Tuteur. In French law, a kind of guardian.

Tuteur officieux. A person over fifty years of age may be appointed a tutor of this sort to a child over fifteen years of age, with the consent of the parents of such child, or, in their default, the conseil de famille. The duties which such a tutor becomes subject to are analogous to those in English law of a person who puts himself in loco parentis to any one.

Tuteur subrogé. The title of a second guardian appointed for an infant under guardianship. His functions are exercised in case the interests of the infant and his principal guardian conflict.

Tutitus semper est errare acuñetando, quam in puniendo, ex parte misericordie quam ex parte justitie/t(y)uwsh(i)yoséméprr ékréydyar èks párdey mishiyory/. It is safer to err on the gentler side [or on the side of mercy].

In the civil law, this term corresponds nearly to "guardian" (i.e., a person appointed to have the care of the person of a minor and the administration of his estate), except that the guardian of a minor who has passed a certain age is called "curator," and has powers and duties differing somewhat from those of a tutor.

Tutor allenus /t(y)uwdar gyliyiynas/. In English law, the name given to a stranger who enters upon the lands of an infant within the age of fourteen, and takes the profits. He may be called to an account by the infant and be charged as guardian in socage.

Tutor proprius/t(y)uwdar prôwpriyas/. The name given to a stranger who enters upon the lands of an infant and is charged with the profits, as a guardian in socage.

Tutorship. The office and power of a tutor. The power which an individual, sui juris, has to take care of the person of one who is unable to take care of himself. There are four sorts of tutorships: Tutorship by nature; tutorship by will; tutorship by the effect of the law; tutorship by the appointment of the judge. Civ. Code La. art. 247.

Tutorship by nature. Upon the death of either parent, the tutorship of minor children belongs of right to the other. Upon divorce or judicial separation from bed and board of parents, the tutorship of each minor child belongs of right to the parent under whose care he or she has been placed or to whose care he or she has been entrusted. All those cases are called tutorship by nature. Civ.Code La. art. 250.

Tutorship by will. The right of appointing a tutor, whether a relation or a stranger, belongs exclusively to the father or mother dying last. This is called "tutorship by will," because generally it is given by testament; but it may likewise be given by any declaration by the surviving father or mother, or the parent who is the curator of the other spouse, executed before a notary and two witnesses. Civ.Code La. art. 257.

Tutrix/t(y)uwrtrikys/. A female tutor.

T.V.A. Tennessee Valley Authority.

Twa night gest/túwnayt gést/. In Saxon law, a guest on the second night. By the laws of Edward the Confessor it was provided that a man who lodged at an inn, or at the house of another, should be considered, on the first night of his being there, a stranger (uncouth); on the second night, a guest; on the third night, a member of the family. This had reference to the responsibility of the host or entertainer for offenses committed by the guest.
Twelfhindl. The highest rank of men in the Saxon government, who were valued at 1200s. If any injury were done to such persons, satisfaction was to be made according to their worth.

Twelfth Amendment. Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (1804) which altered the method of voting in presidential elections by requiring each elector to vote for President and Vice President on separate ballots instead of voting for two persons for President on single ballot as before.

Twelve-day writ. A writ issued under the English St. 18 & 19 Vict., c. 67, for summary procedure on bills of exchange and promissory notes, abolished by rule of court in 1880.

Twelvemonth /ˈtwɛlvmʌnθ/. This term (in the singular number), includes all the year; but twelve months are to be computed according to twenty-eight days for every month.

Twelve-month bond. Twelve-month bond, under statute effective Jan. 20, 1837 (Hartley's Dig. art. 1277), had a double character, first as an obligation known to the Spanish civil law, and second, as a summary statutory judgment, with the force and effect of any other judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; it being also a consent judgment.

Twelve Tables. The earliest statute or code of Roman law, framed by a commission of ten men, B.C. 450, upon the return of a commission of three who had been sent abroad to study foreign laws and institutions. The Twelve Tables consisted partly of laws transcribed from the institutions of other nations, partly of such as were altered and accommodated to the manners of the Romans, partly of new provisions, and mainly, perhaps, of laws and usages under their ancient kings. They formed the source and foundation for the whole later development of Roman jurisprudence. They exist now only in fragmentary form. See 1 Kent Comm. 520. These laws were substantially a codification, and not merely an incorporation, of the customary law of the people. There were Greek elements in them, but still they were essentially Roman.

Twenty-first Amendment. The so-called Prohibition Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (1933) which repealed the Eighteenth Amendment. See Twenty-First Amendment.

Twenty-Fourth Amendment. Amendment to the Constitution (1964) which prohibits federal or State denial of right to vote in any primary or other election for federal elective officers because of the prospective voter's failure to pay any poll tax or other tax. See Poll-tax.

Twenty-Second Amendment. Amendment to the Constitution (1951) which prevents any person from being elected President more than twice, or, if he has succeeded to the Presidency before the midpoint of his predecessor's term, from being elected more than once.

Twenty-Sixth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution (1971) which established voting age at 18.

Tyburn ticket /ˈtɔːbərn ˈtɪkt/. In Old English law, a certificate which was given to the executor of a felon to conviction. By the 10 & 11 Will. III, c. 23, the original propietor or first assignee of such certificate is exempted from all parish and ward offices within the parish or ward where the felony was committed.

Tying. A term which, as used in a contract of lease of the original proprietor or first assignee of such certificate which was given to the prosecutor of a felon to conviction. By the 10 & 11 Will. III, c. 23, the original propietor or first assignee of such certificate is exempted from all parish and ward offices within the parish or ward where the felony was committed.

Tying arrangement. Such exists when a person agrees to sell one product, the "tying product," only on the... condition that the vendee also purchase another product, the "tied product." Northern v. McGraw-Edison Co., C.A.Mo., 542 F.2d 1336, 1344. See also Tie-in arrangement; Tied product.

Ultimate. At last, finally, or at the end. The last in the train of progression or sequence tended toward by all that precedes; arrived at as the last result; final. Texas Employers Ins. Ass'n v. Reed, Tex.Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 858, 862.

Those facts found in that vaguely defined field lying between evidential facts on the one side and the primary issue or conclusion of law on the other, being but the logical results of the proofs, or, in other words, mere conclusions of fact. Christmas v. Cowden, 44 N.M. 517, 105 P.2d 484, 487.

One that is essential to the right of action or matter of defense, and the trial court is under the duty of submitting only ultimate or controlling issues. Peales v. Braslau's Furniture Co., Tex.Civ.App., 493 S.W.2d 638, 640.

Ultimate issue. That question which must finally be answered as the defendant's negligence is the ultimate issue in a personal injury action.

Ulpimatum /áltamamdyam/. Lat. The last. The final and ultimate proposition made in negotiating a treaty, a contract, or the like. The word also means the result of a negotiation, and it comprises the final determination of a party concerned in the matter in dispute.

Ulpima voluntas testatoris est perlmpenda secundum veram intentionem suam /áltamas wélam yswam est pəmpimyndə səkəndəm wərm inshənshiyə nuanced mə(y)əwəm/. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Ultimam supplecium /áltamam splislyam/. Lat. The last or extreme punishment; the extremity of punishment; the punishment of death. 4 Bl.Civ. App. 17.

Ultimam supplecium esse mortem solam interpretamur /áltamas splislyam ə蛋ə morədəm əwəlam enəkəpətyəmər/. The extremest punishment we consider to be death alone.

Ultimus hæres /áltamə hɪərɪz/. Lat. The last or remote heir; the lord. So called in contradistinction to the hæres proximus and the hæres remotor.

Ultima /ältə/ . Lat. Beyond; outside of; in excess of. Damages ultra. Damages beyond a sum paid into court.

Ultra mare /ältə mərɪjə/ . Beyond sea. One of the old essoins or excuses for not appearing in court at the return of process.

Ultra reprises. After deduction of drawbacks; in excess of deductions or expenses.

Ultra vires /ältə vəriəs/. Acts beyond the scope of the powers of a corporation, as defined by its charter or laws of state of incorporation. State ex rel. v. Holston Trust Co., 168 Tenn. 546, 79 S.W.2d 1012, 1016. The term has a broad application and includes not only acts prohibited by the charter, but acts which are in excess of powers granted and not prohibited, and generally applied either when a corporation has no power whatever to do an act, or when the corporation has the power but exercises it irregularly. People ex rel. Barrett v. Bank of Peoria, 295 Ill.App. 543, 15 N.E.2d 333, 335. Act is ultra vires when corporation is without authority to perform it under any circumstances or for any purpose. By doctrine of ultra vires a contract made by a corporation beyond the scope of its corporate powers is unlawful. Community Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n of Independent, Mo. v. Fields, C.C.A.Mo., 128 F.2d 705, 708. Ultra vires act of municipality is one which is beyond powers conferred upon it by law. Charles v. Town of Jeanerette, Inc., La.App., 234 So.2d 794, 798.

Ultra posse non potest esse, et vice versa /ältə pəsə nən ˈpəstəs əsə, et vɪsə vərsə/ . What is beyond possibility cannot exist, and the reverse [what cannot exist is not possible].

Umpirage /əmərəy/. The decision of an umpire. The word "Umpirage," in reference to an umpire, is the same as the word "award," in reference to arbitrators; but "award" is commonly applied to the decision of the umpire also.

Umpire /əməpə(ə)/. Third party selected to arbitrate labor dispute. One clothed with authority to act alone in rendering a decision where arbitrators have disagreed. Hughes v. National Fuel Co., 121 W.Va. 392, 3 S.E.2d 621, 626. When matters in dispute are submitted to two or more arbitrators, and they do not agree in their decision, it is usual for another person to be called in as "umpire," to whose sole judgment it is then referred. An umpire, strictly speaking, makes his award independently of that of the arbitrators.

Un-. A prefix used indiscriminately, and may mean simply "not." Thus, "unlawful" means "not authorized by law."

Unable /ənəˈbəl/. This term, as used in a statute providing that evidence given in a former trial may be proved in a subsequent trial, where the witness is unable to testify, means mentally and physically unable.

Unaccrued /ənəkrəʊd/. Not become due, as rent on a lease.
Unavailability. In law of evidence, on a showing that a witness is unavailable, the government need not prove the defendant’s wrongdoing.

Unauthorized. That which is done without authority, as a signature or indorsement made without actual, implied or apparent authority and this includes an unauthorized use of a motor vehicle without authority of the owner, knowing that such use is without his permission. It differs from larceny to the extent that in the crime of unauthorized use, the government need not prove the intent to deprive permanently the owner of the vehicle.

Unascertained. Payment in gross, on an estimate as to amount, and where the merchant, on a final liquidation, will be entitled by law to allowances or deductions which do not depend on the rate of duty charged, but on the ascertainment of the quantity of the article subject to duty.

Unauthorized. That which is done without authority, as a signature or indorsement made without actual, implied or apparent authority and this includes a forgery. U.C.C. § 1-201(43).

Unascertained duties. Payment in gross, on an estimate as to amount, and where the merchant, on a final liquidation, will be entitled by law to allowances or deductions which do not depend on the rate of duty charged, but on the ascertainment of the quantity of the article subject to duty.

Unauthorized. That which is done without authority, as a signature or indorsement made without actual, implied or apparent authority and this includes a forgery. U.C.C. § 1-201(43).

Unauthorized use. The criminal offense of use of a motor vehicle without authority of the owner, knowing that such use is without his permission. It differs from larceny to the extent that in the crime of unauthorized use, the government need not prove the intent to deprive permanently the owner of the vehicle.

Unavailability. In law of evidence, on a showing that a witness or his testimony is not available, prior reported testimony of that witness which can be faithfully reproduced is admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. A witness is unavailable if he is dead, insane or beyond reach of a summons. His testimony is unavailable if he has a privilege permitting him to refuse to testify. See Fed.Evid.R. 804.

Unavailability as defined in rule providing for admission of prior testimony, requires, among other things, either that the witness be beyond the jurisdiction of the court’s process to compel his appearance, or that the proponent of the prior statement be unable, despite due diligence, to obtain the attendance of the witness. Sacawa v. Polikoff, 150 N.J.Super. 172, 375 A.2d 279, 283.

Una voce /yuwna vówisy/. Lat. With one voice; unanimously; without dissent.

Inability. Rights which can never be abridged because they are so fundamental.

Unanimity /yuwnaninwdiy/. Agreement of all the persons concerned, in holding one and the same opinion or determination of any matter or question; as the concurrence of a jury in deciding upon their verdict or of judges in concurring in their decision. See Unanimous.

Unanimous /yananamas/. To say that a proposition was adopted by a "unanimous" vote does not always mean that every one present voted for the proposition, but it may, and generally does, mean, when a viva voce vote is taken, that no one voted in the negative. See also Unanimity.

Una persona vix potest suppleire vices duarum /yuwna parsówna viks pówdast sapýriy váysízy d(y)uwéram/. One person can scarcely supply the place of two.

Unascertained duties. Payment in gross, on an estimate as to amount, and where the merchant, on a final liquidation, will be entitled by law to allowances or deductions which do not depend on the rate of duty charged, but on the ascertainment of the quantity of the article subject to duty.

Unauthorized. That which is done without authority, as a signature or indorsement made without actual, implied or apparent authority and this includes a forgery. U.C.C. § 1-201(43).

Unauthorized use. The criminal offense of use of a motor vehicle without authority of the owner, knowing that such use is without his permission. It differs from larceny to the extent that in the crime of unauthorized use, the government need not prove the intent to deprive permanently the owner of the vehicle.

Unavailability. In law of evidence, on a showing that a witness or his testimony is not available, prior reported testimony of that witness which can be faithfully reproduced is admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. A witness is unavailable if he is dead, insane or beyond reach of a summons. His testimony is unavailable if he has a privilege permitting him to refuse to testify. See Fed.Evid.R. 804.

Unavailability as defined in rule providing for admission of prior testimony, requires, among other things, either that the witness be beyond the jurisdiction of the court’s process to compel his appearance, or that the proponent of the prior statement be unable, despite due diligence, to obtain the attendance of the witness. Sacawa v. Polikoff, 150 N.J.Super. 172, 375 A.2d 279, 283.

Una voce /yuwna vówisy/. Lat. With one voice; unanimously; without dissent.

Unavoidable. Not avoidable, incapable of being shunned or prevented, inevitable, and necessary.

Unavoidable accident. An inevitable accident; one which could not have been foreseen and prevented by using ordinary diligence, and resulting without fault. Not necessarily an accident which it was physically impossible, in the nature of things, for the person to have prevented, but one not occasioned in any degree, either remotely or directly, by the want of such care or skill as the law holds every man bound to exercise. An accident which could not be prevented by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence. A casualty which occurs without negligence of either party and when all means which common prudence suggests have been used to prevent it. See also Accident; Act of God.

Unavoidable casualty. An event or accident which human prudence, foresight, and sagacity cannot prevent, happening against will and without negligence. Sabin v. Sunset Garden Co., 184 Okl. 106, 85 P.2d 294, 295. Within the meaning of statutes in several states relating to the vacation of judgments, means some casualty or misfortune growing out of conditions or circumstances that prevented the party or his attorney from doing something that, except thereof, would have been done, and does not include mistakes or errors of judgment growing out of misconstruction or understanding of the law, or the failure of parties or counsel through mistake to avail themselves of remedies, which if resorted to would have prevented the casualty or misfortune. If by any care, prudence, or foresight a thing could have been guarded against, it is not unavoidable. The term is not ordinarily limited to an act of God. See also Accident; Act of God: Unavoidable accident.

Unavoidable cause. A cause which reasonably prudent and careful men under like circumstances do not and would not ordinarily anticipate, and whose effects, under similar circumstances, they do not and would not ordinarily avoid.

Unavoidable dangers. This term in a marine policy covering unavoidable dangers of the river includes those unpreventable by persons operating the vessel, and, like the term perils of the sea, includes all kinds of marine casualties, thus including accidents in which there is human intervention.

Unborn beneficiaries. Those persons named in a general way as sharing in an estate or gift though not yet born. Commonly, a court appoints a guardian ad litem to protect and to represent their interests.

Unborn child. The individual human life in existence and developing from fertilization until birth.

A child not yet born at the happening of an event. A child not born at the time of an injury to his mother which causes the child to suffer an injury may recover in most jurisdictions after birth if the child were viable in his mother’s womb at the time of the defendant’s wrongdoing.

See also Child; Viable child.

Unbroken. Continuous, as adverse possession.

Unceasesath. In Saxo law, an oath by relations not to avenge a relation’s death.
Uncertainty. The state or quality of being unknown or vague. Such vagueness, obscurity, or confusion in any written instrument, e.g., a will, as to render it unintelligible to those who are called upon to execute or interpret it, so that no definite meaning can be extracted from it.

Unchastity. Impurity in mind and conduct, which may exist without actually engaging in unlawful sexual intercourse.

Uncia /ánšh(í)yá/ . Lat. In Roman law, an ounce; the twelfth of the Roman "as," or pound. The twelfth part of anything; the proportion of one-twelfth. 2 Bl.Comm. 462, note m.

Uncia agri, uncia terre /ánsh(í)yá ágray, ánsh(í)yá téhríy/. These phrases often occur in the charters of the British kings, and signify some measure or quantity of land. It is said to have been the quantity of twelve modii; each modius being possibly one hundred feet square.

Unciarius hæres /ánshýéríyás híríy/. Lat. In Roman law, an heir to one-twelfth of an estate or inheritance.

Uncle. The brother of one's father or mother.

Unclean hands doctrine. Principle that one who has unclean hands is not entitled to relief in equity. Doctrine means no more than that one who has defrauded his adversary in the subject matter of the action will not be heard to assert right in equity. The doctrine has no application unless party's wrongdoing has some proximate relation to the subject matter in controversy.

Unconditional. Not limited or affected by any condition;—applied especially to the quality of an insured's estate in the property insured. See Owner (Sole and unconditional owner).

Unconditional discharge. One whose term of confinement has expired is unconditionally discharged if there are attached no parole provisions to his release. A release from liability without any terms or delimiting conditions attached.

Unconscionability. Basic test of "unconscionability" of contract is whether under circumstances existing at time of making of contract and in light of general commercial background and commercial needs of particular trade or case, clauses involved are so one-sided as to oppress or unfairly surprise party. Division of Triple T Service, Inc. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 60 Misc.2d 720, 304 N.Y.S.2d 191, 201. Unconscionability is generally recognized to include an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, to a contract together with contract terms which are unreasonably favorable to the other party. Gordon v. Crown Central Petroleum Corp., D.C.Ga., 423 F.Supp. 58, 61.

Typically the cases in which unconscionability is found involve gross overall one-sidedness or gross one-sidedness of a term disclaiming a warranty, limiting damages, or granting procedural advantages. In these cases one-sidedness is often coupled with the fact that the imbalance is buried in small print and often couched in language unintelligible to even a person of moderate education. Often the seller deals with a particularly susceptible clientele. Kugler v. Romain, 58 N.J. 522, 279 A.2d 640.

Uniform Commercial Code. (1) If the court as a matter of law finds the contract or any clause of the contract to have been unconscionable at the time it was made the court may refuse to enforce the contract, or it may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable clause, or it may so limit the application of any unconscionable clause as to avoid any unconscionable result. (2) When it is claimed or appears to the court that the contract or any clause thereof may be unconscionable the parties shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity to present evidence as to its commercial setting, purpose and effect to aid the court in making the determination. U.C.C. § 2–302.

Section 2–302 should be considered in conjunction with the obligation of good faith imposed at several places in the Code. See e.g. U.C.C. § 1–203.

Restatement of Contracts. If a contract or term thereof is unconscionable at the time the contract is made a court may refuse to enforce the contract, or may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable term, or may so limit the application of any unconscionable term as to avoid any unconscionable result. Restatement of Contracts, Second, (Tent.Draft) § 294.

Unconscionable bargain. An unconscionable bargain or contract is one which no man in his senses, not under delusion, would make, on the one hand, and which no fair and honest man would accept, on the other. Hume v. U. S., 132 U.S. 406, 10 S.Ct. 134, 33 L.Ed. 393. See also Unconscionability.

Unconscious. Not possessed of mind. Wilson v. Ray, 64 Ga.App. 540, 13 S.E.2d 848, 852. A state of mind of persons of sound mind suffering from some voluntary or involuntary agency rendering them unaware of their acts. Greenfield v. Com., 214 Va. 710, 204 S.E.2d 414, 417. Insensible to the reception of any stimuli and incapable of performing or experiencing any controlled functions. One who engages in what would otherwise be criminal conduct is not guilty of a crime if he does so in a state of unconsciousness. See e.g. Calif. Penal Code § 26(5). See also Automatism.

Unconstitutional. That which is contrary to the constitution. The opposite of “constitutional.” Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178.

This word is used in two different senses. One, which may be called the English sense, is that the legislation conflicts with some recognized general principle. This is no more than to say that it is unwise, or is based upon a wrong or unsound principle, or conflicts with a generally accepted policy. The other, which may be called the American sense, is that the legislation conflicts with some provision of our written Constitution, which it is beyond the power of the Legislature to change. U. S. v. American Brewing Co., D.C.Pa., 1 F.2d 1001, 1002.

Uncontrollable. Incapable of being controlled or ungovernable.
UNCONTROLLABLE IMPULSE

Uncontrollable impulse. As an excuse for the commission of an act otherwise criminal, this term means an impulse towards its commission of such fixity and intensity that it cannot be resisted by the person subject to it, in the enfeebled condition of his will and moral sense resulting from derangement or mania. See Insanity.

Uncore prist /ˈʌnkɔr prɪst/. L. Fr. Still ready. A species of plea or replication by which the party alleges that he is still ready to pay or perform all that is justly demanded of him. In conjunction with the phrase “tutum temps prist,” it signifies that he has always been and still is ready to do what is required, thus saving costs where the whole cause is admitted, or preventing delay where it is a replication, if the allegation is made out. 3 Bl.Comm. 303.

Uncuth /ˈʌŋkwuːθ/. In Saxon law, unknown; a stranger. A person entertained in the house of another was, on the first night of his entertainment, so called. See Twa night gest.

Unde nihil habet /ˈʌndɪ liː nɪl ˈhæbɨt/. Lat. In old English law, the name of the writ of dower, which lay for a widow, where no dower at all had been assigned her within the time limited by law. 3 Bl.Comm. 183.

Under. Sometimes used in its literal sense of below in position, beneath, but more frequently in its secondary meaning of “inferior” or “subordinate.” Also according to; as, “under the testimony.”

Under and subject. Words frequently used in conveyances of land which is subject to a mortgage, to show that the grantee takes subject to such mortgage.

Under-chamberlains of the exchequer. In old English law, two officers who cleaved the tallies written by the clerk of the tallies, and read the same, that the clerk of the pell and comptrollers thereof might see their entries were true. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of Domesday Book. The office is now abolished.

Under color of law. See Color of law.

Under control. This phrase does not necessarily mean the ability to stop instanter under any and all circumstances, an automobile being “under control” within the meaning of the law if it is moving at such a rate, and the mechanism and power under such control, that it can be brought to a stop with a reasonable degree of celerity. And motorist is only bound to use that degree of care, caution, and prudence that an ordinarily careful, cautious, and prudent man would have used at the time under same or similar circumstances in operation of said automobile. In general, as applied to street cars or railroad trains, the term denotes the control and preparation appropriate to probable emergencies. It is such control as will enable a train to be stopped promptly if need should arise. It implies the ability to stop within the distance the track is seen to be clear. See also Control; Lookout.

Undercover agent. A person who works as an agent without disclosing his role as an agent. In police work, one who makes contact with suspected criminals without disclosing his role as an agent of the police. He gathers evidence of criminal activity which may later be used at trial of the criminals. Such agents are commonly used in narcotic investigations.

Undercurrent or underflow of surface stream. Those waters which slowly find their way through sand and gravel constituting bed of a stream, or lands under or immediately adjacent to stream, and are themselves part of surface stream. Maricopa County Municipal Water Conservation Dist. No. 1 v. Southwest Cotton Co., 39 Ariz. 65, 4 P.2d 369, 380.

Underflow. See Undercurrent.

Underground waters. See Water (Subterranean waters).

Under herd. A term conveying the idea that a considerable number of domestic animals are gathered together and held together by herders in constant attendance and in control of their movements from place to place on a public range or within certain areas.

Under insurance. Insurance coverage in an amount less than the value of the property insured or less than the risk exposure.

Under-lease. Where lessee lets premises for less time than period of his unexpired term; a sub-lease. Also the transfer of a part only of the lands, though for the whole term.

Under protest. A payment made or an act done under compulsion while the payor or actor asserts that he waives no rights by making the payment or by doing the act. See Protest.

Under-sheriff. An officer who acts directly under the sheriff, and performs all the duties of the sheriff's office, a few only excepted where the personal presence of the high-sheriff is necessary. See Delfelder v. Teton Land and Investment Co., 46 Wyo. 142, 24 P.2d 702.

A sheriff's deputy, who, being designated by the sheriff as an “under sheriff,” becomes his chief deputy with authority by virtue of his appointment to execute all the ordinary duties of the office of sheriff. A distinction is sometimes made between this officer and a deputy, the latter being appointed for a special occasion or purpose, while the former discharges, in general, all the duties required by the sheriff's office.

Undersigned, the. The person whose name is signed or the persons whose names are signed at the end of a document; the subscriber or subscribers.

Understand. To know; to apprehend the meaning; to appreciate; as, to understand the nature and effect of an act. International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Pence, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 206, 210. To have a full and clear knowledge of; to comprehend. Thus, to invalidate a deed on the ground that the grantor did not understand the nature of the act, the grantor must be incapable of comprehending that the effect of the act would divest him of the title to the land set forth in the deed. As used in connection with the execution of wills and other instruments, the term includes the realization of the practical effects and consequences of the proposed act. See Capacity.
Undertaking. In the law of contracts, an agreement. An implied agreement resulting from the express terms of another agreement, whether written or oral. An informal agreement, or a concurrence as to its terms. A valid contract engagement of a somewhat informal character. This is a loose and ambiguous term, unless it be accompanied by some expression to show that it constituted a meeting of the minds of parties upon something respecting which they intended to be bound. See Agreement; Contract.

Understood. The phrase "it is understood," when employed as a word of contract in a written agreement, has the same general force as the words "it is agreed."

Undertake. To take on oneself; to engage in; to enter upon; to take in hand; set about; attempt; as, to undertake a task or a journey; and, specifically, to set in operation or bring into execution. To perform or to execute; to covenant; to contract. Hence, to guarantee; be surety for; promise; to accept or take over as a charge; to accept responsibility for the care of. To engage to look after or attend to, to perform or try; to promise, engage, agree, or assume an obligation.

Undertaker. One who undertakes (to do something). In a mechanic's lien statute, the word has been held not to include a mere furnisher of material in connection with the erection of the building. One whose business is to prepare the dead for burial and to take the charge and management of funerals.

Undertaking. A promise, engagement, or stipulation. An engagement by one of the parties to a contract to the other, as distinguished from the mutual engagement of the parties to each other. It does not necessarily imply a consideration. In a somewhat special sense, a promise given in the course of legal proceedings by a party or his counsel, generally as a condition to obtaining some concession from the court or the opposite party. A promise or security in any form. See Stipulation.

Under-tenant. A tenant under one who is himself a tenant; one who holds by under-lease. See also Under-lease.

Under the influence of intoxicating liquor. Phrase as used in statutes or ordinances prohibiting the operation of motor vehicle by a party under the influence of intoxicating liquor covers not only all well-known intoxication but any abnormal mental or physical condition which is the result of indulging in any degree in intoxicating liquors, and which tends to deprive one of that clearness of intellect and control of himself which he would otherwise possess. Any condition where intoxicating liquor has so far affected the nervous system, brain or muscles of the driver as to impair, to an appreciable degree, his ability to operate his automobile in the manner that an ordinary, prudent and cautious man, in full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care, would operate or drive under like conditions. Luellen v. State, 64 Okl.Cr. 382, 81 P.2d 323, 328. See also Intoxication.

Undertook. Agreed; promised; assumed. This is the technical word to be used in alleging the promise which forms the basis of an action of assumpsit.

Under-treasurer of England. He who transacted the business of the lord high treasurer.

Under-tutor. In Louisiana, in every tutorship there shall be an under-tutor, whom it shall be the duty of the judge to appoint at the time letters of tutorship are certified for the tutor. It is the duty of the under-tutor to act for the minor whenever the interest of the minor is in opposition to the interest of the tutor. Civ.Code La. Art. 273.

Underwrite. To insure life or property. To agree to sell bonds, etc., to the public, or to furnish the necessary money for such securities, and to buy those which cannot be sold. An underwriting contract, aside from its use in insurance, is an agreement, made before corporate shares are brought before the public, that in the event of the public not taking all the shares of the number mentioned in the agreement, the underwriter will take the shares which the public do not take; "underwriting" being a purchase, together with a guaranty of a sale of the bonds. Hackett, Hoff and Thiermann, C.C.A.Wis., 70 F.2d 815, 819. See also Underwriter.

Underwriter. Any person, banker, or syndicate that guarantees to furnish a definite sum of money by a definite date to a business or government in return for an issue of bonds or stock. In insurance, the one assuming a risk in return for the payment of a premium.

One who agrees to purchase an entire security issue for a specified price, usually for resale to others. A person who has acquired securities from an issuer or control person, pursuant to contract or exchange and intends to reoffer or resell said securities to the public.

Term refers to any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in any such undertaking, or participates or has a participation in the direct or indirect underwriting of any such undertaking, but such term shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributor's or seller's commission. Investment Company Act, § 2.

See also Underwrite.

Undisclosed agency. Exists where agent deals with a third person without notifying that person of the agency.

Undisclosed principal. If, at time of transaction conducted by agent, other party thereto has no notice that agent is acting for a principal, the principal is "undisclosed principal."

Undisputed. Not questioned or challenged; uncontested.

Undisputed fact. An admitted fact, which the court has not deemed sufficiently material to add to the finding, or has inadvertently omitted from it; a fact not found by the court does not become an "undisputed fact," merely because one or more witnesses testify to it without direct contradiction.

Undistributed profits. See Undivided profits.

Undistributed profits tax. Tax imposed on the unreasonable accumulation of profits by a corporation which has sufficient surplus for expansion and other needs beyond the amount which it could but does not pay out in dividends. I.R.C. § 535.

“Surplus” and “undivided profits,” as commonly employed in corporate accounting, denote an excess in the aggregate value of the assets of the corporation over the sum of liabilities, including capital stock; “surplus” describing such part of the excess in the value of the corporate assets as is treated by the corporation as part of the permanent capital, while the term “undivided profits” designates such part of the excess as consists of profits neither distributed as dividends nor carried to the surplus account. Will-

Undivided right. An undivided right or title, or a title to an undivided portion of an estate, is that owned by one of two or more tenants in common or joint tenants before partition. Held by the same title by two or more persons, whether their rights are equal as to value or quantity, or unequal.

Undress /ˈʌndərɛs/. In old English law, minors or persons under age not capable of bearing arms.

Undue. More than necessary; not proper; illegal. It denotes something wrong, according to the standard of morals which the law enforces in relations of men, and in fact illegal, and qualifies the purpose with which influence is exercised or result which it accomplishes. Morris v. Morris, 192 Miss. 518, 6 So.2d 311, 312.

Undue Influence. Any improper or wrongful constraint, machination, or urgency of persuasion whereby the will of a person is overpowered and he is induced to do or forbear an act which he would not do or would do if left to act freely. Influence which deprives person influenced of free agency or destroys freedom of his will and renders it more the will of another than his own. Misuse of position of confidence or taking advantage of a person’s weakness, infirmity, or distress to change improperly that person’s actions or decisions.

Term refers to conduct by which a person, through his power over mind of testator, makes the latter’s desires conform to his own, thereby overmastering the volition of the testator. Parrisella v. Fotopulos, 111 Ariz. 4, 522 P.2d 1081, 1083. For purpose of executing instruments, such exists when there was such dominion and control exercised over mind of person executing such instruments, under facts and circumstances then existing, as to overcome his free agency and free will and to substitute will of another so as to cause him to do what he would not otherwise have done but for such dominion and control. Board of Regents of University of Tex. v. Yarbrough, Tex. Civ.App., 470 S.W.2d 80, 86, 82.

Undue influence consists in the use, by one in whom a confidence is reposed by another, or who holds a real or apparent authority over him, of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over him; in taking an unfair advantage of another’s weakness of mind; or in taking a grossly oppressive and unfair advantage of another’s necessities or distress. Calif.Civil Code, § 1575.

Unearned Income. See Income.

Unearned Increment. Value due to no labor or expenditure on the part of an owner but to natural causes making an increased demand for it, such as increase of population or the general progress of society. Miller v. Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co., 123 W.Va. 320, 15 S.E.2d 687, 699.

Unearned surplus. Term “unearned surplus” of corporation suggests something other than “earned surplus” and includes: (a) “paid-in surplus”—amounts contributed for or assigned to shares in excess of stated capital applicable thereto; (b) “revaluation surplus”—surplus arising from a revaluation of assets above cost, and (c) “donated surplus”—contributions other than for shares, whether from shareholders or others. Conine v. Leikam, ODI., 570 P.2d 1156, 1160.

Uneducated. Not synonymous with illiterate. A man might be able to read and write, carry on a business correspondence, understand business transactions, and be bound by all his contracts, and yet be an “uneducated” man.

Unemployment. State of being not employed; lack of employment. A. J. Meyer & Co. v. Unemployment Compensation Commission, 348 Mo. 147, 152 S.W.2d 184, 189.

Unequal. Not uniform. Los Angeles County v. Ransohoff, 24 Cal.App.2d 238, 74 P.2d 828, 830. Ill-balanced; uneven; partial; discriminatory; prejudicial; unfair;—not synonymous with inappropriate, which means unsuitable, unfit, or improper. See Discrimination; Separate but equal doctrine.

Unequivocal. Clear; plain; capable of being understood in only one way, or as clearly demonstrated. Free from uncertainty, or without doubt; and, when used with reference to the burden of proof, it implies proof of the highest possible character and it imports proof of the nature of mathematical certainty. Berry v. Maywood Mut. Water Co. No. 1, 11 Cal.App.2d 479, 53 P.2d 1032; Molyneux v. Twin Falls Canal Co., 54 Idaho 619, 35 P.2d 651, 656.

Unerring. Incapable of error or failure; certain; sure; infallible.

Unethical. Not ethical; hence, colloquially, not according to business or professional standards.
Unethical conduct. See Code of Professional Responsibility.

Unexceptionable. Without any fault; not subject to any objection or criticism.

Unexpected. Not expected, coming without warning, sudden. See Act of God; Accident.

Unexpired term. Remainder of a period prescribed by law after a portion of such time has passed, and phrase is not synonymous with "vacancy." State ex rel. Sanchez v. Dixon, La.App., 4 So.2d 591, 596.

Unfair competition. A term which may be applied generally to all dishonest or fraudulent rivalry in trade and commerce, but is particularly applied to the practice of endeavoring to substitute one's own goods or products in the markets for those of another, having an established reputation and extensive sale, by means of imitating or counterfeiting the name, title, size, shape, or distinctive peculiarities of the article, or the shape, color, label, wrapper, or general appearance of the package, or other such simulations, the imitation being carried far enough to mislead the general public or deceive an unwary purchaser, and yet not amounting to an absolute counterfeit or to the general public or deceive an unwary purchaser, and yet not amounting to an absolute counterfeit or to the infringement of a trade-mark or trade-name. Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U.S. 169, 16 S.Ct. 1002, 41 L.Ed. 118. The simulation by one person of the name, materials, color scheme, symbols, patterns, or devices employed by another for purpose of deceiving the public, or substitution of goods, or wares of one person for those of another, thus falsely inducing purchase of goods and obtaining benefits belonging to competitor. Mathews Conveyor Co. v. Palmer-Bee Co., C.C.A.Mich., 135 F.2d 73, 84; American Fork & Hoe Co. v. Stamplt Corporation, C.C.A.Ohio, 125 F.2d 472, 474, 475. Passing off, or attempting to pass off upon the public the goods or business of one person as the goods or business of another. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. v. Oil City Refinners, C.C.A.Ohio, 136 F.2d 470, 474. The selling of another's product as one's own. A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States, N.Y., 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837, 844, 79 L.Ed. 1570. Also, deceitful advertising which injures a competitor, bribery of employees, secret rebates and concessions, and other devices of unfair trade. In re Northern Pigment Co., Cust. & Pat.App., 71 F.2d 447, 453.

The equitable doctrine of "unfair competition" is not confined to cases of actual market competition between similar products of different parties, but extends to all cases in which one party fraudulently seeks to sell his goods as those of another. Wisconsin Electric Co. v. Dumore Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 35 F.2d 555, 557.

That which constitutes "unfair competition" or "unfair or fraudulent business practice" within statute providing that person performing or proposing to perform act of unfair competition within state may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction is question of fact, the essential test being whether the public is likely to be deceived. Payne v. United California Bank, 23 Cal.App.3d 850, 100 Cal.Rptr. 672, 676.

Under statute providing for enjoining of unfair competition and defining the same as meaning and including "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice" courts may enjoin on-going wrongful business conduct in whatever context such activity may occur; "unfair competition" within such statute is not limited to deceptive or fraudulent conduct. As used in statute prohibiting unfair competition and defining the same as meaning and including "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice," "unfair competition" is not confined to practices involving competitive injury but extends to practices resulting in injury to consumers. Barquis v. Merchants Collection Ass'n of Oakland, Inc., 7 Cal.3d 94, 101 Cal.Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817, 828, 829.

Test of "unfair competition" is, not whether distinction between two competing products can be recognized when placed alongside each other, but whether, when the two products are not viewed together, a purchaser of ordinary prudence would be induced by reason of the marked resemblance in general effect to mistake one for the other despite differences in matters of detail.Ralston Purina Co. v. Checker Food Products Co., Mo.App., 80 S.W.2d 717, 719, 720.

See also Unfair methods of competition.

Unfair hearing. Where the defect, or the practice complained of, was such as might have led to a denial of justice, or where there was absent one of the elements deemed essential to due process. Ex parte Bridges, D.C.Cal., 49 F.Supp. 292, 302, 306; Bufalino v. Irvine, C.C.A.Kan., 103 F.2d 830, 832; Kielema v. Crossman, C.C.A.Tex., 103 F.2d 292, 293.

Unfair labor practice. Within National Labor Relations Act, it is an unfair labor practice for an employer: (1) To interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. (2) To dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it. (3) By discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization. (4) To discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee because he has filed charges or given testimony under the Act. (5) To refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of his employees. National Labor Relations Act, §§ 7, 8; 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 102.1 et seq., 157, 158.

The following acts have been held to be unfair labor practices under National Labor Relations Act:

The term though not defined by the statute is clearly applicable to practices never heretofore regarded as opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud, or oppression, or as against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly. The act was not intended to fetter free and fair competition as commonly understood and practiced by honorable opponents in trade. In re Amtorg Trading Corporation, Cust. & Pat.App., 75 F.2d 826, 830. But a method was said to be an unfair method if it does not leave to each actual or potential competitor a fair opportunity for play of his contending force engendered by an honest desire for gain. California Rice Industry v. Federal Trade Commission, C.C.A.9, 102 F.2d 716, 721.

See also Unfair competition.

Unfair trade practices. See Unfair competition; Unfair methods of competition.

Unfaithful. Characterized by bad faith;—not synonymous with "illega!," which means unlawful or contrary to law, nor with "improper," which, as applied to conduct, implies such conduct as a man of ordinary and reasonable prudence would not, under the circumstances, have been guilty of.

Unfinished. Not completed; not brought to an end; imperfect; the last effort, as a final touch is given to a work. Bell & Graddy v. O'Brien, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 560, 562.

Unft. Unsuitable; incompetent; not adapted or qualified for a particular use or service; having no fitness. Word "unfit" means, in general, unsuitable, incompetent or not adapted for a particular use or service. In Interest of Johnson, 214 Kan. 780, 522 P.2d 330, 334. As applied to relation of rational parents to their child, word "unfit" usually, though not necessarily, imports something of moral delinquency, but, unsuitability for any reason, apart from moral defects, may render a parent unfit for custody. In Interest of Johnson, 214 Kan. 780, 522 P.2d 330, 334.

Ungeld. In Saxon law, an outlaw; a person whose murder required no composition to be made, or weregeld to be paid, by his slayer.

Unica taxatio /yũwnaka taekšěyš(i)yov/. The obsolete language of a special award of venire, where, of several defendants, one pleads, and one lets judgment go by default, whereby the jury, who are to try and assess damages on the issue, are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default.

Unified credit. A credit against the federal Unified Transfer Tax, replacing the former lifetime gift tax exemption and the estate tax exemption.

Unified transfer tax. A federal tax applicable to transfers by gift and death made after 1976.

Uniform. Conforming to one rule, mode, pattern, or unvarying standard; not different at different times or places; applicable to all places or divisions of a country. Equable; applying alike to all within a class; sameness.

A statute is general and uniform in its operation when it operates equally upon all persons who are brought within the relations and circumstances provided for; when all persons under the same condi-
Uniform Consumer Credit Code. (Also called the Uniform Commercial Code. One of the Uniform Laws adopted by some states governing questions of full faith and credit and recognition of divorces of sister states.

Uniformity. See Uniform.

Uniform Laws or Acts. Laws in various subject areas, approved by the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, that are often adopted, in whole or substantially, by individual states. Examples are the Uniform Anatomical Gifts Act, the Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act, and the Uniform Commercial Code. See also Model Act.

Uniform Principal and Income Act. One of the Uniform Laws adopted by some states governing allocation of principal and income in trusts and estates.

Uniform State laws. See Model Act; Uniform Laws or Acts.

Unity. To cause to be one; to make into a unit; to unite; to become one; to consolidate.

Unilateral. One-sided; ex parte; having relation to only one of two or more persons or things.

Unilateral contract. See Contract.

Unilateral mistake. A mistake or misunderstanding as to the terms or effect of a contract, made or entertained by one of the parties to it but not by the other.

Unilateral record. Records are unilateral when offered to show a particular fact, as a prima facie case, either for or against a stranger.

Unimproved land. A statutory term which includes lands, once improved, that have reverted to a state of nature, as well as lands that have never been improved.

Uninclosed place. A place not entirely inclosed, an “inclosed” place being a place inclosed on all sides by some sort of material.

Uninfected. Untainted or uncontaminated, not affected unfavorably, not impregnated or permeated with that which is bad or harmful. Leonardi v. A. Habermann Provision Co., 143 Ohio St. 623, 56 N.E.2d 232, 237, 28 O.O. 511.

Uninsured. Motorist coverage. Protection afforded an insured by first party insurance against bodily injury inflicted by an uninsured motorist, after the liability of the uninsured motorist for the injury has been
UNINSURED

Uninsured. That which cannot be understood.

Union. An organization of workers, formed for the purpose of negotiating with employers on matters of wages, seniority, working conditions and the like.

A league; a federation; an unincorporated association of persons for a common purpose; as, a trade or labor union. A joinder of separate entities. State ex rel. Dawson v. Dinwiddle, 186 Okl. 63, 95 P.2d 867, 869.

A popular term in America for the United States; also, in Great Britain, for the consolidated governments of England and Scotland, or for the political tie between Great Britain and Ireland.

See also Agency shop; Bargaining unit; Craft union; Credit union; Labor organization; Labor union; Open shop; Preferential shop; Right-to-work laws.

Closed union. Union with highly restrictive membership requirements such as high initiation fees, and long apprenticeship periods. See also Closed union, supra.

Company union. Union formed or sponsored by the employer. For all practical purposes, such union is now illegal because employers are prohibited from interfering with union representation by the National Labor Relations Act.

Craft union. Union composed of members of the same trade or craft, as carpenters, plumbers, etc. regardless of the company for which they work.

Horizontal union. A craft union which cuts across employer or industry lines.

Independent union. Union formed by employees of a particular employer without affiliation with an international union.

Industrial union. Union composed of workers in a particular industry regardless of their particular trade or craft, as for example, the United Automobile Workers union.

International union. A parent union with affiliates in other countries such as Canada and Mexico.

Local union. A union of workers in one plant or location but affiliated with a parent or larger union. The local is the bargaining unit of the union.

National union. A parent union with locals in various parts of the United States, though not outside the country.

Open union. A union whose admission requirements are relatively easy to meet. See also Open shop; compare Closed union, supra.

Trade union. Generically, a labor union. Restrictively, a craft union.

Union shop. Exists where all workers are union members.

Vertical union. An industrial union organized along lines of industry and not craft.

Union certification. The process by which an official, governmental body such as the National Labor Relations Board declares that a particular union has qualified as the bargaining representative of the employees of a company or industry by reason of a majority vote of the workers.

Union contract. A written agreement between the union and employer covering such matters as wages, seniority rights and working conditions.

Union-jack. The national flag of Great Britain and Ireland, which combines the banner of St. Patrick with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. The word "jack" is most probably derived from the surcoat, charged with a red cross, anciently used by the English soldiery. This appears to have been called a "jacque," whence the word "jacket," anciently written "jacquit." Some, however, without a shadow of evidence, derive the word from "jacques," the first alteration having been made in the reign of King James I.

Union mortgage clause. A clause, as in a fire policy (together with the rider making the loss, if any, payable to the mortgagee), which provides that if the policy is made payable to a mortgagee of the insured real estate, no act or default of any person other than such mortgagee, or his agents or those claiming under him, shall affect his right to recover in case of loss on such real estate. Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. German Mut. Fire Ins. Ass'n of Lohman, 231 Mo.App. 699, 105 S.W.2d 1001. Such clause creates independent contract between insurer and mortgagee and is distinguished from "open mortgage clause" in that latter clause simply provides that policy is payable to mortgagee as his interest may appear. Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. German Mut. Fire Ins. Ass'n of Lohman, 231 Mo.App. 699, 105 S.W.2d 1001. And mortgagee under such latter clause is merely an appointee to receive fund recoverable in case of loss to extent of his interest. Capital Fire Ins. Co. of Cal. v. Langhorne, C.C.A.Minn., 146 F.2d 237, 241.

Union rate. The wage scale set by a union as a minimum wage to be paid and generally expressed as an hourly rate or piece-work rate.

Union security clause. Provision in union contract which establishes status of union in a plant. It provides for the relation of the union to the workers and their positions. Any contract clause requiring some or all employees represented by a union to become or remain members of the union as a condition of employment.

Unissued stock. Stock of a corporation which has been authorized but is not outstanding.

Unit. A single thing of any kind. A term sometimes used in the sense of a share, as in an oil syndicate, or as equivalent to an investment security. With respect to labor unit, see Bargaining unit.

Unitas personarum. Lat. The unity of persons, as that between husband and wife, or ancestor and heir.

Unite. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert.

United in interest. A statutory term applicable to defendants only when they are similarly interested in and will be similarly affected by the determination of the issues involved in the action; e.g., joint obligors upon a guaranty.

United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The official title of the kingdom composed of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and including the colonies and possessions beyond the seas, under the act of January 1, 1801, effecting the union between Ireland and Great Britain.

United Nations. An organization started by the allied powers in World War II for the stated purposes of preventing war, providing justice and promoting welfare and human rights of peoples. Its membership is made up of nearly all nations of the world. New members may be admitted by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly. It consists of a Security Council and a General Assembly and subordinate agencies.

United States. This term has several meanings. It may be merely the name of a sovereign occupying the position analogous to that of other sovereigns in family of nations, it may designate territory over which sovereignty of United States extends, or it may be collective name of the states which are united by and under the Constitution. Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, U.S.Ohio, 324 U.S. 652, 65 S.Ct. 870, 89 L.Ed. 1252.

United States Attorney. A United States Attorney is appointed by the President for each judicial district. The general duties of U.S. attorneys are to: prosecute for all offenses against the United States; prosecute or defend, for the Government, all civil actions, suits or proceedings in which the United States is concerned; appear in behalf of the defendants in all civil actions, suits or proceedings pending in his district against collectors, or other officers of the revenue or customs for any act done by them or for the recovery of any money exacted by or paid to these officers, and by them paid into the Treasury; institute and prosecute proceedings for the collection of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred for violation of any revenue law, unless satisfied on investigation that justice does not require the proceedings. 28 U.S.C.A. § 547.

United States Code. Prior to 1926, the positive law for federal legislation was contained in the one volume of the Revised Statutes of 1875 and then in each subsequent volume of the Statutes at Large. In 1925, Congress authorized the preparation of the United States Code. This was prepared by a Revisor of Statutes appointed by Congress, who extracted all sections of the Revised Statutes of 1875 that had not been repealed and then all of the public and general laws from the Statutes at Large since 1875 that were still in force. These were then rearranged into fifty titles and published as the United States Code, 1926 ed., in four volumes. Each year thereafter a cumulative supplement containing the laws passed since 1926 was published. In 1932 a new edition was issued which incorporated the cumulative supplements to the 1926 edition, and this became the United States Code, 1932 ed. Every six years a new edition of the U.S. Code is published with cumulative supplement volumes being issued during the intervening years.

United States Code Annotated. This multi-volume publication includes the complete text of the United States Code, together with case notes of state and federal decisions which construe and apply specific Code sections, cross references to related sections, historical notes, and library references. U.S.C.A. is further supplemented with United States Code Congressional and Administrative News.

United States Commissioners. See Magistrate.

United States Courts. Except in the case of impeachments, the judicial power of the United States is vested by the Constitution in a Supreme Court and such other inferior courts as may be from time to time established by congress. All the judges are appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the senate, to hold office during good behavior, and their compensation cannot be diminished during their term of office. Art. III, U.S.Const. Such “inferior” courts include the Courts of Appeals, District Courts, Court of Claims, Customs Court, and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. See also specific courts.

United States currency. Commonly understood to include every form of currency authorized by the United States government, whether issued directly by it or under its authority. See Legal tender.

United States Magistrates. See Magistrate.

United States notes. See Treasury bill; Treasury note.

United States officer. Usually and strictly, in United States statutes, a person appointed in the manner declared under Art. II, § 2, U.S.Const., providing for the appointment of officers, either by the President and the Senate, the President alone, the courts of law, or the heads of departments, Steele v. U.S., 267 U.S. 505, 45 S.Ct. 417, 418, 69 L.Ed. 761; Dropps v. U.S., 34 F.2d 15, 17.

United States Reports. The official printed record of cases heard and decided by the U.S. Supreme Court which usually includes a syllabus of each case, the opinion of the Court, concurring and dissenting opinions, if any, the disposition made of each case, and orders of the Court. Originally a series of Reports was issued during the incumbency of each successive court reporter and such were cited as Dallas (1790-
Unit of production. The “unit of production” method of determining the taxable net income or profit in the oil or gas business is accomplished by a system of accounting by which is ascertained, as nearly as science will permit, the total amount of recoverable oil in the property, and to each barrel of this oil is assigned its part of the capital investment, and from the sale price of each barrel produced and sold there is deducted the expenses of producing it, and its proportion of the capital investment, leaving the balance as profit, and thus, when the property is exhausted, the operator has received back his capital and expenses, and accounted for his net income or loss.

Unit ownership acts. State laws governing condominium ownership. See Planned unit development.

Unit pricing. System under which contract items are priced per unit and not on the basis of a flat contract price.

Unit rule. A method of valuing securities by multiplying the total number of shares held by the sale price of one share sold on a licensed stock exchange, ignoring all other facts regarding value. Citizens Fidelity Bank & Trust Co. v. Reeves, Ky., 259 S.W.2d 432, 434.

Unitrust. A trust from which a fixed percentage of the net fair market value of the trust’s assets, valued annually, is paid each year to the beneficiary. See also Trust.

Unity. In the law of estates, the peculiar characteristic of an estate held by several in joint tenancy, and which is fourfold, viz., unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. In other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 180.

Unity of Interest. As required in case of joint tenancy, means that interests must accrue by one and the same conveyance. Hernandez v. Becker, C.C.A.N.M., 54 F.2d 542, 547. It also signifies that no one of joint tenants can have a greater interest in the property than each of the others, while, in the case of tenants in common, one of them may have a larger share than any of the others.

Unity of possession. Joint possession of two rights by several titles. Exists for example where a person takes a lease of land from another at a certain rent, and afterwards purchases the fee-simple of such land. By this he acquires unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished. It is also one of the essential properties of a joint estate, requiring that the joint tenants must hold the same undivided possession of the whole and enjoy same rights until death of one. Hernandez v. Becker, C.C.A.N.M., 54 F.2d 542, 547.

Unity of seisin. Where a person seised of land which is subject to an easement, profit à prendre, or similar right, also becomes seised of the land to which the easement or other right is annexed.

Unity of time. One of the essential properties of a joint estate; the estates of the tenants being vested at one and the same period. 2 Bl.Comm. 181; Hernandez v. Becker, C.C.A.N.M., 54 F.2d 542, 547.

Unity of title. As applied to joint tenants, signifies that they hold their property by one and the same title, while tenants in common may take property by several titles.

Uniuscujusque contractus initium spectandum est, et causa /yanayask(y)ajskwi kontrakụts aniʃ(y)am spekt'andem ẹst, et kọ́ọ́/. The commencement and cause of every contract are to be regarded.

Unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur /yuwnáyaʃ ommānyow tēšas rəspansh(y)ow nôn odiyédər/. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all; the testimony of a single witness shall not be admitted under any circumstances. A maxim of the civil and canon law.

Universal. Having relation to the whole or an entirety; pertaining to all without exception; a term more extensive than “general,” which latter may admit of exceptions.

Universal agent. One who is appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do.

Universal legate. See Legacy.

Universal partnership. See Partnership.

Universal succession. In the civil law, succession to the entire estate of another, living or dead, though generally the latter, importing succession to the entire property of the predecessor as a juridical entirety, that is, to all his active as well as passive legal relations.

Universitas /yuwnavarsutas/. Lat. In the civil law, a corporation aggregate. Literally, a whole formed out of many individuals. 1 Bl.Comm. 469.

Universitas facti /yuwnavarsutas fækty/. In the civil law, a plurality of corporeal things of the same kind, which are regarded as a whole; e.g., a herd of cattle, a stock of goods.

Universitas juris /yuwnavarsutas júras/. In the civil law, a quantity of things of all sorts, corporeal as well as incorporeal, which, taken together, are regarded as a whole; e.g., an inheritance, an estate.

Universitas rerum /yuwnavarsutas riram/. In the civil law, literally, a whole of things. Several single things, which, though not mechanically connected with one another, are, when taken together, regarded as a whole in any legal respect.

Universitas vel corporatio non dictitur aliquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiamsi major pars id faciat /yúñavársatês vél kórparéysh(iy)ov nôn disodor élékivid fásørly náyasy id sit kalijiyéyidar dilbaréydam, éshiyémsay méyjár párz id féysh(iy)at/. A university or corporation is not said to do anything unless it be deliberated upon as a body, although the majority should do it.

University. An institution of higher learning, consisting of an assemblage of colleges united under one corporate organization and government, affording instruction in the arts and sciences and the learned professions, and conferring degrees.

Universus /yuwnavérss/. Lat. The whole; all together.

Unjust. Contrary to right and justice, or to the enjoyment of his rights by another, or to the standards of conduct furnished by the laws.

Unjust enrichment, doctrine of. General principle that one person should not be permitted unjustly to enrich himself at expense of another, but should be required to make restitution of or for property or benefits received, retained or appropriated, where it is just and equitable that such restitution be made, and where such action involves no violation or frustration of law or opposition to public policy, either directly or indirectly. Tulalip Shores, Inc. v. Mortland, 9 Wash. App. 271, 511 P.2d 1402, 1404. Unjust enrichment of a person occurs when he has and retains money or benefits which in justice and equity belong to another. Hummel v. Hummel, 133 Ohio St. 520, 14 N.E.2d 923, 927. Thus one who has conferred a benefit upon another solely because of a basic mistake of fact induced by a nondisclosure is entitled to restitution on above doctrine. Conkling's Estate v. Champlin, 193 Okl. 79, 141 P.2d 569, 570. See also Quantum meruit.

Unknown persons. Persons whose identities cannot be ascertained.

Unkouth /ánkůwθ/. Unknown. The law French form of the Saxon “unchooth.”

Unlage. Sax. An unjust law.

Unlawful. That which is contrary to, prohibited, or unauthorized by law. That which is not lawful. The acting contrary to, or in defiance of the law; disobeying or disregarding the law. While necessarily not implying the element of criminality, it is broad enough to include it.

Unlawful act. Act contrary to law, and presupposes that there must be an existing law. A violation of some prohibitory law and includes all willful, actionable violations of civil rights, and is not confined to criminal acts. State v. Hailey, 350 Mo. 300, 165 S.W.2d 422, 427. The “unlawful acts” within manslaughter statutes consist of reckless conduct or conduct evincing marked disregard for safety of others. State v. Newton, 105 Utah 561, 144 P.2d 290, 293; State v. Thatcher, 108 Utah 63, 157 P.2d 258, 261.

Unlawful assembly. At common law, the meeting together of three or more persons, to the disturbance of the public peace, and with the intention of co-operating in the forcible and violent execution of some unlawful private enterprise. If they take steps towards the performance of their purpose, it becomes a rout; and, if they put their design into actual execution, it is a riot. 4 BLComm. 146. An unlawful assembly is a meeting of three or more persons with a common plan in mind which, if carried out, will result in a riot. In other words, it is such a meeting with intent to (a) commit a crime by open force, or (b) execute a common design lawful or unlawful, in an unauthorized manner likely to cause courageous persons to apprehend a breach of the peace.

Unlawful assembly is the meeting or coming together of not less than five (5) persons for the purpose of engaging in conduct constituting either disorderly conduct, or a riot, or when in a lawful assembly of not less than five (5) persons, agreeing to engage in such conduct. Kansas Criminal Code. See also Riot.

Unlawful belligerents. Enemies passing the boundaries of the United States for purpose of destroying war industries and supplies without a uniform or other emblem signifying their belligerent status or discarding that means of identification after entry. Ex parte Quirin, App.D.C., 317 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 2, 15, 87 L.Ed. 3.

Unlawful detainer. The unjustifiable retention of the possession of lands by one whose original entry was lawful and of right, but whose right to the possession has terminated and who refuses to quit, as in the case of a tenant holding over after the termination of the lease and in spite of a demand for possession by the landlord. Brandley v. Lewis, 97 Utah 217, 92 P.2d 338, 339. Actions of “unlawful detainer” concern only right of possession of realty, and differ from ejectment in that no ultimate question of title or estate can be determined. McCracken v. Wright, 159 Kan. 615, 157 P.2d 814, 817. See also Detainer; Forcible detainer.

Unlawful entry. An entry upon lands effected peaceably and without force, but which is without color of title and is accomplished by means of fraud or some other willful wrong.

Unlawfully. Illegally; wrongfully. See Unlawful; Unlawful act.

This word is frequently used in indictments in the description of the offence; it was formerly necessary when the crime did not exist at common law, and when a statute, in describing an offence which it created, used the word; but was unnecessary whenever the crime existed at common law and was manifestly illegal.

UNLAWFUL PICKETING

ployees, 125 Conn. 391, 6 A.2d 321, 323. When force or violence is used to persuade or prevent workers from continuing their employment. Ex parte Bell, 37 Cal.App.2d 582, 100 P.2d 339, 343. See also Picketing.

Unless. If it be not that; if it be not the case that; if not; supposing not; if it be not; except. A reservation or option to change one’s mind provided a certain event happens, a conditional promise. A subordinate conjunction in common usage, connecting a dependent or subordinate clause to the main clause of a sentence. Kansas City Structural Steel Co. v. L. G. Barcus & Sons, Inc., 217 Kan. 88, 355 P.2d 419, 423.

Unless lease. An oil and gas lease which provides that lease will be rendered null and void and lessee will automatically be relieved from liability, upon failure to commence operations or to pay rent. It must be expressly stipulated in the lease that lease shall become null and void at a certain time “unless” the lessee begins operations or pays the rental stipulated. Where the word “unless” precedes the description of the act to be performed under an oil lease, no obligation to perform that act is imposed by the lease. McCrabb v. Moulton, C.C.A.Mo., 124 F.2d 689, 691.

Unlimited. Without confines, unrestricted, boundless.

Unliquidated. Not ascertained in amount; not determined; remaining unassessed or unsettled, as unliquidated damages; Davies v. Turner, 61 Ga.App. 531, 6 S.E.2d 356, 358. A debt is spoken of as “unliquidated,” if the amount thereof cannot be ascertained at the trial by a mere computation, based on the terms of the obligation or on some other accepted standard. Hettrick Mfg. Co. v. Barish, 120 Misc. 673, 199 N.Y.S. 755, 767. Under the law of accord and satisfaction, a claim or debt will be regarded as unliquidated if it is in dispute as to the proper amount. Paulsen Estate v. Naches-Selah Irr. Dist., 190 Wash. 205, 67 P.2d 856, 858.

Unliquidated claim. A claim which has not been finally determined either as to liability or damages. A disputed claim. See also Unliquidated.

Unliquidated damages. Damages which have not been determined or calculated. See also Damages.

Unliquidated debt. See Unliquidated.

Unliquidated demand. Such exists where it is admitted that one of two specific sums is due, but there is a dispute as to which is proper amount. Perryman Burns Coal Co. v. Seaboard Coal Co. of Connecticut, 128 Conn. 70, 20 A.2d 404, 405.

Unliable. A term used in maritime law to designate the unloading of cargo of a vessel at the place where it is properly to be delivered.

An unloading clause in an automobile liability policy covers the entire process involved in the movement of articles by and from a motor vehicle to the place where they are turned over to the one to whom the insured is to make delivery, if the clause is construed in accordance with what may be called the “complete operation” rule. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Commercial Cas. Ins. Co. of N. Y., 108 Utah 500, 161 P.2d 423. There are, however, two other rules or doctrines used by various courts in applying the unloading clause of such a policy. One is known as the “coming to rest” rule, and the other is the “continuous passage” rule. But the complete operation rule is said to be the modern doctrine, supported by the trend of the later cases. London Guarantee & Acc. Co. v. C. B. White & Bros., 188 Va. 195, 49 S.E.2d 254.

In determining whether activity constitutes “unloading” within meaning of insurance policy which provides coverage for liability arising out of loading and unloading truck, “complete operations” rule is followed under which “unloading” embraces all operations required in any specific situation to effect a complete delivery of the article; the number of temporary or intermediate stops or resting places is immaterial. Manhattan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Travelers Ins. Co., 66 Cal.App.2d 794, 136 Cal.Rptr. 400, 402. “Loading or unloading” within homeowner’s policy excluding personal liability coverage with respect to “loading or unloading” of automobiles has primary reference to objects transported from one place for delivery to some at least temporary final destination. Morari v. Atlantic Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 10 Ariz.App. 142, 457 P.2d 304, 306. “Unloading” as used in a motor vehicle liability policy has been completed when, following removal of the material from the vehicle, the deliverer has finished his handling of it and has placed the material in the hands of the receiver at the designated reception point, even though it is necessary for the consignee, or someone in his behalf, to transport it thereafter to another point. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., Fla.App., 260 So.2d 249, 255.

Unlooked for mishap or untoward event. One occurring unexpectedly and not naturally or in ordinary course of events.

Unmarried. Its primary meaning is never having been married; but it is a word of flexible meaning and it may be construed as not having a husband or wife at Unnatural offense. The infamous crime against nature; i.e., sodomy or buggery.

Unnatural will. An expression applied to disposition of estate or large portion thereof to strangers, to exclusion of natural objects of testator’s bounty without apparent reason.

Unnecessary. Not required by the circumstances of the case.

Unnecessary hardship. Unnecessary hardship, sufficient to establish basis for granting variance, is shown by establishing that: physical characteristics of property are such that it could not be used for any permitted purpose; property could be so used only at prohibitive expense; or that characteristics of area are such that property has no value or any distress value for any permitted purpose. Eighteenth & Rittenhouse Associates v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 26 Pa.Cmwlth. 554, 364 A.2d 973, 975. Within zoning ordinance so as to authorize granting of variance on such ground if land cannot yield a reasonable return if used only for a purpose allowed in zone, such exists where the plight of owner is due to unique circumstances not to general conditions in the neighborhood and use to be authorized will not alter essential character of the locality. Calcagno v. Town Board of Town of Webster, 265 App.Div. 687, 41 N.Y.S.2d 140, 142. It has also been said that whether of zoning ordinance impose an “unnecessary hardship” depends on whether use restriction is so unreasonable as to constitute an arbitrary interference with basic right of private property. Scaduto v. Town of Bloomfield, 127 N.J.L. 1, 20 A.2d 649, 650.

Un ne doit prise advantage de son tort daméyn. One ought not to take advantage of his own wrong.

Uno absurdo dato, infinita sequuntur. One absurdi- ty being allowed, an infinity follows.

Uno actu. Lat. In a single act; by one and the same act.

Unoccupied. Within fire policy exempting insurer from liability in case dwelling is “unoccupied,” means when it is not used as a residence, when it is no longer used for the accustomed and ordinary purposes of a dwelling or place of abode, or when it is not the place of usual return and habitual stoppage. Hence a mere temporary absence of occupants of dwelling house from such premises, with intention to return thereto does not render dwelling “unoccupied.” Foley v. Sonoma County Farmers’ Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 18 Cal.2d 232, 115 P.2d 1, 2, 3. See Occupation.

Uno fiatu. Lat. In one breath.

Uno fiatu, et uno intitutu, at one breath, and in one view.

Unprecedented. Having no precedent or example, novel, new, unexampled. State v. Malone, Tex.Civ.App., 168 S.W.2d 292, 300. Unusual and extraordinary; affording no reasonable warning or expectation of recurrence.

Unprecedented rainfall. An unusual and extraordinary rainfall as has no example or parallel in the history of rainfall in the vicinity affected, or as affords no reasonable warning or expectation that it will likely occur again.

Unprofessional conduct. That which is by general opinion considered to be unprofessional because immoral, unethical or dishonorable. State Board of Dental Examiners v. Savelle, 90 Colo. 177, 8 P.2d 693, 697. That which violates ethical code of profession (e.g. Code of Professional Responsibility (q.v.) or such conduct which is unbecoming member of profession in good standing. It involves breach of duty which professional ethics enjoin. Within statutes, rules, etc., promulgating standards of professional conduct for attorneys denotes conduct which it is recommended be made subject to disciplinary sanctions. Hawk v. Superior Court In and For Solano County, 42 C.A.3d 108, 116 Cal.Rptr. 713, 721.

Unreasonable appreciation. An unrealized holding gain; frequently used in the context of marketable securities. A paper profit (q.v.). See also Equity.

Unreasonable compensation. Under the Internal Revenue Code, a deduction is allowed for “reasonable” salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered. To the extent compensation is “excessive” (i.e., “unreasonable”), no deduction will be allowed. The problem of unreasonable compensation usually is limited to closely-held corporations where the motivation is to pay out profits in some form deductible to the corporation. Deductible compensation, therefore, becomes an attractive substitute for nondeductible dividends when the shareholders also are employed by the corporation.

Unreasonable refusal to submit to operation. An injured employee’s refusal to submit to an operation is unreasonable, so as to deprive him or her of right to workers’ compensation if it appears that an operation of a simple character not involving serious suffering or danger will result in substantial physical improvement. Black Star Coal Co. v. Surgener, 297 Ky. 653, 181 S.W.2d 53, 54.

Unreasonable restraint on alienation. Such act is brought about by gift of absolute ownership in property followed by such condition as takes away incidents of such ownership.

Unreasonable search. See Probable cause; Search.

Unrelated offenses. Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible for other purposes, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident. Fed.Evid.R. 404(b).

Unresponsive evidence. In evidence, an answer to a question which is irrelevant to the question asked.

Unruly and dangerous animals. Within the meaning of the law, such as are likely to injure other domestic animals and persons.

Unsafe. Dangerous; not secure.

Unseaworthy. A vessel which is unable to withstand the perils of an ordinary voyage at sea. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Compania de Navegacion, Interior, S. A., C.C.A.La., 19 F.2d 493, 495. One that could not reasonably have been expected to make the voyage. Interlake Iron Corporation v. Garland S. S. Co., C.C.A.Mich., 121 F.2d 267, 269, 270. One not manned by a competent crew; or not carrying proper navigation charts. But a ship is not unseaworthy where defect in ship is such that defect can be remedied on the spot in a short time by materials available. Middleton & Co. (Canada) Limited v. Ocean Dominion Steamship Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 137 F.2d 619, 622. Compare Seaworthy.

Unsolemn war. War denounced without a declaration; war made not upon general but special declaration; imperfect war. People v. McLeod, 1 Hill, N.Y., 409, 37 Am.Dec. 328.

Unsolemn will. In the civil law, one in which an executor is not appointed.

Unsound mind. Non-legal term referring to one who from infirmity of mind is incapable of managing himself or his affairs. The term, therefore, includes insane persons (see Insanity). It exists where there is an essential privation of the reasoning faculties, or an absence of those qualities or value.

Unworthy. Unbecoming; discreditable; not having suitable qualities or value.

Unwritten law. All that portion of the law, observed and administered in the courts, which has not been enacted or promulgated in the form of a statute or ordinance, including the unenacted portions of the common law, general and particular customs having the force of law, and the rules, principles, and maxims established by judicial precedents or the successive like decisions of the courts. See also Natural law.

UPA. Uniform Partnership Act.

Upkeep. The act of keeping up or maintaining; maintenance, repair.

Uplands. Lands bordering on bodies of waters.
Uplifted hand. The hand raised towards the heavens, in one of the forms of taking an oath, instead of being laid upon the Gospels.

Upper bench. The court of king's bench, in England, was so called during the interval between 1649 and 1660, the period of the commonwealth, Rolle being then chief justice. See 3 Bl.Comm. 202.

Upset price. The price at which any subject, as lands or goods, is exposed to sale by auction, below which it is not to be sold. In a final decree in foreclosure, the decree should name an upset price large enough to cover costs and all allowances made by the court, receiver's certificates and interest, liens prior to the bonds, amounts diverted from the earnings, and all undetermined claims which will be settled before the confirmation and sale.

U.R. Initials of "uti rogat," be it as you desire, a ballot thus inscribed, by which the Romans voted in favor of a bill or candidate.

Urban. Of or belonging to a city or town. Within city limits. Derived from the Latin "urbanis," which in that language imports the same meaning. City of South Pasadena v. City of San Gabriel, 134 Cal.App. 403, 25 P.2d 516.

Urban homestead. See Homestead.

Urban renewal. Comprehensive term embracing redevelopment plan indicating its relationship to such local objectives as appropriate land uses, improved traffic, public transportation, public utilities, recreation, community facilities and other public improvements. It also includes acquisition of air rights over highways and railroads which have a blighting influence if the rights are developed for low or moderate income housing.

Urban servitude. In the civil law, city servitudes, or servitudes of houses are called "urban." They are the easements appertaining to the building and construction of houses; as, for instance, the right to light and air, or the right to build a house so as to throw the rain-water on a neighbor's house.

Urbs /arbz/. Lat. In Roman law, a city, or a walled town. Sometimes it is put for civitas, and denotes the inhabitants, or both the city and its inhabitants; i.e., the municipality or commonwealth. By way of special pre-eminence, urbs meant the city of Rome.

Ure /yur/. L. Fr. Effect; practice. Mis en ure, put in practice; carried into effect.

U.S. An abbreviation for "United States.

Usage. A reasonable and lawful public custom in a locality concerning particular transactions which is either known to the parties, or so well established, general, and uniform that they must be presumed to have acted with reference thereto. Practice in fact. Electrical Research Products v. Gross, C.C.A.Alaska, 120 F.2d 301, 305. Uniform practice or course of conduct followed in certain lines of business or professions or some procedure or phase thereof. Turner v. Donovan, 3 Cal.App.2d 485, 39 P.2d 858, 859. Usage cannot be proved by isolated instances, but must be certain, uniform and notorious.unkovich v.

New York Cent. R. Co., 128 N.J.Eq. 377, 16 A.2d 558, 561. Habitual or customary practice which prevails within geographical or sociological area, and is course of conduct based upon series of actual occurrences, and in order to be controlling upon parties to contract, it must be adopted by them, or be well known to parties or to persons in their circumstances. Sam. Levitz Furniture Co. v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 10 Ariz.App. 225, 457 P.2d 938, 941. See also Custom and usage; Local usage; Trade usage.

"Custom" distinguished. "Usage" is a repetition of acts, and differs from "custom" in that the latter is the law or general rule which arises from such repetition; while there may be usage without custom, there cannot be a custom without a usage accompanying or preceding it. U. S. for Use of E & R Const. Co., Inc. v. Guy H. James Const. Co., D.C.Tenn., 390 F.Supp. 1193, 1209. It is distinguished from "custom" in that "usage" derives its efficacy from assent of parties to transaction, and hence is important only in consensual agreements, while "custom" derives its efficacy from its adoption into the law, is binding irrespective of any manifestation of assent by parties concerned, and may be of importance in any department of law. Gulf Refining Co. v. Universal Ins. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 32 F.2d 555, 557.

Fair usage. See Fair use doctrine.

General usage. One which prevails generally throughout the country, or is followed generally by a given profession or trade, and is not local in its nature or observance.

A usage of trade is any practice or method of dealing having such regularity of observance in a place, vocation or trade as to justify an expectation that it will be observed with respect to the transaction in question. The existence and scope of such a usage are to be proved as facts. If it is established that such a usage is embodied in a written trade code or similar writing the interpretation of the writing is for the court. U.C.C. § 1–205(2). See also Course of dealing.

Usance. In mercantile law, the common period fixed by the usage or custom or habit of dealing between the country where a bill is drawn, and that where it is payable, for the payment of bills of exchange. It means, in some countries, a month, in others two or more months, and in others half a month.

U.S.D.C. United States District Court.

Use, n. Act of employing everything, or state of being employed; application, as the use of a pen, or his machines are in use. Also the fact of being used or employed habitually; usage, as, the wear and tear resulting from ordinary use. Berry-Kofron Dental Laboratory Co. v. Smith, 345 Mo. 922, 137 S.W.2d 452, 454, 455, 456. The purpose served; a purpose, object, or end for useful or advantageous nature. Brown v. Kennedy, Ohio App., 49 N.E.2d 417, 418. To put or bring into action or service; to employ for or apply to a given purpose. Beggs v. Texas Dept. of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, Tex.Civ.App., 496 S.W.2d 252, 254. To avail oneself of; to employ; to utilize; to carry out a purpose or action by means of; to put into action or service, especially to attain an end. State v. Howard, 221 Kan. 51, 557 P.2d 1280, 1281.

A confidence reposed in another, who was made tenant of the land, or terre-tenant, that he would dispose of the land according to the intention of the cestui que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

A right in one person, called the “cestui que use,” to take the profits of land of which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same, and of making estates thereof according to the direction of the cestui que use.

Uses and trusts are not so much different things as different aspects of the same subject. A use regards principally the beneficial interest; a trust regards principally the nominal ownership. The usage of the two terms is, however, widely different. The word “use” is employed to denote either an estate vested since the statute of uses, and by force of that statute, or to denote such an estate created before the statute as, had it been created since, would have become a legal estate by force of the statute. The word “trust” is employed since that statute to denote the relation between the party invested with the legal estate (whether by force of that statute or independently of it) and the party beneficially entitled, who has hitherto been said to have the equitable estate.

See also Beneficial use; Best use; Charitable use; Conforming use; Exclusive use; Highest and best use; Nonconforming use; Public use; Raising a use; Unauthorized use.

Civil law. A right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary to daily sustenance. It differs from “usufruct,” which is a right not only to use, but to enjoy.

Right given to any one to make a gratuitous use of a thing belonging to another, or to exact such a portion of the fruit it produces as is necessary for his personal wants and those of his family. Civ.Code La. art. 626.

Conveyancing. “Use” literally means “benefit,” thus, in an ordinary assignment of chattels, the assignor transfers the property to the assignee for his “absolute use and benefit.” In the expressions “separate use,” “superstitious use,” and “charitable use,” “use” has the same meaning.

Non-technical sense. The “use” of a thing means that one is to enjoy, hold, occupy, or have some manner of benefit thereof. Use also means usefulness, utility, advantage, productive of benefit.

Generally

Cestui que use. A person for whose use and benefit lands or tenements are held by another. The latter, before the statute of uses, was called the “feoffee to use,” and held the nominal or legal title.

Charitable use. See Charitable.

Contingent use. A use limited to take effect upon the happening of some future contingent event; as where lands are conveyed to the use of A. and B., after a marriage shall be had between them.

Exclusive use. See Exclusive use.

Executed use. The first use in a conveyance upon which the statute of uses operates by bringing the possession to it, the combination of which, i.e., the use and the possession, form the legal estate, and thus the statute is said to execute the use.

Executive Uses. These are springing uses, which confer a legal title answering to an executory devise; as when a limitation to the use of A. in fee is defeasible by a limitation to the use of B., to arise at a future period, or on a given event.

Feoffee to uses. A person to whom (before the statute of uses) land was conveyed “for the use” of a third person. He held the nominal or legal title, while the third person, called the “cestui que use,” was entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the estate.

Official use. An active use before the statute of uses, which imposed some duty on the legal owner or feoffee to uses; as a conveyance to A. with directions for him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds among B., C., and D. To enable A. to perform this duty, he had the legal possession of the estate to be sold.

Passive use. A permissive use (q.v.).

Permissive use. A passive use which was resorted to before the statute of uses, in order to avoid a harsh law; as that of mortmain or a feudal forfeiture. It was a mere invention in order to evade the law by secrecy; as a conveyance to A. with directions for him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds among B., C., and D. To enable A. to perform this duty, he had the legal possession of the estate to be sold.

Resulting use. A use raised by equity for the benefit of a feoffor who has made a voluntary conveyance to uses without any declaration of the use. A resulting use arises where the legal seisin is transferred, and no use is expressly declared, nor any consideration or evidence of intent to direct the use. The use then remains in the original grantor, for it cannot be supposed that the estate was intended to be given away, and the statute immediately transfers the legal estate to such resulting use.

Secondary use. A use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate, otherwise called a “shifting use,” as a conveyance to the use of A. and his heirs, with a proviso that, when B. returns from India, then to the use of C. and his heirs.
Shifting use. A use which is so limited that it will be made to shift or transfer itself, from one beneficiary to another, upon the occurrence of a certain event after its creation. For example, an estate is limited to the use of A. and his heirs, provided that, upon the return of B. from Rome, it shall be to the use of C. and his heirs; this is a shifting use, which transfers itself to C. when the event happens. 2 BL.Comm. 335. These shifting uses are common in all settlements; and, in marriage settlements, the first use is always to the owner in fee till the marriage, and then to other uses. The fee remains with the owner until the marriage, and then it shifts as uses arise.

Springing use. A use limited to arise on a future event where no preceding use is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that which results to the grantor, or remains in him in the meantime.

Statute of uses. An English statute enacted in 1536 (27 Hen. VIII, c. 10), directed against the practice of creating uses in lands, and which converted the purely equitable title of persons entitled to a use into a legal title or absolute ownership with right of possession. The statute is said to "execute the use," that is, it abolishes the intervening estate of the feoffee to uses, and makes the beneficial interest of the cestui que use an absolute legal title.

Superstitious use. See that title.

Use and habitation. Within a grant does not mean the exclusive use and habitation, but the necessities of the grantee are determinative of extent of privileges to be enjoyed. Barrett v. Barrett, La.App., 5 So.2d 381, 383.

Use and occupation. This is the name of an action, being a variety of assumpsit, to be maintained by a landlord against one who has had the occupation and enjoyment of an estate, under a contract to pay therefor, express or implied, but not under such a lease as would support an action specifically for rent. Thackray v. Ritz, 130 Misc. 403, 223 N.Y.S. 668, 669.

Use plaintiff. In common law pleading, one for whose use (benefit) an action is brought in the name of another. Thus, where the assignee of a choses in action is not allowed to sue in his own name, the action would be entitled "A. B. (the assignor) for the Use of C. D. (the assignee) against E. F." In this case, C. D. is called the "use plaintiff."

Use. A person for whose use a suit is brought; otherwise termed the "use plaintiff."

Useful. The term as used in the patent law, when applied to a machine, means that the machine will accomplish its purpose practically when applied in industry. By "useful" is meant such an invention as may be applied to some beneficial use in society, in contradistinction to an invention which is injurious to the morals, the health, or the good order of society.

Useful life. In accounting and taxation, the period of time for which an asset is capable of being used for the production of income.

For income tax purposes, the "useful life" of depreciable property is period over which asset may reasonably be expected to be useful to taxpayer in his trade or business or in production of income, and such is necessarily an estimate made at time when property is first put to use. Cohn v. U. S., CA.Tenn., 259 F.2d 371, 377. Useful life for depreciation purposes is an estimate; length of the useful period must be shown by evidence that allows it to be estimated with reasonable accuracy. Richard S. Miller & Sons, Inc. v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 537 F.2d 446, 455. The term "depreciable life," as used in general excise tax law, is synonymous with the term "useful life" as used for purpose of the depreciation deduction under income tax law. Matter of 711 Motors, Inc., 56 Hawaii 644, 547 P.2d 1343, 1347.

Usefulness. Capabilities for use. The word pertains to the future as well as to the past.

Use immunity. Term generally refers to order of court which compels witness to give testimony of self-incriminating nature but provides that such testimony may not be used as evidence in subsequent prosecution of such witness. People v. Koba, 55 Ill.App.3d 298, 13 Ill.Dec. 306, 371 N.E.2d 1. See also Immunity.

User. The actual exercise or enjoyment of any right, property, drugs, franchise, etc.

Adverse user. Such a use of the property under claim of right as the owner himself would make, asking no permission, and disregarding all other claims to it, so far as they conflict with this use. See also Adverse possession.

User de action /yuwzar dakshan/. L. Fr. In old practice, the pursuing or bringing an action.

Use tax. An ad valorem tax on the use, consumption, or storage of tangible property, usually at the same rate as the sales tax, and levied for the purpose of preventing tax avoidance by the purchase of articles in a state or taxing jurisdiction which does not levy sales taxes.

Use variance. See Variance.

Usker. This word is said to be derived from "huissier," and is the name of a subordinate officer in some English courts of law.

Usker of the Black Rod. In old English law, the gentleman usker of the black rod is an officer of the house of lords appointed by letters patent from the crown. His duties are, by himself or deputy, to desire the attendance of the commons in the house of peers when the royal assent is given to bills, either by the king in person or by commission, to execute orders for the commitment of persons guilty of breach of privilege, and also to assist in the introduction of peers when they take the oaths and their seats.

Using mail to defraud. The elements of this offense are the formation of a scheme or artifice to defraud, and use of mails for purpose of executing or attempting to execute such scheme or artifice; the latter element being gist of the offense. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1341. Stryker v. United States, C.C.A.N.Ca., 39 F.2d 605. The crime is complete when mails are used in such scheme, and what happened subsequently is not controlling. United States v. Ames, D.C.N.Y., 39 F.Supp. 885, 886. See Mail fraud.

Using the service of another for pay. This phrase as used in Compensation Act defining employer means right to control the means and manner of that service, as distinguished from results of such service, the word "service" meaning the performance of labor for the benefit of another. Rutherford v. Tobin Quarries, 336 Mo. 1171, 82 S.W.2d 918, 923.

USO /úosow/. In Spanish law, usage; that which arises from certain things which men say and do and practice uninterruptedly for a great length of time, without any hindrance whatever.

Usque /uskwiy/. Lat. Up to; until. This is a word of usual course. These words in statute excepting from usual covenants. See Covenant.

Usual place of abode. Within meaning of statute relating to service of process is place where defendant is actually living at time of service. See Domicile; Residence.

Usual terms. A phrase in the common-law practice, which meant pleading issuably, rejoining gratis, and taking short notice of trial. When a defendant obtained further time to plead, these were the terms usually imposed.

Usuarius /yuwsyururias/. Lat. In the civil law, one who has the mere use of a thing belonging to another for the purpose of supplying his daily wants; a usury.

Usucapio, or usucaption /yuwsyuskepsh(iy)ow/. A term of Roman law used to denote a mode of acquisition of property. It corresponds very nearly to the term "prescription." But the prescription of Roman law differed from that of the English law, in this: that no mala fide possessor (i.e., person in possession knowingly of the property of another) could, by however long a period, acquire title by possession merely. The two essential requisites to usucapio were justa causa (i.e., title) and bona fides (i.e., ignorance). The term "usucapio" is sometimes, but erroneously, written "ususcaption." As to "lucrativa usucapio," see that title.

Usucapio constituta est ut aliquid litium finis esset /yuwsyuskepsh(ity)ow koon(t)stat(y)dowd etsy ad alekwas lish(y)am fanyas etsy/. Prescription was instituted that there might be some end to litigation.

Usufruct /yuwz(y)arfrekts/. In the civil law, the right of enjoying a thing, the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advantage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. Civ.Code La. art. 533.

Under Greek law, a right attached to the person which may not be inherited. New England Trust Co. v. Wood, 326 Mass. 239, 93 N.E.2d 547, 549.

Imperfect usufruct. An imperfect or quasi usufruct is that which is of things which would be useless to the usufructuary if he did not consume or expend them or change the substance of them; as, money, grain, liquors. Civ.Code La. art. 534. See Quasi usufruct, infra.

Legal usufruct. See that title.

Perfect usufruct. An usufruct in those things which the usufructuary can enjoy without changing their substance, though their substance may be diminished or deteriorate naturally by time or by the use to which they are applied, as, a house, a piece of land, furniture, and other movable effects. Civ.Code La. art. 534.

Quasi usufruct. In the civil law, originally the usufruct gave no right to the substance of the thing, and consequently none to its consumption; hence only an inconsumable thing could be the object of it, whether movable or immovable. But in later times the right of usufruct was, by analogy, extended to consumable things, and therewith arose the distinction between true and quasi usufructs. Civ.Code La. art. 534. See Imperfect usufruct, supra.

Usufructuary /yuwz(y)arfrektruckwariy/. In the civil law, one who has the usufruct or right of enjoying anything in which he has no property.

Usufruct /yuwz(y)arfret/. In French law, the same as the usufruct of the English and Roman law.

Usura /yuwz(y)ura/. Lat. In the civil law, money given for the use of money; interest. Commonly used in the plural, "usures" /yuwz(y)ure(y)/ywzharhiy/.

Usura est commodum certum quod propter usum rel mutuate recipitur. Sed secundario spirare de aliqua retributione, ad voluntatem ejus qui mutuatus est, hoc non est vitiosum /yuwz(y)ure est koomadam sadram kwod proptar yuwsam riyay myuwtyuwoediyas rasipadar. sed sekanderyiyow spereryi diy selakwa retsab(y)uwshiow, yed volanteydam lyas kwky myuwtyuwoeddas etsy, hok nón ést vishyowdsm/. Usury is a certain benefit which is received for the use of a thing lent. But to have an understanding [literally, to breathe or whisper], in an incidental way, about some compensation to be made at the pleasure of the borrower, is not lawful.

Usura manifesta /yuwz(y)ure miensfesta/. Manifest or open usury; as distinguished from usura velata, veiled or concealed usury, which consists in giving a bond for the loan, in the amount of which is included the stipulated interest.
Usura marltima /yuwy(y)ûrû maridama/mûrêståyama/. Interest taken on bottomry or respondentia bonds, which is proportioned to the risk, and is not affected by the usury laws.

Usurarîus /yûwzhar6riyas/*. In old English law, a usurer.

Usurîus /yûwzhârîyas/*. Pertaining to usury; partaking of the nature of usury; involving usury; tainted with usury; as, a usurious contract. See Usury.

Usurîus contract. A contract where interest to be paid exceeds the rate established by statute. Commerce Farm Credit Co. v. Ramp, Tex.Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 1144, 1149. It being sufficient when there is contingency whereby lender may get more than lawful rate of interest. Reynolds Mortg. Co. v. Thomas, Tex.Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 1011, 1013. See also Usury.

Usurp /yuwsarp/*. To seize and hold any office by force, and without right; applied to seizure of office, place, functions, powers, rights, etc. of another. State ex rel. Scanes v. Babb, 124 W.Va. 428, 20 S.E.2d 683, 686.

Usurpatio /yûwzrpeysh(i)yow/*. Lat. In the civil law, the interruption of a usucaption, by some act on the part of the real owner.

Usurpatio /yûwzrpeysh(i)yow/*. The unlawful encroachment or assumption of the use of property, power or authority which belongs to another. An interruption or the disturbing a man in his right and possession. The unlawful seizure or assumption of sovereign power. The assumption of government or supreme power by force or illegally, in derogation of the constitution and of the rights of the lawful ruler. Usurpatio for which writ of prohibition may be granted involves attempted exercise of power not possessed by inferior officer.

Usurpatio of advowson /yûwzrpeysh(i)yow av advawzan/*. An injury which consists in the absolute ouster or dispossession of the patron from the advowson or right of presentation, and which happens when a stranger who has no right presents a clerk, and the latter is thereupon admitted and instituted.

Usurpatio of franchise or office /yûwzrpeysh(i)yow av frâñchayz ar ôfâs/*. The unjustly intruding upon or exercising any office, franchise, or liberty belonging to another. "Usurpatio" of public office authorizing quo warranto action under statute may be with or without forcible seizure of office and prerogatives thereof, and may consist of mere unauthorized assumption and exercise of power in performing duties of office upon claim of right thereto. State ex rel. Kirk v. Wheatley, 133 Ohio St. 164, 12 N.E.2d 491, 493, 10 O.O. 236. See also Usurpatio.

Usurped power. See Usurp; Usurpatio.

Usurper. One who assumes the right of government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country.

Usurper of a public office. One who either intrudes into a vacant office or ousts the incumbent without any color of title. Neal v. Parker, 200 Ark. 10, 139 S.W.2d 41, 44. One who intrudes on office and as-sumes to exercise its functions without legal title or color of right thereto. Allegar v. School Dist. No. 16, Newton County, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 660, 663; State ex rel. City of Republic v. Smith, 345 Mo. 1158, 130 S.W.2d 929, 933. Any person attempting to fill pretended office attempted to be created by an unconstitutional law. Bodcaw Lumber Co. of Louisiana v. Jordan, La.App., 14 So.2d 98, 101.

Usury. Collectively, the laws of a jurisdiction regulating the charging of interest rates. A usurious loan is one whose interest rates are determined to be in excess of those permitted by the usury laws. An illegal contract for a loan or forbearance of money, goods, or things in action, by which illegal interest is reserved, or agreed to be reserved or taken. An unconscionable and exorbitant rate or amount of interest. An unlawful contract upon the loan of money, to receive the same again with exorbitant increase. The reserving and taking, or contracting to reserve and take, either directly or by indirection, a greater sum for the use of money than the lawful interest. A profit greater than the lawful rate of interest, intentionally exacted as a bonus, for the forbearance of an existing indebtedness or a loan of money, imposed upon the necessities of the borrower in a transaction where the money is to be returned at all events. Anderson v. Beadle, 35 N.M. 654, 5 P.2d 528, 529. See also Legal interest; Loan sharking.

Old English law. Interest of money; increase for the loan of money; a reward for the use of money. 2 Bl.Comm. 454. The taking of any compensation whatever for the use of money.

Usury laws. See Usury.

Usus /yûwswas/*. Lat. In Roman law, a precarious enjoyment of land, corresponding with the right of habitatio of houses, and being closely analogous to the tenancy at sufferance or at will of English law. The usuarius (i.e., tenant by usus) could only hold on so long as the owner found him convenient, and had to go so soon as ever he was in the owner's way (molestus). The usuarius could not have a friend to share the produce, but, in return for the bare use of his land; and he could not let or sell, the right being strictly personal to himself.

Usus belllici /yûwswas bêlasay/*. Lat. In international law, warlike uses or objects. It is the usus belllici which determine an article to be contraband.

Usus est dominium fiduciarium /yûwswas ét dominiyam fûd(y)ûwshëlèryaym/*. Use is a fiduciary dominion.

Usus et status sive possessio potius differunt secundum rationem fori, quam secundum rationem rel /yûwswas ét stêydas sávyly pázesh(i)yow pôwsh(i)yas dîffarant sákandam râshiyownam fôrây, kwêm sákandam râshiyownam rîyay/*. Use and estate, or possession, differ more in the rule of the court than in the rule of the matter.

Usus fructus /yûwswas frûktas/*. Lat. In Roman law, usufruct; usufructuary right or possession. The temporary right of using a thing, without having the ultimate property, or full dominion, of the substance. 2 Bl.Comm. 327.
Utas /yuwdas/. In old English practice, octave; the octave; the eighth day following any term or feast.

Ut currere solebat /at kahrariy sali'ybaet/. Lat. As it was wont to run; applied to a water-course.

Ut de feodo /at diy fyuwdow/. L. Lat. As of fee.

Uterine /yuwdarən/. Born of the same mother. A uterine brother or sister is born of the same mother, but by a different father.

Utility. In patent law, industrial value; the capability of being so applied in practical affairs as to prove advantageous in the ordinary pursuits of life, or add to the enjoyment of mankind. Callison v. Dean, C.C. A.Okl., 70 F.2d 55, 58. The absence of frivolity and mischievousness, and utility for some beneficial purpose. But there is no utility if the invention can be used only to commit a fraud with, Klein v. Russell, 86 U.S. (19 Wall.) 433, 22 L.Ed. 116; or for some immoral purpose, or can be used only for gambling purposes in saloons, or if the invention is dangerous in its use, Mitchell v. Tlghman, 86 U.S. (19 Wall.) 287, 22 L.Ed. 123.

Utility is established if only partial success is attained. Emery Industries v. Schumann, C.C.A.Ill., 111 F.2d 209, 211. The "utility" which an infringing defendant is denied to deny means sufficient practical utility to make a device useful in the sense of the patent statute. The estoppel does not forbid him to deny that there is any useful function, or new result serving to give inventive character to the slight step which a patentee has taken in differentiation from prior art. Sandy MacGregor Co. v. Vaco Grip Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 2 F.2d 655, 656.

Ut possidetis /yuwday pasidleydas/. Lat. Civil law.

A species of interdict for the purpose of retaining possession of a thing, granted to one who, at the time of contesting suit, was in possession of an immovable thing, in order that he might be declared the legal possessor. See Utrubl.

International law. A phrase used to signify that the parties to a treaty are to retain possession of what they have acquired by force during the war. A treaty which terminates a war may adopt this principle or that of the status quo ante bellum, or a combination of the two. In default of any treaty stipulation, the former doctrine prevails. Guillermo Alvarez y Sanches v. U. S., 42 Ct.Cl. 458.

Utl frui /yuwday fruway/. Lat. In the civil law, to Utlage. L. Fr. An outlaw.

Utlesse. An escape of a felon out of prison.

Umost care. Term is substantially synonymous with "highest care."

Umost resistance. This term, under the rule that to constitute rape there must be utmost resistance by the woman, is a relative rather than a positive term, and means that greatest effort of which she is capable must be used to foil assailant.

Ut pone ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat /at pynyiy æd pkkows, miydas æd dmniyz parviyn(i)yat/. That the punishment may reach a few, but the fear of it affect all. A maxim in criminal law, expressive of one of the principal objects of human punishment. 4 Bl.Comm. 11.

Utrubl /strəbəy/. In the civil law, the name of a species of interdict for retaining a thing, granted for the purpose of protecting the possession of a movable thing, as the uti possidetis was granted for an immovable.
Utrumque nostrum /yuwtrámkwiy nóstram/. Both of us. Words used formerly in bonds.

Ut summé potestatis regis est posse quantum velit, sic magnitudinis est velle quantum possit /št sámý pówdstéydas rýjýas ěst póšiý kwóntam víýlýst, sík mëgnat(y)úwðýnǎs ěst vélíý kwóntam póssit/. As the highest power of a king is to be able to do all he wishes, so the highest greatness of him is to wish all he is able to do.

Utter, v. To put or send (as a forged check) into circulation; to publish or put forth; to offer. To utter and publish an instrument, as a counterfeit note, is to declare or assert, directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that it is good; uttering it is a declaration that it is good, with an intention or offer to pass it. To utter, as used in a statute against forgery and counterfeiting, means to offer, whether accepted or not, a forged instrument, with the representation, by words or actions, that the same is genuine.

The phrase “utters or publishes as true”, as used in federal forgery statute, means to make or attempt any use of a written or printed instrument or document, such as an attempt to place a check in circulation, whereby, or in connection with which, some assertion, representation or claim is made to another in some way or manner, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, or by words or conduct, that the check or document is genuine. Carr v. United States, C.A.Tenn., 278 F.2d 702; United States v. Maybury, C.A.N.Y., 274 F.2d 899; French v. United States, C.A.La., 232 F.2d 736, cert. denied 352 U.S. 851, 77 S.Ct. 73, 1 L.Ed.2d 62; United States v. Rader, W.D. Ark., 185 F.Supp. 224, aff'd 288 F.2d 452.

Utter, adj. Entire; complete; absolute; total.

Utterance. See Excited utterance; Spontaneous declarations.

Uxor /ǎksor/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife; a woman lawfully married.

Et uxor. And his wife. A term used in indexing, abstracting, and describing conveyances made by a man and his wife as grantors, or to a man and his wife as grantees. Often abbreviated “et ux.” Thus, “John Doe et ux. to Richard Roe.”

Jure uxoris. In right of his wife. A term used of a husband who joins in a deed, is seised of an estate, brings a suit, etc., in the right or on the behalf of his wife. 3 Bi.Comm. 210.

Uxor et filius sunt nomina nature /ǎksor et filiys sǎnt nómana natyúriy/. Wife and son are names of nature.

Uxoricide /aLsorasayd/. The killing of a wife by her husband; one who murders his wife. Not a technical term of the law.

Uxor non est sui juris, sed sub potestate viri /ǎksor nón ěst s(y)úway jyrýs, sěd sáb pówdstéydiy víry/. A wife is not her own mistress, but is under the power of her husband.

Uxor sequitur domicilium viri /ǎksor sěkwadar dòmsil(i)yam víry/. A wife follows the domicile of her husband.

Utter bar. In English law, the bar at which those barristers, usually junior men, practice who have not yet been raised to the dignity of king's counsel. These junior barristers are said to plead without the bar; while those of the higher rank are admitted to seats within the bar, and address the court or a jury from a place reserved for them, and divided off by a bar. Also called “outer bar.”

Utter barrister. In English law, those barristers who plead without the bar, and are distinguished from benchers, or those who have been readers, and who are allowed to plead within the bar, as the king's counsel are.

Uxor /ǎksor/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife; a woman lawfully married.
As an abbreviation, this letter may stand for “Victoria,” “volume,” or “verb,” also “vide” (see) and “voce” (word). It is also a common abbreviation of “versus,” in the titles of causes, and reported cases.

VA

See Veterans Administration.

Vacancy. A place or position which is empty, unfilled, or unoccupied. An unoccupied or unfilled post, position, or office. An existing office, etc., without an incumbent. The state of being destitute of an incumbent, or a proper or legally qualified officer. The term is principally applied to an interruption in the incumbency of an office, or to cases where the office is not occupied by one who has a legal right to hold it and to exercise the rights and perform the duties pertaining thereto. The word “vacancy,” when applied to official positions, means, in its ordinary and popular sense, that an office is unoccupied, and that there is no incumbent who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of a future event, though the word is sometimes used with reference to an office temporarily filled.

A strip of unsurveyed and unsold public lands.

Hughes v. Rhodes, Tex.Civ.App., 137 S.W.2d 820, 821. See also Vacant.

“Vacant” and “unoccupied,” as used together in rider to fire policy, have different meanings; term “vacant” meaning “empty,” while term “unoccupied” means lack of habitual presence of human beings. Jelin v. Home Ins. Co., C.C.A.N.J., 72 F.2d 326, 327. See also Vacancy, and as to vacant Possession and Succession, see those titles.

Vacantia bona. In the civil law, goods without an owner, or in which no one claims a property; escheated goods.

Vacate. To annul; to set aside; to cancel or rescind. To render an act void; as, to vacate an entry of record, or a judgment. As applied to a judgment or decree it is not synonymous with “suspend” which means to stay enforcement of judgment or decree.

To put an end to; as, to vacate a street. To move out; to make vacant or empty; to leave; especially, to surrender possession by removal; to cease from occupancy.

See also Annul; Reverse; Vacancy.

Vacatio. In the civil law, exemption; immunity; privilege; dispensation; exemption from the burden of office.

Vacation. A recess or leave of absence; a respite or time of respite from active duty or employment; an intermission or rest period during which activity or work is suspended. It is a period of freedom from duty or work, but not the end of employment. In re Dauber, 151 Pa.Super. 293, 30 A.2d 214, 216. The act or result of vacating. An intermission of procedure. It is not a termination of the relation of master and servant or employer and employee. In schools, there are customary vacations at Christmas, Easter, other holidays, and during the summer.

That period of time between the end of one term of court and the beginning of another. Compare Recess.

Vacation of Judgment. The setting aside of a judgment on grounds that it was issued by mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect or fraud. While the term “vacate” has been replaced by Fed.R.Civil P. 60, the basis for relief from judgment is the same as formerly when one sought to vacate a judgment.

Vacatur. Let it be vacated. In practice, a rule or order by which a proceeding is vacated; a vacating.

Vacatura. An avoidance of an ecclesiastical benefit.

Vacua possessio. The vacant possession, i.e., free and unburdened possession, which (e.g.) a vendor had and has to give to a purchaser of lands.

Vacuity. Emptiness; vacancy; want of reality; nihility.

Vacus. In the civil law, empty; void; vacant; unoccupied.

Vadelet. See Valec.

Vades. In the civil law, pledges; securities; bail; security for the appearance of a defendant or accused person in court.
Vadlare duellum /vædiyɛrɪd(ɨ)uwɛləm/. L. Lat. In old English law, to wage or gage the duellum; to wage battle; to give pledges mutually for engaging in the trial by combat.

Vadimonium /vædəmɔm(ɨ)yəm/. Lat. In Roman law, bail or security; the giving of bail for appearance in court; a recognizance. An ancient form of suretyship.

Vadium /vəyd(ɨ)əm/. Lat. A pledge; security by pledge of property.

Vadium mortuum /vəyd(ɨ)əm mɔrˈtjuːm/. A mortgage or dead pledge; a security given by the borrower of a sum of money, by which he grants to the lender an estate in fee, on condition that, if the money be not repaid at the time appointed, the estate so put in pledge shall continue to the lender as dead or gone from the mortgagor. 2 Bl.Comm. 157.

Vadium ponere /vəyd(ɨ)əm póʊnərə/. To take bail for the appearance of a person in a court of justice.

Vadium vivum /vəyd(ɨ)əm vɪvəm/. A species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of the land. It was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost, and were not left in dead pledge, but this was a living pledge, for the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt.

Vadlet /vədəlt/. In old English law, the king’s eldest son; hence the valet or knave follows the king and queen in a pack of cards.

Vadium /vəydəm/. In old records, a ford, or wading place.

Vagabond. A vagrant or homeless wanderer without means of honest livelihood. Neering v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 383 Ill. 366, 50 N.E.2d 497, 502. One who wanders from place to place, having no fixed dwelling, or, if he has one, not abiding in it; a wanderer, especially such a person who is lazy and generally worthless and without means of honest livelihood. See also Vagrant.

Vagabonds are described in old English statutes as “such as wake on the night and sleep on the day, and haunt customary taverns and ale-houses and routs about; and no man wot from whence they came, nor whither they go.” 4 Bl.Comm. 169.

Vagabundum nuncupamus eum qui nullibi domiciliunm contraxit habitations /vəɡəbɔndəm nʌŋkəˈpeɪməz iəm kwɔɪ nʌlˈbi dəməˈsl(ɨ)əm kəntrəˈkeɪst hæbɪtætiˈʃiələm/. We call him a “vagabond” who has acquired nowhere a domicile of residence.

Vagrancy. At common law, the act of going about from place to place by an个人 without visible means of support, who is idle, and who, though able to work for his or her maintenance, refuses to do so, but lives without labor or on the charity of others.

As defined by Kansas Criminal Code, vagrancy is: (a) Engaging in an unlawful occupation; or (b) Being of the age of eighteen (18) years or over and able to work and without lawful means of support and failing or refusing to seek employment; or (c) Loitering in any community without visible means of support; or (d) Loitering on the streets or in a place open to the public with intent to solicit for immoral purposes; or (e) Deriving support in whole or in part from begging. State vagrancy statutes, however, vary greatly, and many have been declared unconstitutional because, as drawn, they purport to punish conduct which is not criminal or are worded too vaguely to inform persons of the nature of the act declared criminal. Lanzetta v. New Jersey, 306 U.S. 451, 59 S.Ct. 618, 83 L.Ed. 888.

Vagrancy laws. See Vagrancy; Visible means of support.

Vagrant. At common law, wandering or going about from place to place by idle person who had no lawful or visible means of support and who subsisted on charity and did not work, though able to do so. State v. Harlowe, 174 Wash. 227, 24 P.2d 601.

A general term, including, in English law, the several classes of idle and disorderly persons, rogues, and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues.

One who wanders from place to place; an idle wanderer, specifically, one who has no settled habitation, nor any fixed income or livelihood. A vagabond; a tramp. A person able to work who spends his time in idleness or immorality, having no property to support him and without some visible and known means of fair, honest and reputable livelihood. State v. Oldham, 224 N.C. 415, 30 S.E.2d 318, 319. One who is apt to become a public charge through his own laziness. People, on Complaint of McDonough, v. Gesino, Sp.Sess., 22 N.Y.S.2d 284, 285.

See Vagabond; Vagrancy.

Vagrant act. In English law, the statute 5 Geo. IV, c. 83, which is an act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons. The act of 17 Geo. II divided vagrants into idle and disorderly persons; rogues and vagabonds; and incorrigible rogues. Other statutes were passed as late as 32 Geo. III bearing on this subject.

Vague. Indefinite. Uncertain; not susceptible of being understood.

Vagueness doctrine. Under this principle, a law which does not fairly inform a person of what is commandable or prohibited is unconstitutional as violative of due process.

Vale /vəlɛ/. In Spanish law, a promissory note.

Valeat quantum valere potest /vəlɛt ˈkwɑntəm ˈvɔlər ˈpətəst/. It shall have effect as far as it can have effect.

Valec, valect, or vadelet /vælst/. In old English law, a young gentleman; also a servitor or gentleman of the chamber.

Valentia /vəˈlɛntiə/. L. Lat. The value or price of anything.

Valeshria /vəˈlestʃɪə/. In old English law, the proving by the kindred of the slain, one on the father’s side, and another on that of the mother, that a man was a Welshman. See Engleshire.

Valet /vəˈlɛt/. Anciently, a name denoting young gentlemen of rank and family, but afterwards applied to those of lower degree; now used for a personal servant, more particularly for hotel employee who performs personal services for guests.

Valid. Having legal strength or force, executed with proper formalities, incapable of being rightfully overthrown or set aside. Bennett v. State, 46 Ala.App. 535, 245 So.2d 570, 572. Of binding force; legally sufficient or efficacious; authorized by law. Good or sufficient in point of law; efficacious; executed with the proper formalities; incapable of being rightfully overthrown or set aside; sustainable and effective in law, as distinguished from that which exists or took place in fact or appearance, but has not the requisites to enable it to be recognized and enforced by law. A deed, will, or other instrument, which has received all the formalities required by law, is said to be valid.

Meritorious, as, a valid defense.

See also Legal.

Validate. To make valid; confirm; sanction; affirm.

Validating statute. A statute, purpose of which is to cure past errors and omissions and thus make valid what was invalid, but it grants no indulgence for the correction of future errors. Petition of Miller, 149 Pa.Super. 142, 28 A.2d 257, 258.

Validity. Legal sufficiency, in contradistinction to mere regularity.

Validity of a treaty. The term "validity," as applied to treaties, admits of two descriptions—necessary and voluntary. By the former is meant that which results from the treaties having been made by persons authorized by, and for purposes consistent with, the constitution. By voluntary validity is meant that validity which a treaty, voidable by reason of violation by the other party, still continues to retain by the silent acquiescence and will of the nation. It is voluntary, because it is at the will of the nation to let it remain or to extinguish it. The principles which govern and decide the necessary validity of a treaty are of a judicial nature, while those on which its voluntary validity depends are of a political nature.

Validity of a will. As used in will contest statute has reference only to the genuineness or legal sufficiency of will under attack. In re Elliott's Estate, 22 Wash.2d 334, 156 P.2d 427, 438.

Valid reason. These words, in a statute providing for the withdrawal of the names of petitioners for a road improvement district when valid reasons therefor are presented, mean a sound sufficient reason, such as fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, duress, etc.; a reason upon which the petitioner could support or justify his change in attitude. The word "valid" necessarily possesses an element of legal strength and force, and inconsistent positions have no such force.

Valley. As applied to a mountainous country, term refers to lowlands, in contradistinction to mountain slopes and ridges.

Valor beneficiorum /va'lar ben'efishiyor'm/. L. Lat. The value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preference, according to which the first fruits and tenths are collected and paid. It is commonly called the "king's books," by which the clergy are at present rated.

Valor maritaggii /va'lar mar'etayiyi'ja/. Lat. Value of the marriage. The amount forfeited under the ancient tenures by a ward to a guardian who had offered her a marriage without disparagement, which she refused. In feudal law, the guardian in chivalry had the right of tendering to his infant ward a suitable match, without "disparagement" (iniquity), which, if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage (valor maritaggii) to their guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give, to the guardian for such an alliance. 2 Bl.Comm. 70.

A writ which lay against the ward, on coming of full age, for that he was not married, by his guardian, for the value of the marriage, and this though no convenient marriage had been offered.

Valuable. Of financial or market value; commanding or worth a good price; of considerable worth in any respect, whether monetary or intrinsic.

Valuable consideration. A class of consideration upon which a promise may be founded, which entitles the promisee to enforce his claim against an unwilling promisor. Some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. A gain or loss to either party is not essential, it is sufficient if the party in whose favor the contract is made parts with a right which he might otherwise exert. Miller Ice Co. v. Crim, 299 Ill.App. 615, 20 N.E.2d 347. It need not be translatable into dollars and cents, but is sufficient if it consists of performance, or promise thereof, which promisor treats and considers of value to him. It is not essential that the person to whom the consideration moves should be benefited, provided the person from whom it moves is, in a legal sense, injured. The injury may consist of a compromise of a disputed claim or forbearance to exercise a legal right, the alteration in position being regarded as a detriment that forms a consideration independent of the actual value of the right forborne. Mutual promises in contract is sufficient. For Fair and valuable consideration, see that title. See also Consideration.

Valuable improvements. As used in a statute relating to the specific performance of a parol contract for the purchase of real estate, improvements of such character as add permanent value to the freehold, and such as would not likely be made by one not claiming the right to the possession and enjoyment of the freehold estate. Improvements of a temporary and unsubstantial character will not amount to such part performance as, when accompanied by possession alone, will take the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds. The valuable improvements may, however, be slight and of small value, provided they are substantial and permanent in their nature, beneficial to the freehold, and such as none but an owner would ordinarily make.

Valuable papers. This term as used in statute requiring that a holographic will devising realty be found among the "valuable papers" of decedent, in order to be effective, refers to such papers as are regarded by the testator as worthy of preservation and therefore in his estimation of some value. Fransoioli v. Podesta, 21 Tenn.App. 577, 113 S.W.2d 769, 773, 777.
Valuation. The act of ascertaining the worth of a thing. The estimated worth of a thing. See also Appraisal; Assessed valuation; Fair value; Special use valuation; Value.

Valuation list. In English law, a list of all the ratable hereditaments in a parish, showing the names of the occupier, the owner, the property, the extent of the property, the gross estimated rental, and the ratable value; prepared by the overseers of each parish in a union under section 14 of the union assessment committee act, 1862 (St. 25 & 26 Vict., c. 103), for the purposes of the poor rate.

Value. The utility of an object in satisfying, directly or indirectly, the needs or desires of human beings, called by economists “value in use,” or its worth consisting in the power of purchasing other objects, called “value in exchange.” Joint Highway Dist. No. 9 v. Ocean Shore R. Co., 128 Cal.App. 743, 18 P.2d 413, 417. Also the estimated or appraised worth of any object or property, calculated in money. To estimate the worth of; to rate at a certain price; to appraise; or to place a certain estimate of worth on in a scale of values. Hoard v. Wiley, 113 Ga.App. 328, 147 S.E.2d 782, 784.

Any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. The term is often used as an abbreviation for “valuable consideration,” especially in the phrases “purchaser for value,” “holder for value,” etc. See Consideration; Valuable consideration.

In economic consideration, the word “value,” when used in reference to property, has a variety of significations, according to the connection in which the word is employed. It may mean the cost of a production, or reproduction of the property in question, when it is sometimes called “sound value;” or it may mean the purchasing power of the property, or the amount of money which the property will command in exchange, if sold, this being called its “market value,” which in the case of any particular property may be more or less than either the cost of its production or its value measured by its utility to the present or some other owner; or the word may mean the subjective value of property, having in view its profitableness for some particular purpose, sometimes termed its “value for use.”

Salable value, actual value, market value, fair value, reasonable value, and cash value may all mean the same thing and may be designed to effect the same purpose. Cummings v. National Bank, 101 U.S. 153, 25 L.Ed. 903.

“Value,” as used in Art. 1, § 8, U.S.Const., giving Congress power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, is the true, inherent, and essential value, not depending upon accident, place, or person, but the same everywhere and to every one, and in this sense regulating the value of the coinage is merely determining and maintaining coinage composed of certain coins within certain limitations at a certain specific composition and weight.

Value of land for purpose of taxation is represented by price which would probably be paid therefor after fair negotiations between willing seller and buyer. Thaw v. Town of Fairfield, 132 Conn. 173, 43 A.2d 65, 67. See Fair market value.

Value as it relates to stolen property is the market value at the time and place of the taking, or, in case of property without a market value, the cost of replacing it. Patterson v. State, 138 Tex.Cr.R. 551, 137 S.W.2d 1030; Givens v. State, 143 Tex.Cr.R. 277, 158 S.W.2d 535, 536. As respects whether value of stolen property equals or exceeds jurisdictional amount fixed by the National Stolen Property Act, “value” of stolen property is market value at time and place of taking, if it has a market value. National Stolen Property Act, §§ 1–7, 18 U.S.C.A. § 413 et seq. Huten v. United States, C.C.A.Minn., 95 F.2d 168.

Value as used in eminent domain proceeding means market value (q.v.). Epstein v. Boston Housing Authority, 317 Mass. 297, 58 N.E.2d 135, 137. See also Just compensation; Market value.

Under U.C.C. § 1–201(44), a person gives “value” for rights if he acquires them: (a) in return for a binding commitment to extend credit or for the extension of immediately available credit whether or not drawn upon and whether or not a chargeback is provided for in the event of difficulties in collection; or (b) as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a pre-existing claim; or (c) by accepting delivery pursuant to a pre-existing contract for purchase; or (d) generally, in return for any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. See also Actual value; Agreed value; Annual value; Appraisal; Assess; Cash value; Commuted value; Consideration; Diminution in value; Double value; Face value; Fair cash market value; Fair cash value; Fair market value; Fair value; Going concern value; Improved value; Insurable value; Intrinsic value; Just compensation; Leasehold value; Market value; Net asset value; Fair value; Policy value.

Actual cash value. In insurance, its customary meaning is replacement cost new less normal depreciation, though it may be determined by current market value of similar property or by the cost to replace or repair the property.

Book value. The value at which assets of a business are carried on the books of the company. It may also refer to the net worth of a business arrived at by subtracting liabilities from assets. See also Book.

Cash surrender value. In life insurance, the amount which the insurer will pay before death when the policy is cancelled. See also Cash value.

Intrinsic value. The value which a thing has as of itself, and not the value reflecting extrinsic factors such as market conditions.

Liquidation value. The value of a business or of an asset when it is sold other than in the ordinary course of business as in the liquidation of a business.

Market value. Fair value of property as between one who wants to purchase it and another who desires to sell it. What willing purchaser will give for property under fair market conditions. People v. F. H. Smith Co., 230 App.Div. 268, 245 N.Y.S. 446, 451. Not what the owner could realize at a forced sale, but the price he could obtain after reasonable and ample time, such as would ordinarily be taken by an owner to make a sale of like property. Wade v. Rathbun, 23 Cal. App.2d Supp. 758, 67 P.2d 765, 766. See Fair cash market value; Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Net value. The “reserve” or “net value” of a life insurance policy is the fund accumulated out of the net premiums during the earlier years of the policy where the premium throughout life or a term of years exceeds the actual value of the risk. The “net value” of a policy is equivalent to “reserve,” and means that part of the annual premium paid by insured which, according to the American Experience Table of Mortality, must be set apart to meet or mature the company’s obligations to insured, the net value of a policy on a given date being its actual value, its reserve.

No par value. Stock of a corporation which has no par value but which represents a proportionate share of the ownership of the corporation.

Par value. The nominal value of stock arrived at by dividing the total stated capital stock by the number of shares authorized.

Scrap value. The value of the constituent materials and components of a thing; not its value for the purpose for which it was made.

Stated value. The dollar value of no par stock established by the corporation as constituting the capital of the corporation.

Surrender value. See Cash surrender value, supra.

True value. As referring to value at which property must be assessed, is price which would be paid therefor on assessing date to willing seller, not compelled to sell, by willing purchaser, not compelled to purchase. New York Bay R. Co. v. Kelly, 22 N.J.Misc. 204, 37 A.2d 624, 628.

Use value. The value established by the usefulness of an object and not its value for sale or exchange.

Value of matter in controversy. As used in the Judicial Code, § 24 (28 U.S.C.A. § 1331 et seq.), the pecuniary result to either party which a judgment entered in the case would directly produce, either at once or in the future. Elliott v. Empire Natural Gas Co., C.C.A.Kan., 4 F.2d 493, 497. See also Jurisdictional amount.

Value received. A phrase usually employed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a lawful consideration has been given for it. Clayton v. Clayton, 125 N.J.L. 537, 17 A.2d 496, 497. It is prima facie evidence of consideration, Moses v. Bank, 149 U.S. 298, 13 S.Ct. 900, 901, 37 L.Ed. 743; although not necessarily in money.

Valued policy. One in which a definite valuation is by agreement of both parties put on the subject-matter of the insurance and written in the face of the policy and such valuation in the absence of fraud or mistake, is conclusive on the parties. One in which both property insured and loss are valued. It is distinguished from an “open policy”, which is one where the value of the property insured is not settled in the policy. Ellis v. Hartford Livestock Ins. Co., 293 Ky. 683, 170 S.W.2d 51, 53.

Valueless. Worthless.
so fully and correctly informs a defendant of offense with which he is charged that, taking into account proof which is introduced against him, he is not misled in making his defense. People v. Guerrero, 22 Cal.2d 183, 137 P.2d 21, 24.

To constitute a variance, there must be a real and tangible difference between the allegations in the pleading and the proof offered in its support. The difference must be substantial and material. It must be one that actually misleads the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense on the merits, or, in criminal cases, one which might mislead the defense or expose a defendant to being put twice in jeopardy for the same offense. McCallister v. State, 217 Ind. 65, 26 N.E.2d 391, 393.

A variance in criminal case is an essential difference between accusation and proof, best illustrated where one crime is alleged and another proved, and test of material variance is whether offense alleged in a second indictment is the same as that alleged in the first, and accordingly, a plea of autrefois acquit must be upon a prosecution for the identical offense. U. S. v. Wills, C.C.A.Pa, 36 F.2d 855, 856.

Stipulations to vary discovery procedures are governed by Fed.R. Civ. P. 29.

The objection or doctrine of "variance" has been essentially abolished by Fed.R. Civil P. 15(b) which permits liberal amendment of the pleadings to conform to the evidence. See also Fatal variance.

See also Area variance; Departure; Irregularity.

Zoning. Permission to depart from the literal requirements of a zoning ordinance. An authorization to a property owner to depart from literal requirements of zoning regulations in utilization of his property in cases in which strict enforcement of the zoning regulations would cause undue hardship. Daniel v. District of Columbia Bd. of Zoning Adjustment, D.C.App., 329 A.2d 773, 775. A "use variance" is a variance permitting a use other than that permitted in particular district by zoning ordinance. Anderson v. Board of Appeals, Town of Chesapeake Beach, 22 Md.App. 28, 32 A.2d 220, 225.

Vas. Lat. In the civil law, a pledge; a surety; bail or surety in a criminal proceeding or civil action.

Vasectomy. Resection of the ductus deferens. Surgical excision of part of the vas deferens, resulting in sterilization of the male.

Vassal. A feudal tenant or grantee; a feudatory; the holder of a fief on a feudal tenure, and by the obligation of performing feudal services. The correlative term was "lord." The vassal himself might have been lord of some other vassal.

In later times, this word was used to signify a species of slave who owed servitude and was in a state of dependency on a superior lord. 2 Bl.Comm. 53.

Vassalage. The state or condition of a vassal.

Vassal states. In international law, states which were supposed to possess only those rights and privileges which had been expressly granted to them, but actually they seem to have been very independent. Egypt was such; also Crete.

Vasseleria. The tenure or holding of a vassal.

Vastum. L. Lat. A waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have right of commoning.

Vastum foresta vel bosel. Waste of a forest or wood. That part of a forest or wood wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed that it lay in a manner waste and barren.

Vauderie. In old European law, sorcery; witchcraft; the profession of the Vaudois.

Vaudeville. A species of theatrical entertainment, composed of isolated acts forming a balanced show.

Vavasory. The lands that a vavasour held.

Vavasour. One who was in dignity next to a baron. One who held of a baron.

V.C. An abbreviation for "vice-chancellor."

V.C.C. An abbreviation for "vice-chancellor's court."

V.E. An abbreviation for "venditioni exponas" (q.v.).

Veaow. The tenants of the manor of Bradford, in the county of Wilts, paid a yearly rent by this name to their lord, in lieu of veal paid formerly in kind.

Vecorin. In old Lombardic law, the offense of stopping one on the way; forestalling.

Vectigalia. One on the way; forestalling.

Vectigal, origine ipsa, jus cesarum et regum patrimoniale est. In Roman law, customs-duities; taxes paid upon the importation or exportation of certain kinds of merchandise. They differed from tribute, which was a tax paid by each individual. Rent from state lands.

Vectigal judicarium. In maritime law, freight.

Vehicle. That in or on which persons, goods, etc. may be carried from one place to another, especially along the ground. Any moving support or container fitted or used for the conveyance of bulky objects; a means of conveyance. That which is used as an instrument of conveyance, transmission or communication. Term refers to every device in, upon or by which a person or property is or may be transported upon a highway. Term has been held to include a "moped" (People v. Jordan, 75 Cal.App.3d Supp. 1, 142 Cal. Rptr. 401, 403), while a bicycle has been held by some courts to be a vehicle under traffic laws (Richards v. Goff, 26 Md.App. 344, 338 A.2d 80, 84), while others have held that it is not (Fowles v. Dakin, 160 Me. 392, 205 A.2d 169, 173).
VEHICULAR HOMICIDE

Vehicular homicide. Homicide caused by the illegal operation of a motor vehicle. Both intentional conduct and negligence may be the basis for such charge, although statutes vary from state to state as to the elements of the crime. See also Homicide.

Velles /vély(y)z/. L. Fr. Distresses forbidden to be repleived; the refusing to let the owner have his cattle which were distrained.

Vein. A continuous body of mineral or mineralized rock, filling a seam or fissure in the earth's crust, within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain (which boundaries clearly separate it from the neighboring rock), and having a general character of continuity in the direction of its length. McMullin v. Magnuson, 102 Colo. 230, 78 P.2d 964, 968. It includes all deposits of mineral matter found through a mineralized zone or belt coming from the same source, impressed with the same forms, and appearing to have been created by the same processes. Inyo Marble Co. v. Loundagin, 120 Cal.App. 298, 7 P.2d 1067, 1072.

The terms “principal,” “original,” and “primary,” as well as “secondary,” “accidental,” and “incidental,” have all been employed to describe the different veins found within the same surface boundaries, but their meaning is not entirely clear in all cases. They may refer to the relative importance or value of the different veins, or the relations to each other, or to the time of discovery, but the words “secondary,” “accidental,” and “incidental” are most frequently used to distinguish between the discovery vein and other veins within the same surface boundaries.

Discovery vein. That vein which served as a basis of the location, in contradistinction to secondary, accidental, and incidental veins. The primary vein for the purpose of locating a mining claim and determining which are the end and which the side lines. Where the discovery vein crosses the opposite side lines of the claim as located, the side lines become end lines, not only with respect to such vein, but for determination of extralateral rights in any other vein which apaxes within the claim.

Vejours. Viewers; persons sent by the court to take a view of any place in question, for the better decision of the right. It signifies, also, such as are sent to view those that essoin themselves de malo lecti, (i.e., excuse themselves on ground of illness) whether they be in truth so sick as that they cannot appear, or whether they do counterfeit.

Velabrum /vélábrum/. In old English law, a tollbooth.

Veltis jubeatris quirites? /véladas juwbiyédadas kwarúdy-diyz/. Lat. Is it your will and pleasure, Romans? The form of proposing a law to the Roman people.

Velle non creditur qui obsequitur imperio patris vel domini /vély nón créddiur qui obsequitii imperio patris vel domini/. He is not presumed to consent who obeys the orders of his father or his master.

Vel non /vél nón/. Or not. These words appear in the phrase “devisavit vel non” (q.v.), meaning, literally, “did he devise or not.” Examples of their use by the courts may be seen in the following quotations: “So the sufficiency vel non of the order of publication is important”; “the negligence vel non of the owner was * * * for the jury”; and “We come at last to the merits vel non of this appeal”.

Veltraria /véltré(i)ya/. The office of dog-leader, or courser.

Venal /véynal/. Pertaining to something that is bought; capable of being bought; offered for sale; mercenary. Used usually in an evil sense, such purchase or sale being regarded as corrupt and illegal.

Venaria /vénériya/. Beasts caught in the woods by hunting.

Venatio /vandysh(i)yow/. Hunting.

Vend. To transfer to another for a pecuniary equivalent; to make an object of trade, especially by hawking or peddling; to sell. Goins v. State, 194 Ark. 598, 108 S.W.2d 1082, 1083. The term is not commonly applied to the sale of real estate, although its derivatives “vendor” and “vendee” are.

Vendee. A purchaser or buyer; one to whom anything is sold. Generally used of the purchaser of real property, one who acquires chattels by sale being called a “buyer.” See also Vendor.

Vendens eandem rem duobus falsarum est /vænden(d)z iyándem rém duyówóbas fóll(i)sér(i)yas ét/. He is fraudulent who sells the same thing twice.

Vendetta. A private blood feud, in which a family seeks to avenge one of its members on the offender or his family. Stephens v. Howells Sales Co., D.C.N.Y., 16 F.2d 805, 806.

Vendible /véndi-bi/. Fit or suitable to be sold; capable of transfer by sale; merchantable.

Vendite /véndi-dit/. In old European law, a tax upon things sold in markets and public fairs.

Vendito /véndish(i)yo/w/. Lat. In the civil law, in a strict sense, sale; the act of selling; the contract of sale, otherwise called “emptio venditio.” In a broader sense, any mode or species of alienation; any contract by which the property or ownership of a thing may be transferred.

Vendition /véndishan/. Sale; the act of selling.

Venditional exponas /véndishiyównyas ekspównas/. Lat. You expose to sale. The name of a writ of execution, requiring a sale to be made, directed to a sheriff when he has levied upon goods under a fieri facias, but returned that they remained unsold for want of buyers; and in some jurisdictions it is issued to cause a sale to be made of lands, seized under a former writ, after they have been condemned or passed upon by an inquisition. Frequently abbreviated to “vend. ex.” Beeve v. U. S., 161 U.S. 104, 16 S.Ct. 532, 40 L.Ed. 633; State ex rel. First Nat. Bank v. Ogden, 173 Okt. 285, 49 P.2d 565, 567. The writ gives no new authority to the sheriff but only directs him to perform his duty under the execution. Fannin’s Ex’r v. Haney, 283 Ky. 68, 140 S.W.2d 630, 632.

Venditor /vénda-dar/. Lat. A seller; a vendor.
Vendor's lien. A creature of equity, being a lien imposed by law, which a person who transfers property by sale, particularly real estate, may use for one who sells personalty. The latter may, however, with entire propriety, be termed a vendor. A merchant; a retail dealer; a supplier; one who buys to sell. See also Vendee.

Vendor. The person who transfers property by sale, particularly real estate; "seller" being more commonly used for one who sells personalty. The latter may, however, with entire propriety, be termed a vendor. A merchant; a retail dealer; a supplier; one who buys to sell. See also Vendee.

Vendor's lien. A creature of equity, being a lien impliedly belonging to a vendor for the unpaid purchase price of land, where he has not taken any other lien or security beyond the personal obligation of the purchaser. An equitable security which arises from the fact that a vendee has received from his vendor property for which he has not paid the full consideration money, and that to enforce that payment it was just that the vendor should have a lien upon the property.

Vendue /vendyuu/vénd(y)uw/. A sale; generally a sale at public auction; and more particularly a sale so made for a protracted case. Sturdy v. Smith, Mo.App., 132 S.W.2d 1033, 1037; Causer v. Wilmot, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 777, 779; Mollett v. Beckman, Mo.App., 78 S.W.2d 866, 860. Also, a lien existing in the unpaid vendor of chattels, the same remaining in his hands, to the extent of the purchase price, where the sale was for cash, or on a term of credit which has expired, or on an agreement by which the seller is to retain possession.

In English and American law a vendor's lien is exceptional in character, and is an importation from the civil law, which found its recognition through courts of chancery, on the equitable principle that the person who had secured the estate of another ought not in conscience to be allowed to keep it and not pay full consideration money, and that to enforce that payment it was just that the vendor should have a lien upon the property.

Vendue /vendyuu/vénd(y)uw/. A sale; generally a sale at public auction; and more particularly a sale so made under authority of law, as by a constable, sheriff, tax collector, administrator, etc.

Vendue master /vend(y)uw maester/. An auctioneer.

Venerable /vaniyrval/. Sexual; as, venereal diseases.

Venerable disease /vaniyrval daizly/. One of several diseases identified with sexual intercourse. Collective term for gonorrhea, chancroid, and syphilis.

Vénale /vyn(ly)ya/. A kneeling or low prostration on the ground by penitents; pardon.

Vénale atatis /vyn(ly)ya atedyas/. A privilege granted by a prince or sovereign, in virtue of which a person is entitled to act, sui juris, as if he were of full age.

Vénale facillitas /venul fa(e)lisis /in(t)sentayyam ést dèlînkwendây/. Facility of pardon is an incentive to crime.

Vénale /vänâryrr/. Lat. To come; to appear in court. Sometimes used as the name of the writ for summoning a jury, more commonly called a "venire facias". The list of jurors summoned to serve as jurors for a particular term. A special venire is sometimes prepared for a protracted case.

Venire de novo /vanâryrr diy nômvow/. See Venire facias de novo.

Venire facias /vanâryrr féyssh(y)yas/. Lat. A judicial writ, directed to the sheriff of the county in which a cause is to be tried, commanding him that he "come to court" before the court, on a certain day therein mentioned, twelve good and lawful men of the body of his county, qualified according to law, by whom the truth of the matter may be the better known, and who are in no wise of kin either to the plaintiff or to the defendant, to make a jury of the county between the parties in the action, because as well the plaintiff as the defendant, between whom the matter in variance is, have put themselves upon that jury, and that he return the names of the jurors, etc.

Venire facias ad respondendum /vanâryryy féyssh(y)yas âd röpspondâden/. A writ to summon a person, against whom an indictment for a misdemeanor has been found, to appear and be arraigned for the offense. A warrant is now more commonly used.

Venire facias de novo /vanâryrr féyssh(y)yas diy nômvow/. A fresh or new venire, which the court grants when there has been some impropriety or irregularity in returning the jury, or where the verdict is so imperfect or ambiguous that no judgment can be given upon it, or where a judgment is reversed on appeal, and a new trial awarded. The ancient common-law mode of proceeding to a new trial was by a writ of venire facias de novo. The present day relief of "new trial" is intended to mitigate the severity of the proceeding to attaint. While a venire de novo and new trial are quite different, they are alike in that a new trial takes place in both. The material difference between them is that a venire de novo must be granted upon matters appearing upon the face of the record, but a new trial may be granted for things out of the record. The terms "venire facias de novo" and "venire de novo" are used interchangeably to denote a new trial.

Venire facias juratores /vanâryryy féyssh(y)yas jûrâtôrlyy/. A common law judicial writ directed to the sheriff, when issue was joined in an action, commanding him to cause to come to Westminster on such a day, twelve free and lawful men of his county by whom the truth of the matter at issue might be better known. This writ was abolished by section 104 of the common-law procedure act, 1852, and by section 105 a precept issued by the judges of assize is substituted in its place. The process so substituted is sometimes loosely spoken of as a "venire."

Venire facias tot matronas /vanâryrr féyssh(y)yas tôt matrównas/. A writ to summon a jury of matrons to execute the writ de ventre inspiciendo.

Venireman /vanâryryman/. A member of a panel of jurors; a juror summoned by a writ of venire facias.

Venit et dict /vynit ét diS/t/. Lat. In old pleading, comes and says.

Vente /võnt/. In French law, sale; contract of sale.
Vente aleatoire /vönt äleyatwár/. A sale subject to an uncertain event.

Vente à réméré /vönt a rémyeré/. A conditional sale, in which the seller reserves the right to redeem or repurchase at the same price. The term is used in Canada and Louisiana.

Vente aux enchères /vönt owz onshér/. An auction.

Vente /vëntar/. Lat. (ventre, Fr.) The belly; the womb; the wife. Used in law as designating the maternal parentage of children. Thus, where in ordinary phraseology we should say that A. was B.'s child by his first wife, he would be described in law as "by the first venter." A child is said to be en venter sa mere before it is born; while it is a foetus.

Ventre inspiciendo /vëntri inspishiyéndow/. See De ventre inspiciendo; Venire facias tot matronas.

Venture, v. To take (the) chances.

Venture, n. An undertaking attended with risk, especially one aiming at making money; business speculation. See also Joint enterprise; Joint venture.

Venue. Formerly spelled visne. In common law pleading and practice, a neighborhood; the neighborhood, place, or county in which an injury is declared to have been done, or fact declared to have happened. 3 Bl.Comm. 294.

The particular county, or geographical area, in which a court with jurisdiction may hear and determine a case. Venue deals with locality of suit, that is, with question of which court, or courts, of those that possess adequate personal and subject matter jurisdiction may hear the specific suit in question. Japan Gas Lighter Ass'n v. Ronson Corp., D.C.N.J., 257 F.Supp. 219, 224. It relates only to place where or territory within which either party may require case to be tried. Cushing v. Doudistal, 278 Ky. 775, 129 S.W.2d 527, 528, 530. It has relation to convenience of litigants and may be waived or laid by consent of parties. Iselin v. La Coste, C.C.A.La., 147 F.2d 791, 795.

The general venue statute governing civil actions in U.S. district courts is 28 U.S.C.A. § 1391.

In federal cases the prosecutor's discretion regarding the location of the prosecution is limited by Article III, § 2, U.S.Const., which requires trial in the state where the offense "shall have been committed," and the Sixth Amendment, which guarantees an impartial jury "of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed."

Venue does not refer to jurisdiction at all. Arganbright v. Good, 46 Cal.App.2d Supp. 877, 116 P.2d 186. "Jurisdiction" of the court means the inherent power to decide a case, whereas "venue" designates the particular county or city in which a court with jurisdiction may hear and determine the case. Stanton Trust and Savings Bank v. Johnson, 104 Mont. 235, 65 P.2d 1188, 1189. As such, while a defect in venue may be waived by the parties, lack of jurisdiction may not.

See also Change of venue; Forum conveniens; Forum non conveniens.

Federal criminal cases. Except as otherwise permitted by statute or by the rules, the prosecution shall be had in a district in which the offense was committed. The court shall fix the place of trial within the district with due regard to the convenience of the defendant and the witnesses. Fed.R.Crim.P. 18.

Veracity. Truthfulness; accuracy.

Veray /vərəy/. L. Fr. True. An old form of vrai. Thus, veray, or true tenant, is one who holds in fee-simple; veray tenant by the manner, is the same as tenant by the manner (q.v.), with this difference only: that the fee-simple instead of remaining in the lord, is given by him or by the law to another.

Verba /vərba/. Lat. (Plural of verbum.) Words.

Verba accliplenda sunt cum effectu, ut sortiantur effectum /vərba akəspiyəndə sənt kəm afəkt(ɨ)yjuw, ət sərhəsiyəntər afəktəm/. Words are to be received with effect, so that they may produce effect.

Verba accliplenda sunt secundum subjectam materiam /vərba akəspiyəndə sənt səkəndəm subjəktəm mətəriyəm/. Words are to be understood with reference to the subject-matter.

Verba accliplenda ut sortiantur effectum /vərba akəspiyəndə ət sərhəsiyəntər afəktəm/. Words are to be taken so that they may have some effect.

Verba allegoria, ad in dubio sensu posita, intelliguntur digniori et potentiori sensu /vərba ələgiəra, ād ən dəbju ˈsenso pəˈsa, ɪnˈtɪliŋ منتər dənˈgiəri ət ˈpəntənioʊri ˈsenso/. Equivocal words, and such as are put in a doubtful sense, are [to be] understood in the more worthy and effectual sense [in their best and most effective sense].

Verba allegorici debent; debent intelligi ut allegorici operentur /vərba ələgiəriˈkɔ diˈbent; dəˈbent ɪnˈtɪliŋɡi ət ələgiəriˈkɔ oˈpɛrəntʊr/. Words ought to have some operation; they ought to be interpreted in such a way as to have some operation.

Verba allegorici operant, verba cum effectu sunt accliplenda /vərba ələgiəriˈkɔ əˈpɛrənt, vərba kəm afəkt(ɨ)yjuw sənt akəspiyəndə/. Words are to be taken so as to have effect.

Verba artis ex arte /vərba ˈɑːrdəs eks ˈɑːrdi/. Terms of art should be explained from the art.

Verba cancellarii /vərba kənˈsæləəri. Words of the chancery. The technical style of writs framed in the office of chancery.

Verba chartarum fortius acclipluntur contra proferentem /vərba ˈkɑːtərəm ˈfoːriət(ɨ)yəs akəspiyəntər kəntrə prəˈferəntəm/. The words of charters are to be received more strongly against the grantor [or the person offering them].
Verba cum effectu accliplenda sunt /vārba kām afekt(y)uw aksipiyanda sāṁ/. Words ought to be used so as to give them their effect.

Verba currentis monetae, tempus solutionis designant /vārba kāhrēntas maniydīy, tēmpos sāl(y)uwshiyōwnas dēzagent/. The words "current money" designate current at the time of payment.

Verba debent intelligi cum effectu ut res magis valeat quam pereat /vārba dēbant intelēlāy kām afekt(y)uw, āt rīȳz mēyās vālyīt kwām pēryīt/. Words ought to be understood with effect, that a thing may rather be preserved than destroyed.

Verba debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur /vārba dēbant intelēlāy āt ālākwaď ṭāpārērant/. Words ought to be understood so as to have some operation.

Verba dicta de persona intelligi debent de conditione personae /vārba diktā diy persōwns intelēlāy dēbant diy kandishtiyōwns persōwny/. Words spoken of a person are to be understood of the condition of the person.

Verba fortius accipienda sunt /vārba fōrsh(y)as aksipiyantā kōntrā pōfārantm/. Words are to be taken most strongly against him who uses them.

Verba generalia generaliter sunt intelligenda /vārba jenārēy(ī)yā jenārēyadār sānt intelēlāyēndā/. General words are to be generally understood.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel aptitudinem personae /vārba jenārēy(ī)yā réstrīngiāntā ēd habilētēyāmd rīyā vēl āptat(y)uwdanam persōwny/. General words must be narrowed either to the nature of the subject-matter or to the aptitude of the person.

Verba illata (relata) inesse videntur /vārba il-latā (relatā) inēsy vēntantar/"relēyda"/. Words referred to are to be considered as if incorporated.

Verba in differenti materia per prium, non per posterium, Intellegienda sunt /vārba in diferēntay matiāryā pēr prīyās, nōn pēr poštīryās, intelēlāyēs sānt/. Words on a different subject are to be understood by what precedes, not by what comes after. A maxim of the civil law.

Verba intelligienda sunt in casu posibilii /vārba intelēlāyēs sānt in kēy(y)uw poṣibalay/. Words are to be understood in [or "of," or "in reference to"] a possible case. A maxim of the civil law.

Verba intensioni, non e contra, debent inservire /vārba intēnshiyōwny, nōn lī kōntā, dēbant inšarvāryy/. 8 Coke, 94. Words ought to be made subservient to the intent, not the intent to the words. Bailey v. Abington, 201 Ark. 1072, 148 S.W.2d 176, 179.

Verba ita sunt intelligenda, ut res magis valeat quam pereat /vārba ʔyādā sānt intelēlāyēndā, āt rīȳz mēyās vālyīt kwām pēryīt/. The words [of an instrument] are to be so understood, that the subject-matter may rather be of force than perish [rather be preserved than destroyed]; or, in other words, that the instrument may have effect, if possible. 2 Bl.Comm. 380.

Verbal. Strictly, of or pertaining to words; expressed in words, whether spoken or written, but commonly in spoken words; hence, by confusion, spoken; oral. Parol; by word of mouth; as, verbal agreement, verbal evidence; or written, but not signed, or not executed with the formalities required for a deed or prescribed by statute in particular cases.

Verbal act doctrine. Under this doctrine, utterances accompanying some act or conduct to which it is desired to give legal effect are admissible where conduct to be characterized by words is material to issue and equivocal in its nature, and words accompany conduct and aid in giving it legal significance. Keefe v. State, 50 Ariz. 293, 295, 72 P.2d 425, 427. Under doctrine, where declarations of an individual are so connected with his acts as to derive a degree of credit from such connection, independently of the declaration, the declaration becomes part of the transaction and is admissible. The "verbal act doctrine" and the "res gestae doctrine" coincide practically and serve equally to admit certain sorts of statements, but they are nevertheless wholly distinct in their nature and in their right to exist. American Employers Ins. Co. v. Wentworth, 90 N.H. 112, 5 A.2d 265, 269. See also Res gestae.

Verbal assaults. See Threats.

Verbal note. A memorandum or note, in diplomacy, not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which perhaps is not required; and, on the other hand, to guard against the supposition that it is forgotten, or that there is an intention of not prosecuting it any further.

Verbal process. In Louisiana, procès verbal (q.v.).

Verba mere *quivoca, si per communem usum loquendi Verbal assaults. See Threats. opposed [taken in a contrary sense], nay, we may disregard them altogether, in order that the [general] words [of an instrument] may be restored to a sound meaning. A maxim of the civilians.

Verba ordinatio sustain verificari possunt in sua vera significatio, trahil ad extraneum intellectum non debent /vārbā odīnāti̓ylovēnəm kwōnôd vēhəvaskēray pōsant in s(y)uwa vi knā sa̓faka vēhəvaskēyōvniy, trēẙhav ād akskērey(l)yam intēlēktam nōn debent/. When the words of an ordinance can be carried into effect in their own true meaning, they ought not to be drawn to a foreign intendment. A maxim of the civilians.

Verba posteriora propter certitudinem addita, ad priora quae certitūdine indigent, sunt referenda /vārbā po̬s̊tərīyərə prōptər sərdət(y)əwədənəm ādədə, ād prəyərə kwəyī sərdət(y)əwədənən ɨndə̱ntə̱nə̱nt, sənt rēfərən̊ədən/. Subsequent words, added for the purpose of certainty, are to be referred to the preceding words which require the certainty.

Verba precaria /vārbə prəkərə(ɨ)yə/. In the civil law, precatory words; words of trust, or used to create a trust.

Verba pro re et subjecta materia accipi debent /vārbə prəw rə̊y ət səbˈjɛktə mətər(ɨ)yə, əd ə̱pərət(ɨ)yə, sə̱nt rēfərən̊əntə/. Words ought to be understood in favor of the thing and subject-matter. A maxim of the civilians.

Verba que aliquid operari possunt non debent esse superflos /vārbə kwəyī ələskəwəd əpərərəy pōsant nōn dēbrånəs əsɨ sopərfəsuwə/. Words can have any kind of operation ought not to be [considered] superfluous.

Verba, quantumvis generalia, ad aptitudinem restrin-gantur, etiam in nullam aliam paterentur restrictionem /vārbə, kwə̊ntəməvəs jə̊nərət(ɨ)yə, əd ə̱pətət(y)əwədənəm rēstrəŋgəntər, əšhɨ̊yəməs nə̱lə̱m ə̱y(l)yəm pədə̱rəntər rəstrəkshɨ̊yəwnə̱m/. Words, howsoever general, are restrained to fitness (i.e., to harmonize with the subject-matter), though they would bear no other restriction.

Verba relata hac maxime operantur per referentiam, ut in els inesse videntur /vārbə rələyə hək məksəməy opənəntər pə rə̱fərən(h)yəm, əd in ɨsəy ɨnəsiy vədəntər/.. Related words [words connected with others by reference] have this particular operation by the reference, that they are considered as being inserted in those [clauses which refer to them]. Words to which reference is made in an instrument have the same effect and operation as if they were inserted in the clauses referring to them.

Verba relata inesse videntur /vārbə rələyə ɨnəsiy vədəntər/.. Words to which reference is made seem to be incorporated.

Verba secundum materiam subjectam intelligi nemo est qui nesciat /vārbə sə̱kəndəm mətər(ɨ)yəm sə̱bˈjɛktəm intələ̱jəy nɨ̱məw ə̱s kwəẙ nə̱shə̱ytə/. There is no one who does not know that words are to be understood according to their subject-matter.

Verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiori sensu /vārbə ə̱məpər əksɨ̊pi̊yəndə sə̱nt ɨn ə̱mɨ̊shɨ̊yərəy sən(t)(ɨ)yəw/. Words are always to be taken in the milder sense.

Verba strictae significations ad latam extendi possunt, si subit ratio /vārbə strɪk̊tiə signəfəkəsiəviəwnəs ə̱d ə̱ləyəm əkəstənə́dəy pōsant, sə̱y ə̱sə̱bət ɾəˈʃiʃ(ɨ)yəw/. Words of a strict or narrow signification may be extended to a broad meaning, if there be ground in reason for it. A maxim of the civilians.

Verba sunt indices animi /vārbə sə̱nt ɨndsə̱sə̱li̊z ə̱nə̱məy/. Words are the indices or indicators of the mind or thought.

Verbis standum ubi nulla ambiguitas /vārbəs stə̱ndəm ūwəbəy nə̱lə̱m əmbəgyəwə̱təsə̱/. One must abide by the words where there is no ambiguity.

Verbum imperfecti temporis rem adhuc imperfectam significat /vārbəm ɪmpərfəktəy tə̱mpərəs ɾəm ə̱də̱hək ɪmpərfəktəm signəfəkətə/. The imperfect tense of the verb indicates an incomplete matter.

Verderer, or verderor /vərˈdrərə/. An officer of the king’s forest, who is sworn to maintain and keep the assizes of the forest, and to view, receive, and enroll the attachments and presentments of all manner of trespasses of vert and venison in the forest.

Verdict. From the Latin “veredictum,” a true declaration. Clark v. State, 170 Tenn. 494, 499, 97 S. W. 2d 644, 646. The formal decision or finding made by a jury, impaneled and sworn for the trial of a cause, and reported to the court (and accepted by it), upon the matters or questions duly submitted to them upon the trial. The definitive answer given by the jury to the court concerning the matters of fact committed to the jury for their deliberation and determination. Ralston v. Stump, 75 Ohio App. 375, 62 N. E. 2d 293, 294, 31 O. O. 43.

The usual verdict, one where the jury decides which side wins (and how much, sometimes), is called a general verdict. When the jury is asked to answer specific questions of fact, it is called a special verdict. See General verdict and Special verdict below.

In criminal cases the verdict shall be unanimous, and shall be returned by the jury to the judge in open court. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31. In civil cases the parties may stipulate that a verdict of a stated majority of the jurors shall be taken as the verdict of the jury. Fed.R.Civ.P. 48.

See also Polling the jury.

Chance verdict. One determined by hazard or lot, and not by the deliberate understanding and agreement of the jury. While formerly used, such are now illegal.

Compromise verdict. One which is the result, not of justifiable concession of views, but of improper compromise of the vital principles which should have controlled the decision. Although it is proper for jurors to harmonize their views and reach a verdict with proper regard for each other’s opinions, it is not proper for any juror to surrender his conscientious convictions on any material issue in return for a relinquishment by others of their like settled opinions on another issue, producing a result which does not command the approval of the whole panel.

Directed verdict. Verdict ordered by the judge as a matter of law when he rules that the party with the burden of proof has failed to make out a prima facie case. The judge under these circumstances orders the jury to return a verdict for the other party. See Fed.R.Civil P. 50.

Excessive verdict. See that title.

False verdict. One obviously opposed to the principles of right and justice; an untrue verdict. Formerly, if a jury gave a false verdict, the party injured by it might sue out and prosecute a writ of attainder against them, either at common law or on the statute 11 Hen. VII, c. 24, at his election, for the purpose of reversing the judgment and punishing the jury for their verdict; but not where the jury erred merely in point of law, if they found according to the judge's direction. The practice of setting aside verdicts and granting new trials, however, so superseded the use of attainds that there is no instance of one to be found in the books or reports later than in the time of Elizabeth, and it was altogether abolished by 6 Geo. IV, c. 50, § 60.

General verdict. A verdict whereby the jury find either for the plaintiff or for the defendant in general terms; the ordinary form of a verdict. Glenn v. Sumner, 132 U.S. 152, 10 S.Ct. 41, 33 L.Ed. 301. A finding by the jury in the terms of the issue, or all the issues, referred to them. That by which they pronounce generally upon all or any of the issues, either in favor of the plaintiff or defendant;—distinguished from a special verdict, which is that by which the jury finds facts only.

General verdict with interrogatories. The court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. The court shall give such explanation or instruction as may be necessary to enable the jury both to make answers to the interrogatories and to render a general verdict, and the court shall direct the jury both to make written answers and to render a general verdict. When the general verdict and the answers are harmonious, the appropriate judgment upon the verdict and answers shall be entered. When the answers are consistent with each other but one or more is inconsistent with the general verdict, judgment may be entered for the plaintiff or defendant as to whom it has agreed; if the jury cannot agree with respect to all, the defendant or defendants as to whom it does not agree may be tried again. Fed.R.Civil.P. 31(b).

Partial verdict. In criminal law, a verdict by which the jury acquits the defendant as to a part of the accusation and finds him guilty as to the residue.

Privy verdict. One given after the judge has left or adjourned the court, and the jury, being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement, obtain leave to give their verdict privily to the judge out of court. Such a verdict is of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. This practice is now superseded by that of rendering a sealed verdict.

Public verdict. A verdict openly delivered by the jury in court.

Quotient verdict. See that title.

Sealed verdict. See Sealed.

Several defendants. If there are two or more defendants, the jury at any time during its deliberations may return a verdict or verdicts with respect to a defendant or defendants as to whom it has agreed; if the jury cannot agree with respect to all, the defendant or defendants as to whom it does not agree may be tried again. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31(b).

Special verdict. The "special" verdict is a statement by the jury of the facts it has found—in essence, the jury's answers to questions submitted to it; the court determines which party, based on those answers, is to have judgment. With the advent of the apportionment rule among tortfeasors, closely followed by the adoption of a rule of comparative negligence to replace the traditional rule of contributory negligence, the need to have the jury reveal its specific findings of percentages of fault in personal injury and wrongful death cases has given rise to the increased use of the special verdict.

The court may require a jury to return only a special verdict in the form of a special written finding upon each issue of fact. In that event, the court may submit to the jury written questions susceptible of categorical or other brief answers or may submit written forms of the several special findings which might properly be made under the pleadings and evidence; or it may use such other method of submitting the issues and requiring the written findings thereon as it deems most appropriate. The court shall give to the jury such explanation and instructions concerning the matter thus submitted as may be necessary to enable the jury to make its findings upon each issue. Fed.R.Civil P. 49(a).

Stipulation on majority verdict. The parties may stipulate that a verdict of a stated majority of the jurors shall be taken as the verdict of the jury. Fed.R.Civil P. 48.

Verdict by lot. See Chance verdict, supra.

Verdict contrary to law. A verdict which law does not authorize jury to render on evidence because conclusion drawn is not justified thereby. One which is contrary to the principles of law as applied to the facts which the jury were called upon to try and contrary to the principles of law which should govern the cause. Piepho v. Gesse, 106 Ind.App. 450, 18 N.E.2d 468, 471. See Non obstante veredicto.
VERDICT

Verdict subject to opinion of court. A verdict returned by the jury, the entry of judgment upon which is subject to the determination of points of law reserved by the court upon the trial.

Verdict, estoppel by. Rule that where some controlling fact or question material to determination of both causes has been adjudicated in former suit by court of competent jurisdiction, and same fact or question is again an issue between the same parties, adjudication in first cause will, if properly presented, be conclusive of the same question in later suit, irrespective of whether cause of action is the same in both suits. People v. Haran, 27 Ill.2d 229, 188 N.E.2d 707, 709. "Estoppel by verdict" or "collateral estoppel" provides that prior judgment must be deemed conclusive as to all right of parties and their privies when same parties or their privies are involved with same issues actually or necessarily finally determined by court of competent jurisdiction in earlier, but different, cause of action. Riley v. Unknown Owners of 304 North Oak Park Ave. Bldg., Oak Park, 25 Ill.App.3d 895, 324 N.E.2d 78, 85. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Judgment, estoppel by Res (Res judicata).

Veredictum /véhradiktam/. L. Lat. In old English law, a verdict; a declaration of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to a jury for trial.

Veredictum, quasi dictum veritatis; ut judicium quasi juris dictum /véhradiktam, kwéyssay diktam, véhratéyas; ßt juwvdish(j)yam kwéyssay jùras diktam/. The verdict is, as it were, the dictum [saying] of truth; as the judgment is the dictum of law.

Verge, or virge /várj/. In old English law, the compass of the royal court, which bounds the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the household; it seems to have been twelve miles about. An uncertain quantity of land from fifteen to thirty acres. Also a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant to a copyhold estate.

Vergelt /vérgelt/. In Saxon law, a mulct or fine for a crime. See Weregild.

Verification. Confirmation of correctness, truth, or authenticity, by affidavit, oath, or deposition. Affidavit of truth of matter stated and object of verification is to assure good faith in averments or statements of fact or truthfulness of; to check or test the accuracy or exactness of; to confirm or establish the authenticity of; to authenticate; to maintain; to affirm; to support; second; back as a friend. MacNeill v. Macdon, 194 Ga. 802, 22 S.E.2d 653, 654. See also Verification.

Verify /véhraliy/. In very truth; beyond doubt or question; in fact; certainly; truly; confidently; really.

Veritas, a quocunque dictur, a Deo est /véhhratás, éy kwoðkákwyv disdará, éy diyów ést/. Truth, by whomsoever pronounced, is from God.

Veritas demonstrationis tollit errorem nominis /véhhratás démanshréshiyównas tólár éhrórm nómmánas/. The truth of the description removes an error in the name.

Veritas habenda est in juratore; justitia et judicium in judice /véhhratás habénda ést ínjúrtóri; jástish(i)yam in júdjasíy/jam/. Truth is the desideratum in a juror; justice and judgment in a judge.

Veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi /véhhratás náy(h)al varýdar náysay abskónday/. Truth fears nothing but to be hid.

Veritas nimium altercando amittitur /véhhratás nímiyam óltárkándów smídaðar/. Truth is lost by excessive altercation.

Veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis /véhhratás nómmánas tólár éhrórm démanshréshiyównas/. The truth of the name takes away the error of description.

Veritas, que minime defensatur opprimitur; et quia non improbat, approbat /véhhratás, kwíy mímíyímin défenséydar aprimádar; ét kwáy nóon ímprabat, ímprabat/. Truth which is not sufficiently defended is overpowering; and he who does not disapprove, approves.

Veritatem quia non libere pronunclatur prodictor est veritas /véhhratéydas kwíy non líbráy pránánsheitshíypródódar est véhhratéyas/. He who does not freely speak the truth is a betrayer of truth.

Verity. Truth; truthfulness; conformity to fact. The records of a court "import uncontrollable verity."

Verna /vérná/. Lat. In the civil law, a slave born in his master's house.

Versari /værseray/. Lat. In the civil law, to be employed; to be conversant. Versari male in tutela, to mislead one's self in a guardianship.

Versus /værsus/. Lat. Against. In the title of a cause, the name of the plaintiff is put first, followed by the word "versus," then the defendant's name. Thus, "Fletcher versus Peck," or "Fletcher against Peck." The word is commonly abbreviated "vs." or "v." Vs. and versus have become ingrafted upon the English language; their meaning is as well understood and their use quite as appropriate as the word against could be.
Vert /vârt/. In old English law, that power which a man had, by royal grant, to cut green wood in a forest. In heraldry, green color, called “venus” in the arms of princes, and “emerald” in those of peers, and expressed in engravings by lines in bend.

Vertical integration. Ownership or control of network of production and distribution of goods from raw materials to sale to ultimate consumer.

Vertical merger. Merger between two firms that have a buyer-seller relationship; that is, one produces a product that is then sold to the other. U. S. v. First Nat. Bank of Jackson, D.C.Miss., 301 F.Supp. 1161, 1190. Acquisition of one company which buys product sold by acquiring company or which sells product bought by acquiring company. U. S. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., D.C.Conn., 306 F.Supp. 766, 774. See also Merger.

Vertical price-fixing contract. A contract between producers and wholesalers or distributors, between producers and retailers, or between wholesalers or distributors and retailers and not between producers themselves, between wholesalers themselves, or between retailers themselves as to sale or retail prices. Pazen v. Silver Rod Stores, 130 N.J.Eq. 407, 22 A.2d 237, 239; Seagram Distillers Corporation v. Old Dearborn Distributing Co., 363 Ill. 610, 2 N.E.2d 940, 942. See also Price-fixing.

Venus /vînas/. Lat. True; truthful; genuine; actual; real; just.

Very. As an adjective means real, actual, or true, but as an adverb means in a high degree, exceedingly, extremely; to no small extent. Benoist v. Driveaway Co. of Missouri, Mo.App., 122 S.W.2d 86, 90.

Very high degree of care. That degree of care that would be used by a very cautious, prudent, and competent person under like or similar circumstances. Wichita Valley Ry. Co. v. Williams, Tex.Civ.App., 3 S.W.2d 141, 142.

Very lord and very tenant. They that are immediate lord and tenant one to another.

Vessel. A ship, brig, sloop, or other craft used, or capable of being used, in navigation on water.

In order to be a “vessel,” for purposes of an action under Jones Act, the structure’s purpose must to some reasonable degree be the transportation of passengers, cargo or equipment from place to place across navigable waters. Buna v. Pacific Far East Line, Inc., D.C.Cal., 441 F.Supp. 1360, 1364. Though, the term “vessel,” in admiralty law, is not limited to ships or vessels engaged in commerce. St. Hilaire Moye v. Henderson, C.A.Ark., 496 F.2d 973, 979. Many special purpose craft, such as dredges, floating derricks and barges equipped for special purposes or operations are “vessels” within meaning of Jones Act, and persons regularly employed aboard such a vessel in aid of its purposes are “seamen.” Hill v. Diamond, C.A.Va., 311 F.2d 789, 791, 792. On the other hand, however, everything that floats is not necessarily a “vessel,” in pursuance of Jones Act. Bennett v. Perini Corp., C.A.Mass., 510 F.2d 114, 116. For example, a floating dry dock which was moored by chains and cables to shipyard dock at time of injury to shipyard employee and which was in use as a dry dock was not a “vessel” and therefore no warranty of seaworthiness arose. Keller v. Dravo Corp., C.A.La., 441 F.2d 1239, 1244.

Foreign vessel. A vessel owned by residents in, or sailing under the flag of, a foreign nation.

Public vessel. One owned and used by a nation or government for its public service, whether in its navy, its revenue service, or otherwise.

Vest. To give an immediate, fixed right of present or future enjoyment. Baldwin v. Fleck, Tex.Civ.App., 168 S.W.2d 904, 909. To accrue to; to be fixed; to take effect.

To clothe with possession; to deliver full possession of land or of an estate; to give seisin; to enfeoff. See also Vested.

Vesta /vēsta/. The crop on the ground.

Vested. Fixed; accrued; settled; absolute. Having the character or given the rights of absolute ownership; not contingent; not subject to be defeated by a condition precedent. To be “vested,” a right must be more than a mere expectation based on an anticipation of the continuance of an existing law; it must have become a title, legal or equitable, to the present or future enforcement of a demand, or a legal exemption from the demand of another. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Richardselle, Tex.Civ.App., 528 S.W.2d 280, 284. Said of pension plan benefits that are not contingent on the employee continuing to work for the employer. See also Accrue; Vest.

Vested devise. See Devise.

Vested estate. An interest clothed with a present, legal, and existing right of alienation. Chaisson v. Chaisson, Tex.Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 961, 964. Any estate, whether in possession or not, which is not subject to any condition precedent and unperformed. The interest may be either a present and immediate interest, or it may be a future but unconditional, and therefore transmissible, interest. Estate by which present interest is invariably fixed to remain to determinate person on determination of preceding freehold estate. An estate, when the person or the class which takes the remainder is in existence or is capable of being ascertained when the prior estate vests, Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Kellogg, C.C.A.3, 119 F.2d 54, 57; or when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present right of future enjoyment.

Vested gift. A gift that is absolute and not contingent or conditional. A gift is vested if it is immediate, notwithstanding that its enjoyment may be postponed. A future gift when the right to receive it is not subject to a condition precedent.

Vested in interest. A legal term applied to a present fixed right of future enjoyment; as reversions, vested remainders, such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain.

Vested in possession. A legal term applied to a right of present enjoyment actually existing. See Vest.
VESTED INTEREST

Vested Interest. A present right or title to a thing, which carries with it an existing right of alienation, even though the right to possession or enjoyment may be postponed to some uncertain time in the future, as distinguished from a future right, which may never materialize or ripen into title, and it matters not how long or for what length of time the future possession or right of enjoyment may be postponed, if the present right exists to alienate and pass title. Fugazzi v. Fugazzi’s Committee, 275 Ky. 62, 120 S.W.2d 779, 781. A future interest not dependent upon an uncertain period or event, or a fixed present right of future enjoyment. When a person has a right to immediate possession on determination of preceding or particular estate. One in which there is a present fixed right, either of present enjoyment or of future enjoyment. Painter v. Herschberger, 340 Mo. 347, 100 S.W.2d 532, 535. It is not the uncertainty of enjoyment in the future, but the uncertainty of the right of enjoyment, which makes the difference between a “vested” and a “contingent” interest. A future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right, defeasible or indefeasible, to the immediate possession of the property, upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent interest.

Vested legacy. A legacy given in such terms that there is a fixed, indefeasible right to its payment. A legacy payable at a future time, certain to arrive, and not subject to conditions precedent, is vested, where there is a person in esse at the testator’s death capable of taking when the time arrives, though his interest may be altogether defeated by his own death. A legacy is said to be vested when the words of the testator making the bequest convey a transmissible interest, whether present or future, to the legatee in the legacy. Thus a legacy to one to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years is a vested legacy, because it is given unconditionally and absolutely, and therefore vests an immediate interest in the legatee, of which the enjoyment only is deferred or postponed.

Vested pension. Said of a pension plan when an employee (or his or her estate) has rights to all the benefits purchased with the employer’s contributions to the plan even if the employee is not employed by this employer at the time of retirement. Vesting of qualified pension plans is governed by the Employees Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).

Vested remainder. See Remainder.

Vested rights. In constitutional law, rights which have so completely and definitely accrued to or settled in a person that they are not subject to be defeated or canceled by the act of any other private person, and which it is right and equitable that the government should recognize and protect, as being lawful in themselves, and settled according to the then current rules of law, and of which the individual could not be deprived arbitrarily without injustice, or of which he could not justly be deprived otherwise than by the established methods of procedure and for the public welfare. Such interests as cannot be interfered with by retrospective laws; interests which it is proper for state to recognize and protect and of which individual cannot be deprived arbitrarily without injustice.

American States Water Service Co. of California v. Johnson, 31 Cal.App.2d 606, 88 P.2d 770, 774. Immediate or fixed right to present or future enjoyment and one that does not depend on an event that is uncertain. A right complete and consummated, and of such character that it cannot be divested without the consent of the person to whom it belongs, and fixed or established, and no longer open to controversy. State ex rel. Milligan v. Ritter’s Estate, Ind.App., 46 N.E.2d 736, 743.

Vestigial words /vestij(ly)am/. Lat. In the law of evidence, vestige, mark, or sign; a trace, track, or impression left by a physical object.

Vesting order. In English law, an order which may be granted by the chancery division of the high court of justice (and formerly by chancery), passing the legal estate in lieu of a conveyance. Commissioners also, under modern statutes, have similar powers.

Vestry. In ecclesiastical law, the place in a church where the priest’s vestures are deposited. Also an assembly of the minister, church-wardens, and parishioners, usually held in the vestry of the church, or in a building called a “vestry-hall,” to act upon business of the church.

Vestry-cess /vestriyk£ss/. A rate levied in Ireland for parochial purposes, abolished by St. 27 Vict., c. 17.

Vestry-clerk /vestriyklark/ /klark/. An officer appointed to attend vestries, and take an account of their proceedings, etc.

Vestry-men /véstriyman/. A select number of parishioners elected in large and populous parishes to take care of the concerns of the parish; so called because they used ordinarily to meet in the vestry of the church.

Vestura /vest(y)urə/. A crop of grass or corn. Also a garment; metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin.

Vestura terre /vest(y)urə téhriə/. In old English law, the vesture of the land; that is, the corn, grass, underwood, sweepage, and the like.

Vesture /véschar/. In old English law, profit of land. “How much the vesture of an acre is worth.”

Vesture of land /véschar av lænd/. A phrase including all things, trees excepted, which grow upon the surface of the land, and clothe it externally.

Veteran. In general, any honorably discharged soldier, sailor, marine, nurse, or army field clerk, who has served in military service of the United States.

Veterans Administration. A thorough system of benefits for veterans and dependents is administered by the Veterans Administration (VA). These benefits include compensation payments for disabilities or death related to military service; pension based on financial need for totally disabled veterans or certain survivors for disabilities or death not related to military service; education and rehabilitation; home loan guaranty; burial, including cemeteries, markers, flags, etc.; and a comprehensive medical program involving a widespread system of nursing homes, clinics, and hospitals.

Vetex statuta /vīdara stat(y)udara/. Lat. Ancient statutes. The English statutes from Magna Charta to the end of the reign of Edward II are so called; those from the beginning of the reign of Edward III being contradistinguished by the appellation of "Nova Statuta."

Veterinarian. One who practices the art of treating diseases and injuries of domestic animals, surgically or medically.

Vetutum namium /vīydam nēydam/. L. Lat. Where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin, the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction in plácitum de vetito namio.

Veto (Lat. I forbid.) The refusal of assent by the executive officer whose assent is necessary to perfect a law which has been passed by the legislative body, and the message which is usually sent to such body by the executive, stating such refusal and the reasons therefor. A refusal by the president or a governor to sign into law a bill that has been passed by a legislature. In the case of a presidential veto, the bill can still become a law if two-thirds of each House of Congress votes to override the veto. Art. I, § 7, U.S.Const.

It is either absolute or qualified, according as the effect of its exercise is either to destroy the bill finally, or to prevent its becoming law unless again passed by a stated proportion of votes or with other formalities. Or the veto may be merely suspensive.

Item veto. The power which governors possess in most States to veto items in appropriation bills without affecting any other provisions of such bills.

Pocket veto. Non-approval of a legislative act by the president or state governor, with the result that it fails to become a law. Such is not the result of a written disapproval (a veto in the ordinary form), but rather by remaining silent until the adjournment of the legislative body, that when that adjournment takes place before the expiration of the period allowed by the constitution for the examination of the bill by the executive. Art. I, § 7, U.S.Const.

Veto power. Executive's power conditionally to prevent acts passed by Legislature which have not yet become law. Fitzsimmons v. Leon, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 141 F.2d 886, 888. See Veto.

Vetus jus /vīydas jas/. Lat. A term used in the civil law, sometimes to designate the law of the Twelve Tables, and sometimes merely a law which was in force previous to the passage of a subsequent law.

Vex. To harass, disquiet, annoy; as by repeated litigation upon the same facts.
In old English law, a way; a public road; a foot, horse, and cart way.

Vla antiqua via est tuta /váya antáykwá váya ést t(y)úwds/. The old way is the safe way.

Viability. Capability of living. A term used to denote power a new-born child possesses of continuing its independent existence. That stage of fetal development when the life of the unborn child may be continued indefinitely outside the womb by natural or artificial life-supportive systems. The constitutionality of this statutory definition (V.A.M.S. (Mo.), § 188.015) was upheld in Planned Parenthood of Central Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L.Ed.2d 788.

Viavel. Livable; having the appearance of being able to live; capable of life. This term is applied to a newly-born infant, and especially to one prematurely born, which is not only born alive, but in such a state of organic development as to make possible the continuance of its life. See Viability; Viable child.

Viable child. Viable unborn child, within protection of the womb even if only in an incubator. Sylvia v. Gober, 101 R.I. 76, 220 A.2d 222, 223. See also Viability; Viable child.

Vicarial tithes /vaker(i)y3l taydz/. Petty or small tithes from the incumbent of a non-appropriated benefice, as distinguished from the incumbent of a non-appropriated benefice, as a parsonage is of a parson. 1 Bl.Comm. 387, 388.

Vicar general. An ecclesiastical officer who assists the archbishop in the discharge of his office.

Vicarious liability. Indirect legal responsibility; for example, the liability of an employer for the acts of an employee, or, a principal for torts and contracts of an agent.

Vicarage. In English ecclesiastical law, the living or benefice of a vicar, as a parsonage is of a parson. 1 Bl.Comm. 387, 388.

Vice, adj. Lat. In the place or stead; substitution for. As applied to an animal, a bad habit or failing. In the civil law, redhibitory vices are such faults or imperfections in the subject-matter of a sale as will give the purchaser the right to return the article and demand back the price.

Vice, n. A fault, defect, or imperfection. Immoral conduct, practice or habit; e.g. prostitution.

Viceroy. In my place.

Viceroyalty. In England, a county officer formerly appointed by the admiral "to be answerable to the high admiral for all the coasts of the sea, when need and occasion shall be." He also had power to arrest ships, when found within a certain district, for the use of the king. His office was judicial as well as ministerial.
Vice-admiralty courts. In English law, courts formerly established in the king’s possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize.

Vice-chamberlain. In England, formerly a great officer under the lord chamberlain, who, in the absence of the lord chamberlain, had the control and command of the officers appertaining to that part of the royal household which was called the “chamber.”

Vice-chancellor. See Chancellor.

Vice-comites. In England, a title formerly bestowed on the sheriff of a county, when he was regarded as the deputy of the count or earl.

Vice-comitissa. In old English law, a viscountess.

Vice-commercial agent. In the consular service of the United States, this was formerly the title of a consular officer who was substituted temporarily to fill the place of a commercial agent when the latter was absent or relieved from duty. See Commercial agent.

Vice-constable of England. An ancient officer in the time of Edward IV.

Vice-consul. In the consular service of the United States a consular officer who is substituted temporarily to fill the place of a consul who is absent or relieved from duty. Consular officer who is subordinate to a consul or consul general. See 22 U.S.C.A. § 938. In international law generally the term designates a commercial agent who acts in the place or stead of a consul or who has charge of a portion of his territory. In old English law, it meant the deputy or substitute of an earl (comes), who was anciently called “consul,” answering to the more modern “vice-comites.”

Vice-dominus episcopi. The vicar general or commissary of a bishop.

Vice-gerent. A deputy or lieutenant.

Vice-judex. In old Lombardic law, a deputy judge.

Vice-marshal. An officer who was appointed to assist the earl marshal.

Vice-President of the United States. The title of the second officer, in point of rank, in the executive branch of the government of the United States. In addition to his role as President of the Senate, the Vice President is empowered to succeed to the Presidency, pursuant to Article II and the 20th and 25th Amendments to the Constitution. The executive functions of the Vice President include participation in all Cabinet meetings, and, by statute, membership in the National Security Council, the Domestic Council, and the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. By designation of the President, the Vice President is Vice Chairman of the National Security Council and the Domestic Council, and Chairman of the Commission on CIA Activities Within the United States.

Vice-principal. See Principal.

Vice-versa. Conversely; in inverted order; in reverse manner.

Vice crimes. Generic term applied to crimes of immorality such as prostitution, lewd and lascivious behavior and obscenity.
Vidame /vidydem/. In French feudal law, originally, an officer who represented the bishop, as the viscount did the count. In process of time, these dignitaries erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles, such as the vidame of Chartres, Rheims, etc., continuing to take their titles from the seat of the bishop whom they represented, although the lands held by virtue of their fiefs might be situated elsewhere.

Vidatus /vidam/. In French feudal law, originally, an officer who represented the bishop, as the viscount did the count. In process of time, these dignitaries erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles, such as the vidame of Chartres, Rheims, etc., continuing to take their titles from the seat of the bishop whom they represented, although the lands held by virtue of their fiefs might be situated elsewhere.

Vide /vidia/. Lat. A word of reference. Vide ante, or vide supra, refers to a previous passage, vide post, or vide infra, to a subsequent passage, in a book.

Videbis ea sepe committii que sepe vindicantur /vodydyd yaw sâÝyd joum diy sâÝyd yinds-kântar/. You will see those things frequently committed which are frequently punished.

Videlicet /videlisat/"dly"/. Lat. The words "to-wit," or "that is to say," so frequently used in pleading, are technically called the "videlicet" or "scilicet;" and when any fact alleged in pleading is preceded by, or accompanied with these words, such fact is, in the language of the law, said to be "laid under a videlicet." The use of the videlicet is to point out, particularize, or render more specific that which has been previously stated in general language only; also to explain that which is doubtful or obscure. Its common use is to state time, place, or manner which are of the essence of the matter in issue.

Vide tur qui surdus et mutus ne poet faire alienation /vodydyd yaw sâÝyd joum diy sâÝyd yinds-kântar/. It seems that a deaf and dumb man cannot alienate.

Vidimus /vidamis/. An inspeximus (q.v.).

Vidua regis /vidywiki ríjjas/. Lat. In old English law, a king's widow. The widow of a tenant in capite. So called, because she was not allowed to marry a second time without the king's permission; obtaining her dower also from the assignment of the king, and having the king for her patron and defender.

Viduitatis professio /vodydyd yaw sâÝyd joum diy sâÝyd yinds-kântar/. Lat. The making a solemn profession to live a sole and chaste woman.

Viduity /vodywudy/. Widowhood.

Vie. Fr. Life; occurring in the phrases cestui que vie, pur autre vie, etc.

Vlew. The common law right of prospect; the outlook or prospect from the windows of one's house. A species of urban servitude which prohibits the obstruction of such prospect.

The act or proceeding by which tribunal goes to an object which cannot be produced in court because it is immovable or inconvenient to remove, and there observes it. Conner v. Parker, Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 873, 874. An inspection by the jury of property in controversy, of an accident scene, of a place where a crime has been committed, etc. An inspection by the fact finding tribunal which is a species of real evidence.

The appropriate procedures to be followed in connection with views are widely regulated by state statute. At common law, and generally in civil cases today, the presence of the trial judge at a view is not required, the more common practice being for the jury to be conducted to the scene by "showers," expressly commissioned for the purpose. Attendance at the view by the parties and their counsel is generally permitted though subject to the discretion of the trial judge. In criminal cases, the rights of the defendant to have the judge present at the view, and to be present himself, are frequently provided for by statute.

See also Inspection; Plain view doctrine; Viewers.

Vlew and delivery. In old English law, when a right of common was exercisable not over the whole waste, but only in convenient places indicated from time to time by the lord of the manor or his bailiff, it was said to be exercisable after "view and delivery."

Vlew, demand of. At common law, in real actions, the defendant was entitled to demand a view, that is, a sight of the thing, in order to ascertain its identity and other circumstances. As, if a real action were brought against a tenant, and such tenant did not exactly know what land it was that the defendant asked, then he might pray the view, which was that he might see the land which the defendant claimed.

Viewers. Persons appointed by a court to make an investigation of certain matters, or to examine a particular locality (as, the proposed site of a new road), and to report to the court the result of their inspection, with their opinion on the same.

View of an inquest. A view or inspection taken by a jury, summoned upon an inquisition or inquest, of the place or property to which the inquisition or inquiry refers.

View of frank-pledge. In old English law, an examination to see if every Freeman above twelve years of age within the district had taken the oath of allegiance, and found nine freeman pledges for his peaceable demeanor.

Vif-gage /vifgeyj/. L. Fr. In old English law, a mortgage or dead pledge. Properly, an estate given as security for a debt, the debt to be satisfied out of the rents, issues, and profits.

Vigil. In ecclesiastical law, the eve or next day before any solemn feast.

Vigilance. Watchfulness; precaution; a proper degree of activity and promptness in pursuing one's rights or guarding them from friction, or in making or discovering opportunities for the enforcement of one's lawful claims and demands. It is the opposite of laches. Wynne v. Conrad, 220 N.C. 355, 17 S.E.2d 514, 518.

Vigilant. Watchful, awake, and on the alert; attentive to discover and avoid danger, or to provide for safety; circumspect; cautious; wary. City Ice & Fuel Co. v. Center, 54 Ohio App. 116, 6 N.E.2d 580, 583, 7 O.O. 434.
Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata, et collata ex vill. In old English law, this word was used to signify villein /vflan/. In feudal law, a person attached to a villa regia /vfla riyj(iy)a/. Lat. In Saxon law, a royal villein /vlllanis regls subtractis reducendis /valeynas riyjas sendy(l)yant/. In old English law, a villein who was annexed to the manor of land; a serf.

Village. Traditionally, word "village" has connoted an area possessed of some attributes of a community, and is not a technical word, or one having a peculiar meaning, but is a common word in general usage and is merely an assemblage or community of people, a nucleus or cluster for residential and business purposes, a collective body of inhabitants, gathered together in one group. Union Sav. Bank of Patchogue v. Saxon, 118 U.S.App.D.C. 296, 335 F.2d 718, 721. Term refers to any small assemblage or community of people, a nucleus or cluster for residential and business purposes, a collective body of inhabitants, gathered together in one group. State on Information of Eagleton v. Champ, Mo., 393 S.W.2d 516, 524.

In some states, this is the legal description of a class of municipal corporations of smaller population than "cities" and having a simpler form of government, and corresponding to "towns" and "boroughs," as these terms are employed elsewhere.

Villain. An opprobrious epithet, implying great moral delinquency, and equivalent to knave, rascal, or scoundrel. The word is libelous.

Villanis regls retractis reducendis /valéynas ri(y)as sabrtréktas ri(y)wsendyas/. In old English law, a writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen, that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged.

Villanum servitium /valéynam servisy(i)yam/. In old English law, villein service.

Villa regla /villa ri(y)ya/. Lat. In Saxon law, a royal residence.

Villein /vilan/. In feudal law, a person attached to a manor, who was substantially in the condition of a slave, who performed the base and servile work upon the manor for the lord, and was, in most respects, a subject of property belonging to him.
Various legal acts came to be distinguished by the term Vindicare /vindakSriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to claim, to assert a right or title in or to a thing; to assert or claim a property in a thing; to claim a thing as one's own.

Vindicate. To clear of suspicion, blame, or doubt.

Vindicatio /vindak6ysh(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, Vindicate. To clear of suspicion, blame, or doubt. Vindicatory parts of laws /vindakatoriy parts av loz/. Vindictive damages /vindiktav dsemajaz/. See Damage.

Vindicta /vindiktta/. In Roman law, a rod or wand; and, from the use of that instrument in their course, one of the three ancient modes of manumission was by the vindicta; also the rod or wand intervened in the progress of the old action of vindicatio, whence the name of that action.

Vindicatory parts of laws /vindakatoriy parts av loz/. Vindictive damages /vindiktav dsemajaz/. See Damage.

Vintner /vintnar/. One who sells wine. A covenant prohibiting the trade of a vintner includes a person selling wines not to be drunk on the premises.

Viol. Fr. In French law, rape; barraging.

Violence. Unjust or unwarranted exercise of force, usually with the accompaniment of vehement, outrageous or fury. People v. McIlvain, 55 Cal.App.2d 322, 130 P.2d 131, 134. Physical force unlawfully exercised; abuse of force; that force which is employed against common right, against the laws, and against public liberty. Anderson-Berney Bldg. Co. v. Lowry, Tex.Civ.App., 143 S.W.2d 401, 403. The exertion of any physical force so as to injure, damage or abuse. Violence in labor disputes is not limited to physical contact or injury, but may include picketing conducted with misleading signs, false statements, publicity, and veiled threats by words and acts. Esco Operating Corporation v. Kaplan, 144 Misc. 646, 258 N.Y.S. 303.

Violent. Moving, acting, or characterized, by physical force, especially by extreme and sudden or by unjust or improper force. Furious, vehement; as a violent storm or wind. A violent attack marked by, or due to, strong mental excitement. Vehement, passionate; as, violent speech. Violent reproaches produced or effected by force, not spontaneous or natural; as, a violent death. Displaying or proceeding from extreme or intense force; caused by unexpected unnatural causes.

Violenta presumptio aliquando est plena probatio /vayalésh(iy) prázím(p)sh(iy)ow ažlkwóndow ét plýma prwbésh(iy)ow/. Violent presumption is sometimes full proof.

Violent death. Death caused by violent external means, as distinguished from natural death as caused by disease or the wasting of the vital forces. Death is "violent" within accident policy if it results from external agency and is not in ordinary course of nature.

Violently. By the use of force; forcibly; with violence. The term is used in indictments for certain offenses.

Violent offenses. Crimes characterized by extreme physical force such as murder, forcible rape, and assault and battery by means of a dangerous weapon.

Violent presumption. In the law of evidence, proof of a fact by the proof of circumstances which necessarily attend it. Violent presumption is many times equal to full proof. 3 Bl.Comm. 371. Something more than a mere "presumption". Hughes v. State, 212 Ind. 577, 10 N.E.2d 629, 633.

Viperina est expositio que corrodit viscera textus /väyppráyna ét ekspsizh(iy)ow kwýj korówdá vísaro tékstas/. It is a poisonous exposition which destroys the vitals of the text.

Vir /vár/. Lat. A man, especially as marking the sex. In the Latin phrases and maxims of the old English law, this word generally means "husband," the expression vir et uxor corresponding to the law French baron et femme.

Vires /väyriyz/. Lat. (The plural of "via"). Powers; forces; capabilities; natural powers; powers granted or limited. See Ultra (Ultra vires).

Vires acquirit eundo /väyriyz skýwárad iyánvow/. It gains strength by continuance.

Vir et uxor censentur in lege una persona /vár ed úskor san(t)sentar in lýjiy yuwna parsowna/. Husband and wife are considered one person in law.

Vir et uxor sunt quasi unica persona, quia caro et sanguis unus; res licet sit propria uxoris, vir tamen ejus custos, cum sit caput mulieris /vár ed úskor sánt kwézýzay yuwnaka parsowna, kwáyja kérow ét séngwás yuwnas; ríyj láyjsit prówprýyi skóra, vór téyman iýjas kástas, kám sit késpt kayuv(i)yíras/. Man and wife are, as it were, one person, because only one flesh and blood; although the property may be the wife’s, the husband is keeper of it, since he is the head of the wife.

Virga /varg/a/. In old English law, a rod or staff; a rod or ensign of office.

Virgata /vargéyda/. A quarter of an acre of land. It might also be used to express a quarter of a hide of land.

Virgata regia /vargéyda ríy(i)yá/. In old English law, the verge; the bounds of the king’s household, within which the court of the steward had jurisdiction.

Virga terre (or virgata terre) /vargá téhriy/vargéyda téhriy/. In old English law, a yard-land; a measure of land of variable quantity, containing in some places twenty, in others twenty-four, in others thirty, and in others forty, acres.

Virge, tenant by /ténant báj várj/. A species of copyholder, who holds by the virge or rod.
Virgo intacta /vīrgow intāktwa/. Lat. A pure virgin.

Virldario eligendo /vīrdrād(i)yow ēlājēndow/. A writ for choice of a verderer in the forest.

Virilla /värfl(i)yaw/. The privy members of a man, to cut off which was felony by the common law, though the party consented to it.

Vir militans deo non implicetur secularibus negotiis /vār mītān(d)z diyow nōn implasfydar sekālērbas nagōwshiyas/. A man fighting for God must not be involved in secular business.

Virtual representation, doctrine of. Under this doctrine, where parties interested are numerous and the suit is for an object common to all of them, some of the body may maintain an action on behalf of themselves and of the others. Padway v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, D.C.Wis., 42 F.Supp. 569, 576; Waybright v. Columbian Mut. Life Ins. Co., D.C. Tenn., 30 F.Supp. 885, 888; Lightle v. Kirby, 194 Ark. 535, 108 S.W.2d 896, 897. Under current rules practice, such type action would proceed as a class action. See Class or representative action.

Virtue of office. An act by virtue of office is one in which the act is within the authority of the officer but in doing it he exercises that authority improperly or abuses the confidence which the law imposes in him. Maryland Cas. Co. v. McCormack, Ky., 488 S.W.2d 347, 349.

Virtute culus /vart(y)ūwdy k(y)ūwjas/. Lat. By virtue whereof. This was the clause in a pleading justifying an entry upon land, by which the party alleged that it was in virtue of an order from one entitled that he entered.

Virtute officii /vart(y)ūwdy afishiyay/. Lat. By virtue of his office. By the authority vested in him as the incumbent of the particular office. An officer acts "virtute officii" when he acts by the authority vested in him as the incumbent of the particular office. Aldridge v. Wooten, 68 Ga.App. 887, 24 S.E.2d 700, 701. Where acts done are within the authority of the officer, but in doing them he exercises that authority improperly, or abuses the confidence which the law reposes in him, whilst acts done "colore officii" are where they are of such a nature that his office gives him no authority to do them. State v. Roy, 41 N.M. 308, 68 P.2d 162, 165; Yuma County v. Wisener, 45 Ariz. 475, 45 P.2d 115, 118.

Vis /vīz/. Lat. Any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person or his property. The plural is víres (q.v.).

Visa /vīzə/. An official indorsement upon a document, passport, commercial book, etc., to certify that it has been examined and found correct or in due form. An indorsement made on a passport by the proper authorities denoting that it has been examined and that the bearer is permitted to proceed; a recognition by the country ad quern of the validity of the passport issued by the country a quo. U. S. v. Vargas, D.C.N.Y., 380 F.Supp. 1162, 1168. See also Visé.

Vis ablativa /vīz āblatāvya/. In the civil law, ablative force; force which is exerted in taking away a thing from another.

In England, the office of inquiring into and correcting irregularities of corporations. See also Visitor.

Visitation books. In old English law, books compiled by the heralds, when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath; they were allowed to be good evidence of pedigree.

Visitation rights. In a dissolution or custody suit, permission granted to a parent to visit children. In domestic relations matters, the right of one parent to visit children of the marriage under order of the court.

Visitor. A visitor is, with respect to guardianship proceedings, a person who is trained in law, nursing or social work and is an officer, employee or special appointee of the Court with no personal interest in the proceedings. Uniform Probate Code (4th) § 5-308.

In England, a person appointed to visit, inspect, inquire into, and correct irregularities of corporations. Similar functions are performed by Boards of Visitors to Prisons.

Visitor of manners. The regarder's office in the forest.

It is a fault which ought to be avoided, that if you cannot discover the reason you should presently exclaim that the law is without reason.

Visum vadium /v&yvam v6yd(i)yam/. See Vadium.

Viva aqua /v&yva aekwa/. Lat. In the civil law, living water; running water; that which issues from a spring or fountain.

Viva pecunia /v&yva pak(y)uwn(i)ya/. Lat. Cattle, which obtained this name from being received during the Saxon period as money upon most occasions, at certain regulated prices.

Vivarium /vaver(i)yam/. Lat. In the civil law, an in¬closed place, where live wild animals are kept.

Viva voce /v&yva vowsiy/. Lat. With the living voice; by word of mouth. As applied to the examination of witnesses, this phrase is equivalent to "orally." It is used in contradistinction to evidence on affidavits or depositions. As descriptive of a species of voting, it signifies voting by speech or outcry, as distinguished from voting by a written or printed ballot.

Vivarium /vavir(i)yam/. Lat. In the civil law, an in¬closed place, where live wild animals are kept.

Viva voce /v&yva vowswiy/. Lat. With the living voice; by word of mouth. As applied to the examination of witnesses, this phrase is equivalent to "orally." It is used in contradistinction to evidence on affidavits or depositions. As descriptive of a species of voting, it signifies voting by speech or outcry, as distinguished from voting by a written or printed ballot.

Vital statistics. Public records kept by a state, city or other governmental subdivision, under a statutory provision, of births, marriages, deaths, diseases, and the like.

Vitate. To impair; to make void or voidable; to cause to fail of force or effect. To destroy or annul, either entirely or in part, the legal efficacy and binding force of an act or instrument; as when it is said that fraud vititates a contract.

Vitiglate. To litigate cavilously, vexatiously, or from merely quarrelsome motives.

Vitum clericl /vish(i)yam kléhrassay/. In old English law, the mistake of a clerk; a clerical error.

Vitum clericl nocere non debet /vish(i)yam kléhrassay nasiriy nôn debat/. A clerical error ought not to hurt.

Vitium clerlcl nocere non debet /vish(i)yam kléhrassay nasiriy nôn debat/. In old English law, the fault or mistake of a writer or copyist; a clerical error.

Vitrious /vityriyas/. Consisting of or resembling glass in its important characteristics.

Vitricus /vitrakas/. Lat. In the civil law, a stepfather; a mother's second husband.

Viva aqua /v&yva aekwa/. Lat. In the civil law, living water; running water; that which issues from a spring or fountain.

Viva pecunia /v&yva pak(y)uwn(i)ya/. Lat. Cattle, which obtained this name from being received during the Saxon period as money upon most occasions, at certain regulated prices.

Vivarium /vaver(i)yam/. Lat. In the civil law, an in¬closed place, where live wild animals are kept.

Vivary /vivariy/. In English law, a place for keeping wild animals alive, including fishes; a fish pond, park, or warren.

Viva voce /v&yva vowswiy/. Lat. With the living voice; by word of mouth. As applied to the examination of witnesses, this phrase is equivalent to "orally." It is used in contradistinction to evidence on affidavits or depositions. As descriptive of a species of voting, it signifies voting by speech or outcry, as distinguished from voting by a written or printed ballot.

Vivum vadium /v&yvam v6yd(i)yam/. See Vadium.

Vix utia lex fieri potent que omnibus commoda sit, sed si majori parti prosipicat, utilis est /viks si jëks fadyray pöwdast kwëy ômnabas kômda sit, sëy sây mâjôray pârday prasiphish(i)yat, yûwdalas êst/. Sarcely any law can be made which is adapted to all, but, if it provide for the greater part, it is useful.

Viz /viz/. A contraction for videlicet, to-wit, namely, that is to say.
Voice Identification. In evidence, one may testify that voice exemplars. Type of test in which one's voice is required to determine whether such person uttered such readings with the actual voice of the person he heard a person's voice if he is familiar with that voice. Com. v. Lykus, 367 Mass. 191, 327 N.E.2d 671. See Spectograph; Voiceprint.

Vocable artis /vōkāˈbéyələ ˈɑːrdəs/. Lat. Words of art; technical terms.

Vocaled artium explicanda sunt secundum definitiones prudentem /vōkəˈbɛlə ˈɑːsh(ə)ˌsænt ˈsɛkəndəm dɪˈfənʃiʃəˈwɒnɪz prʊˈwɛntəm/. Terms of arts are to be explained according to the definitions of the learned or skilled [in such arts].

Vocare ad curiam /vōkəˈriː əd kʊˈriːəm/. In feudal law, to summon to court.

Vocatio in jus /vōkəˈʃiˌən ɪn ˈjʊs/. Lat. A summoning to court. In the earlier practice of the Roman law (under the legis actiones), the creditor orally called upon his debtor to go with him before the praetor for the purpose of determining their controversy, saying, "in jus earum; in jus te voco." This was called "vocatio in jus."

Vocation. One's regular calling or business; one's occupation or profession. The activity on which one spends major portion of his time and out of which he makes his living. Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Accident & Casualty Ins. Co. of Winterthur, Switzerland, C.C.A.Ohio, 134 F.2d 566, 568. See also Occupation; Profession.

Vociferato /vōkəˈʃərəˌtoʊ əˈtoʊ ɪn ˈjʊs/. Lat. In old English law, outcry; hue and cry.

Vociferous /vəˈʃɪərəs/. Making a loud outcry; clamorous; noisy.

Voco /vōkəʊ/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, I call; I summon; I vouch. In jus voco te, I summon you to court; I summon you before the praetor. The formula by which a Roman action was ancientsly commenced.

Voice exemplars. Type of test in which one's voice is compared to the voice heard on some particular occasion. Used in trial of cases as type of scientific evidence. An order compelling a defendant in a criminal case to furnish a sample of his voice does not violate the privilege against self-incrimination. U. S. v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 764, 35 L.Ed.2d 67. While voiceprint identification was formerly not admissible, the trend in recent years has been towards admissibility under restricted conditions. State ex rel. Trimble v. Hedman, 291 Minn. 442, 192 N.W.2d 432; Worley v. State, Fla.App., 263 So.2d 613; United States v. Baller, C.A.W.Va., 519 F.2d 463; United States v. Franks, C.A.Tenn., 511 F.2d 25. See Spectograph; Voiceprint.

Voice Identification. In evidence, one may testify that he heard a person's voice if he is familiar with that voice. See Fed.Evid.R. 901(5). See also Spectograph; Voiceprint.

Voiceprint. An instrument known as a spectograph produces "prints" of one's voice for use in comparing such readings with the actual voice of the person involved to determine whether such person uttered the material words. Used in trial of cases which require identification of voices. Com. v. Lykus, 367 Mass. 191, 327 N.E.2d 671. See Spectograph; Voice exemplars.

Void. Null; ineffectual; nugatory; having no legal force or binding effect; unable, in law, to support the purpose for which it was intended. Hudson v. Gledhill, 72 Ga.App. 432, 33 S.E.2d 921, 924. There is this difference between the two words "void" and "voidable": void in the strict sense means that an instrument or transaction is nugatory and ineffectual so that nothing can cure it; voidable exists when an imperfection or defect can be cured by the act or confirmation of him who could take advantage of it. The term "void," however, as applicable to conveyances or other agreements, has not at all times been used with technical precision, nor restricted to its peculiar and limited sense, as contradistinguished from "voidable"; it being frequently introduced, even by legal writers and jurists, when the purpose is nothing further than to indicate that a contract was invalid, and not binding in law. But the distinction between the terms "void" and "voidable," in their application to contracts, is often one of great practical importance; and, whenever entire technical accuracy is required, the term "void" can only be properly applied to those contracts that are of no effect whatsoever, such as are a mere nullity, and incapable of confirmation or ratification.

The word "void," in its strictest sense, means that which has no force and effect, is without legal efficacy, is incapable of being enforced by law, or has no legal or binding force, but frequently the word is used and construed as having the more liberal meaning of "voidable."

The word "void" is used in statutes in the sense of utterly void so as to be incapable of ratification, and also in the sense of voidable and resort must be had to the rules of construction in many cases to determine in which sense the Legislature intended to use it. An act or contract neither wrong in itself nor against public policy, which has been declared void by statute for the protection or benefit of a certain party, or class of parties, is voidable only.

Void ab initio. A contract is null from the beginning if it seriously offends law or public policy in contrast to a contract which is merely voidable at the election of one of the parties to the contract. See also Void contract; Void marriage.

Voidable. That which may be avoided, or declared void; not absolutely void, or void in itself. That which operates to accomplish the thing sought to be accomplished, until the fatal vice in the transaction has been judicially ascertained and declared. Slaughter v. Qualls, 139 Tex. 340, 162 S.W.2d 671, 674. It imports a valid act which may be avoided rather than an invalid act which may be confirmed. Paulson v. McMillan, 8 Wash.2d 295, 111 P.2d 983, 985. See Void.

Voidable contract. One which is void as to wrongdoer but not void as to wronged party, unless he elects to so treat it. Depner v. Joseph Zukin Blouses, 13 Cal.App.2d 124, 56 P.2d 574, 575. For example, a contract between an infant and an adult is voidable only at the election of the infant. See also Void contract.

Voidable judgment. One apparently valid, but in truth wanting in some material respect. Reynolds v. Vol-
VOIDABLE JUDGMENT

VOIDABLE JUDGMENT

VOIDABLE MARRIAGE
One which is valid when entered into and which remains valid until either party secures lawful court order dissolving the marital relationship. Darling v. Darling, 44 Ohio App.2d 5, 335 N.E.2d 708, 710, 73 O.O.2d 5. See also Void marriage.

VOIDABLE PREFERENCE. Under Bankruptcy Act, such exists where person while insolvent transfers property, the effect of which will be to enable one creditor to obtain greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of same class. The preference given to a creditor of a bankrupt over other creditors in the same class as the creditor given the preference and in such a situation, if other elements appear, the bankruptcy court may have the transfer set aside. See Bankruptcy Act § 547. See also Preference.

VOID CONTRACT. One which never had any legal existence or effect, and such contract cannot in any manner have life breathed into it. National Union Indemnity Co. v. Bruce Bros., 44 Ariz. 454, 38 P.2d 648, 652. Expression denotes that the parties to the transaction have gone through the form of making a contract, but that none has been made in law because of lack of some essential element of a contract, and such contract creates no legal rights and either party thereto may ignore it at his pleasure, in so far as it is executory. Griffin v. Smith, C.C.A.Ind., 101 F.2d 348, 350. See also Voidable contract.

VOID FOR VAGUENESS. A law which is so obscure in its promulgation that a reasonable person could not determine from a reading what the law purports to command or prohibit is void as violative of due process.

VOID JUDGMENT. One which has no legal force or effect, invalidity of which may be asserted by any person whose rights are affected at any time and at any place directly or collaterally. Reynolds v. Volunteer State Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 1087, 1092. One which, from its inception is and forever continues to be absolutely null, without legal efficacy, ineffectual to bind parties or support a right, of no legal force and effect whatever, and incapable of confirmation, ratification, or enforcement in any manner or to any degree. One that has merely semblance without some essential elements, as want of jurisdiction or failure to serve process or have party in court. See also Voidable judgment.

VOID MARRIAGE. One not good for any legal purpose, the invalidity of which may be maintained in any proceeding between any parties, while a "voidable marriage" is one where there is an imperfection which can be inquired into only during the lives of both of the parties, in a proceeding to obtain a judgment declaring it void. Such marriage is invalid from its inception, and parties thereto may simply separate without benefit of court order of divorce or annulment. Darling v. Darling, 44 Ohio App.2d 5, 335 N.E.2d 708, 710, 73 O.O.2d 5. A "voidable marriage" is valid and not ipso facto void, until sentence of nullity is obtained; a "void marriage" is void ab initio. Minder v. Minder, 83 N.J.Super. 159, 199 A.2d 69, 71. See also Annulment.

VOID ON ITS FACE. An instrument is void on its face when an inspection will reveal its defects and invalidity.

VOID PROCESS. One which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process. United States v. Van Dusen, C.C.A.Minn., 78 F.2d 121, 124.

Voir dire. L. Fr. To speak the truth. This phrase denotes the preliminary examination which the court may make of one presented as a witness or juror, where his competency, interest, etc., is objected to.

VOLATURE /vōtôr/ys/. Fr. Carriage; transportation by carriage.

VOLENS /vōl(y)wëns/. Lat. Willing. He is said to be willing who either expressly consents or tacitly makes no opposition.

VOLONTI NON FIT INJURIA /vōl(y)wëntē nas nōn fit injùriās/. The maxim "volenti non fit injuria" means that if one, knowing and comprehending the danger, voluntarily exposes himself to it, though not negligent in so doing, he is deemed to have assumed the risk and is precluded from a recovery for an injury resulting therefrom. Munson v. Bishop Clarkson Memorial Hospital, 186 Neb. 778, 186 N.W.2d 492, 494. This is an affirmative defense that should be pleaded under Fed.R.Civ.P. 8. Tyler v. Dowell, Inc., C.A.N.M., 274 F.2d 890. See also Assumption of risk.

VOLSTEAD ACT. A now repealed Federal law prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of liquor. The law was passed under the Eighteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution which was repealed by Twenty-First Amendment.

VOLUTE, sed non dixit /vōl(yl)ywət, sed nōn dīksət/. He willed, but he did not say. He may have intended so, but he did not say so. A maxim frequently used in the construction of wills; an answer to arguments from the construction of wills; an answer to arguments based upon the supposed intention of a testator.

VOLUMEN /vōl(y)wəmən/. Lat. In the civil law, a volume; so called from its form, being rolled up.

VOLUMUS /vōl(y)məs/. Lat. We will; it is our will. The first word of a clause in the royal writs of protection and letters patent.

VOLUNTARILY. Done by design or intention, intentional, proposed, intended, or not accidental. Intentionally and without coercion. Young v. Young, 148 Kan. 876, 84 P.2d 916, 917.

VOLUNTARINESS. The quality of being voluntary or free as opposed to being forced or given under duress, as a confession of one arrested for a crime.

VOLUNTARIUS Daemon /vōl(y)wëntarlēriəs dīman/. A voluntary madman. A term applied by Lord Coke to a drunkard, who has voluntarily contracted madness by intoxication. 4 Bl. Comm. 25.
Voluntary. Unconstrained by interference; unimpelled by another's influence; spontaneous; acting of oneself. Coker v. State, 189 Ga. 20, 33 S.E.2d 171, 174. Done by design or intention. Proceeding from the free and unrestrained will of the person. Produced in or by an act of choice. Resulting from free choice. The word, especially in statutes, often implies knowledge of essential facts. Without valuable consideration; gratuitous, as a voluntary conveyance. Also, having a merely nominal consideration; as, a voluntary deed.

As to voluntary Answer; Assignment; Bankrupt; Confession; Conveyance; Deposit; Escape; Indebtedness; Manslaughter; Nonsuit; Oath; Payment; Redemption; Sale; Settlement; Trust, and Waste, see those titles.

Voluntary abandonment. As statutory ground for divorce, exists if there is a final departure, without consent of other party, without sufficient reason and without intent to return. As used in adoption statute, the term "voluntarily abandoned" means a willful act or course of conduct as would imply a conscious disregard or indifference to such child in respect to the parental obligation owed to the child. Elliott v. Maddox, Tex.Civ.App., 510 S.W.2d 105, 107. See also Abandonment; Desertion.

Voluntary courtesy. A voluntary act of kindness. An act of kindness performed by one man towards another, of the free will and inclination of the doer, without any previous request or promise of reward made by him who is the object of the courtesy; from which the law will not imply a promise of remuneration.

Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. An intentional act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous. Intentional exposure to unnecessary danger, implying a conscious knowledge of the danger. The voluntary doing of an act which is not necessary to be done, but which requires exposure to known danger to which one would not be exposed if unnecessary act is not done. The term implies a conscious, intentional exposure, something of which one is conscious but willing to take the risk. See Assumption of risk.

Voluntary ignorance. This exists where a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge, but has neglected to do so.

Voluntary jurisdiction. In old English law, a jurisdiction exercised by certain ecclesiastical courts, in matters where there is no opposition. 3 Bl.Comm. 66. The opposite of contentious jurisdiction (q.v.)

Voluntas /valéntes/. Lat. Properly, volition, purpose, or intention, or a design or the feeling or impulse which prompts the commission of an act. However, in old English law the term was often used to denote a will, that is, the last will and testament of a decedent, more properly called testamentum. Voluntas donatoris in charta doni sul manifeste expressa observetur /valéntes döwñśtôres in kårô döwnwäy s(y)iwam mâññestëly akşprësî õbsârvîlydär/. The will of the donor manifestly expressed in his deed of gift is to be observed.

Voluntas est justa sententia de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit /valéntes ēst īstā shakenh(ly) diy liow kwôd kwiw pôswt môrdäm s(y)iwam fâyárây vëlat/. A will is an exact opinion or determination concerning that which each one wishes to be done after his death.

Voluntas et propositum distinguunt maleficia /valéntes ēt prposéti dum distigung wâllifish(ly)as/. The will and the proposed end distinguish crimes.

Voluntas facit quod in testamento scriptum valeat /valéntes féysat kwôd in testâmëntow skriptäm välyat/. It is intention which gives effect to the wording of a will.

Voluntas in delictis, non exitus spectatur /valéntes in deliktis, nôñ égdzâd spektêtëydär/. In crimes, the will, and not the consequence, is looked to.

Voluntas reputatur pro facto /valéntes répysytëydar prôw fâkëktow/. The intention is to be taken for the deed.

Voluntas testatoris est ambulatoria usque ad extremum vitae exitum /valéntes testatórës ēst æmbyylatórëy õskwiy ëd õsktriýnam váydiy égdzam/. The will of a testator is ambulatory until the latest moment of life.

Voluntas testatoris habet interpretationem latam et benignam /valéntes têstätorës hêybad intàrâptretëshiyôwñam lêydam ēt benigne/. The intention of a testator has a broad and benignant interpretation.

Voluntas ultima testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam /valéntes îltîmâ testatórës ēst ët erimplëndêm sükândâm víräm intênsîshiyôwñam s(y)iwam/. The last will of the testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Volunteer. A person who gives his services without any express or implied promise of remuneration. One who intrudes himself into a matter which does not concern him, or one who pays the debt of another without request, when he is not legally or morally bound to do so, and when he has no interest to protect in making such payment. One who, acting on his own initiative, pays debt of another without invitation, compulsion, or the necessity of self-protection. In re Farmers & Merchants' State Bank of Nooksack, 175 Wash. 78, 26 P.2d 631; Trinity Universal Ins. Co. v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co., 246 Ark. 1021, 441 S.W.2d 95, 97.

Conveyancing. One who holds a title under a voluntary conveyance, i.e., one made without consideration, good or valuable, to support it.

Law of master and servant. The term "Volunteer" includes one who, without the assent of the master and without justification arising from a legitimate personal interest, unnecessarily assists a servant in the performance of the master's business.
VOLUNTEER

Military law. One who freely and voluntarily offers himself for service in the army or navy; as distinguished from one who is compelled to serve by draft or conscription, and also from one entered by enlistment in the standing army.

Vote. Suffrage; the expression of one’s will, preference, or choice, formally manifested by a member of a legislative or deliberative body, or of a constituency or a body of qualified electors, in regard to the decision to be made by the body as a whole upon any proposed measure or proceeding or in passing laws, rules or regulations, or the selection of an officer or representative. And the aggregate of the expressions of will or choice, thus manifested by individuals, is called the “vote of the body.” Commonwealth v. Baker, 237 Ky. 380, 35 S.W.2d 548, 549; Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont. 148, 62 P.2d 342, 348.

See also Absentee voting; Apportionment; Ballot; Canvass; Casting vote; Cumulative voting; Fifteenth Amendment; Franchise; Gerrymander; Majority vote; Nineteenth Amendment; Twenty-Fourth Amendment; Twenty-Sixth Amendment; Voting Rights Act.

Voter. The word has two meanings—a person who performs act of voting, and a person who has the qualifications entitling him to vote. Its meaning depends on the connections in which it is used, and is not always equivalent to elector. In a limited sense a voter is a person having the legal right to vote, sometimes called a legal voter. See Legal voter.

Voting by ballot. The term is used to distinguish open voting from secret voting. The privilege of secrecy is of the essence of “voting by ballot.” See Ballot.

Voting Rights Act. Federal Act (1965) which suspended all literacy and character tests for voting rights in all States and counties where less than half the adult population were registered, and which provided for federal registration of voters where the Attorney General considered it necessary to enforce rights under the 15th Amendment. See also Poll-tax.

Voting stock. In corporations, that type of stock which gives the holder the right to vote for directors and other matters in contrast to non-voting stock which simply entitles the holder to dividends, if any. Common stock is normally voting stock. See also Stock.

Voting stock rights. The stockholder’s right to vote his stock in the affairs of his company. Most common shares have one vote each. Preferred stock usually has the right to vote when preferred dividends are in default for a specified period. The right to vote may be delegated by the stockholder to another person. See also Voting stock.

Voting tax. See Poll-tax.

Voting trust. One created by an agreement between a group of the stockholders of a corporation and the trustee, or by a group of identical agreements between individual stockholders and a common trustee, whereby it is provided that for a term of years, or for a period contingent upon a certain event, or until the agreement is terminated, control over the stock owned by such stockholders, either for certain purposes or for all, shall be lodged in the trustee, with or without a reservation to the owner or persons designated by them of the power to direct how such control shall be used. A device whereby two or more persons, owning stock with voting powers, divorce voting rights thereof from ownership, retaining to all intents and purposes the latter in themselves and transferring the former to trustees in whom voting rights of all depositors in the trust are pooled.

Agreement accumulating several owners’ stock in hands of one or more persons in trust for voting purposes in order to control corporate business and affairs. It differs from proxy or reciprocal proxy in that it does not make either party the other’s agent.

Votum /vōtum/. Lat. A vow or promise. Dies votorum, the wedding day.

Voucher /vōchar/. A receipt, acquittance, or release, to call upon, rely on, or quote as an authority. Thus, formerly, to vouch a case or report was to quote it as an authority.

See also Impleader; Third-party practice; Vouching-in.

Vouchee /vōchē/. In common recoveries, the person who is called to warrant or defend the title is called the “vouchee.” The person who is vouched to warranty. In this fictitious proceeding the crier of the court usually performs the office of a common vouchee. 2 Bl.Comm. 358.

Voucher /vōchar/. A receipt, acquittance, or release, which may serve as evidence of payment or discharge of a debt, or to certify the correctness of accounts. An account-book containing the acquittances or receipts showing the accountant’s discharge of his obligations. When used in connection with disbursement of money, a written or printed instrument in the nature of an account, receipt, or acquittance, that shows on its face the fact, authority, and purpose of disbursement.

A document that serves to recognize a liability and authorize the disbursement of cash. Sometimes used to refer to the written evidence documenting an accounting entry, as in the term journal voucher.

In old English law, the person on whom the tenant calls to defend the title to the land, because he warranted the title to him at the time of the original purchase.

Voucher to warranty. The calling one who has warranted lands, by the party warranted, to come and defend the suit for him.

Vouching-in. Common-law device by which a defendant notifies another that suit is pending against him, that if liability is found, defendant will look to vouchee for indemnity, that the notice constitutes formal tender of right to defend the action, and that if vouchee refuses to defend, it will be bound in any subsequent litigation between them to the factual determinations necessary to the original judgment. Though largely supplanted by third-party practice, vouching-in remains marginally viable under the federal rules. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Philadelphia Ship Main-

Vox emissa volat; litera scripta manet. The spoken word flies; the written letter remains.

Voyage. In maritime law, the passing of a vessel by sea from one place, port, or country to another. The term is held to include the enterprise entered upon, and not merely the route.

Foreign voyage. A voyage to some port or place within the territory of a foreign nation. The terminus of a voyage determines its character. If it be within the limits of a foreign jurisdiction, it is a foreign voyage, and not otherwise.

Voyage charter. The document in admiralty which sets forth the arrangements and contractual engagements entered into between the charterer and the owner of the ship. Under "voyage charter," ship is engaged to carry full cargo on specific voyage, and ship is manned and navigated by owner. President of India By and Through Director of India Supply Mission v. West Coast S. S. Co., D.C.Or., 213 F.Supp. 352, 359.

Voyage policy. See Policy of insurance.

Voyeurism. The condition of one who derives sexual satisfaction from observing the sexual organs or acts of others, generally from a secret vantage point.

Vs. An abbreviation for versus (against), constantly used in legal proceedings, and especially in entitling cases.

Vulgar. Lack of cultivation or refinement.

Vulgaris opinio est duplex, viz., orta inter graves et discretos, que multum veritatis habet, et opinio orta inter leves et vulgares homines absque specie veritatis /vulgéras spín(i)yów ést d(y)úwpłeks, vadvylasad órdó íntar grévylyż ᣤ ét dskfrdows, kwiw málom wēhratăydas Ꮛéby̞st, éd spín(i)yów órdó íntar líivylyż ᣤ wēgěrỳyz hómaniży ᓲbskwiy splyshiży yēhratăydas/. Common opinion is of two kinds, viz., that which arises among grave and discreet men, which has much truth in it, and that which arises among light and common men, without any appearance of truth.

Vulgaris purgatio /vulgéras pargAysh(iy)ów/. Lat. In old English law, common purgation; a name given to the trial by ordeal, to distinguish it from the canonical purgation, which was by the oath of the party. 4 Bl.Comm. 342.

Vulgo concepti /vilgow kan(t)séptay/. Lat. In the civil law, spurious children; bastards.

Vulgo quaesiti /vilgow kwazAyday/. Lat. In the civil law, spurious children; literally, gotten from the people; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, who are considered as having no father.
W. As an abbreviation, this letter frequently stands for "William" (king of England), "Westminster," “west,” or “western.”

Wacreour. L. Fr. A vagabond, or vagrant.

Wadía /wɛyd(i)ya/. A pledge. See Vadium; Fides facta.

Waftors /wɛftɔrz/. Conductors of vessels at sea.

Waga /wey(g)a/. In old English law, a weight; a measure of cheese, salt, wool, etc., containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds avoirdupois.

Wage. In old English practice, to give security for the performance of a thing. See also Wages.

Wage and hour laws. General term describing federal and state laws governing the maximum hours which may be worked and the minimum wage to be paid. In particular, the federal law known as Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 which regulates wages, hours and other conditions of labor. 29 U.S.C.A. § 201 et seq. See also Eight hour laws; Fair Labor Standards Act; Walsh-Healey Act.

Wage assignments. The transfer or assignment in advance of one's wages generally in connection with a debt or judgment. Such assignments are governed by statutes in most states. See also Assignment (Assignment for benefit of creditors).

Wage earner's plan. A type of partial bankruptcy in which a person keeps his or her property and pays off a court-established proportion of debt over a period of time and under court supervision. See Bankruptcy Act Ch. 13, “Adjustment of Debts of An Individual With Regular Income”.

Wage garnishment. See Garnishment.

Wager. A contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them or that they shall gain or lose on the happening of an uncertain event or upon the ascertainment of a fact in dispute, where the parties have no interest in the event except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. The word “wagering” is practically synonymous with the words betting and gambling, and the terms are so used in common parlance and in statutory and constitutional enactments. McDonald v. Bryant, 238 Ark. 338, 381 S.W.2d 736, 738. See also Bet; Pari-mutuel betting.

Wagering contract. One in which the parties stipulate that they shall gain or lose, upon the happening of an uncertain event, in which they have no interest except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. See also Wage.

Wagering gain. The share of each, where individuals carrying on business in partnership make gains in wagering transactions. Jennings v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Tex., 110 F.2d 945, 946.

Wager of battel. The trial by wager of battel was a species of trial introduced into England, among other Norman customs, by William the Conqueror, in which the person accused fought with his accuser, under the apprehension that Heaven would give the victory to him who was in the right. 3 Bl.Comm. 337. It was abolished by St. 59 Geo. III, c. 46.

Wager of law. In old practice, the giving of gage or sureties by a defendant in an action of debt that at a certain day assigned he would make his law; that is, would take an oath in open court that he did not owe the debt, and at the same time bring with him eleven neighbors (called “compurgators”), who should avow upon their oaths that they believed in their consciences that he said the truth.

Wager policy. See Policy of Insurance.

Wages. A compensation given to a hired person for his or her services. Compensation of employees based on time worked or output of production.

Every form of remuneration payable for a given period to an individual for personal services, including salaries, commissions, vacation pay, dismissal wages, bonuses and reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging, payments in kind, tips, and any other similar advantage received from the individual's employer or directly with respect to work for him. Ernst v. Industrial Commission, 246 Wis. 205, 16 N.W.2d 867. Term should be broadly defined and includes not only periodic monetary earnings but all compensation for services rendered without regard to manner in which such compensation is computed. Ware v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 24 Cal.App.3d 35, 100 Cal.Rptr. 791, 797.

See also Compensation; Current wages; Front wages; Minimum wage; Salary.

Wagner Act. A Federal law, passed in 1935, that established most basic union rights. It prohibited several employer actions (such as attempting to force employees to stay out of a union) and labeled these actions "unfair labor practices." It also set up the National Labor Relations Board to help enforce the new labor laws. 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

Wagonage /wägonaj/. Money paid for carriage in a wagon.

Walf /wéyl/. Waifs are goods found, but claimed by Wagonway. Also, goods stolen and waived, or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. Wals are to be distinguished from bona fugitiva, which are the goods of the felon himself, which he abandons in his flight from justice.

Walnago /wonygaj/. In old records, that may be plowed or manured; tillable.

Walnage /wonyj/. In old English law, the team and instruments of husbandry belonging to a countryman, and especially to a villein who was required to perform agricultural services.

Walnage /wonyjatyrm/. What is necessary to the farmer for the cultivation of his land.

Wait and See doctrine. The “wait and see” doctrine is a doctrine resting upon an equitable principle, which courts of law will recognize. Atlas Life Ins. Co. v. Schrimsher, 179 Okl. 643, 66 P.2d 944, 948.

A person is said to waive a benefit when he renounces or disclaims it, and he is said to waive a tort or injury when he abandons the remedy which the law gives him for it.

In order for one to “waive” a right, he must do it knowingly and be possessed of the facts. Barnhill v. Rubin, D.C.Tex., 46 F.Supp. 963, 966.

Waive, n. In old English law, a woman outlawed. The term is, as it were, the feminine of “outlaw,” the latter being always applied to a man; “waive,” to a woman.

Waiver. The intentional or voluntary relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right, or when one dispenses with the performance of something he is entitled to exact or when one in possession of any right, whether conferred by law or by contract, with full knowledge of the material facts, does or forbears to do something the doing of which or the failure of forbearance to do which is inconsistent with the right, or his intention to rely upon it. The renunciation, repudiation, abandonment, or surrender of some claim, right, privilege, or of the opportunity to take advantage of some defect, irregularity, or wrong. A doctrine resting upon an equitable principle, which courts of law will recognize. Atlas Life Ins. Co. v. Schrimsher, 179 Okl. 643, 66 P.2d 944, 948.

Waiver is essentially unilateral, resulting as legal consequence from some act or conduct of party against whom it operates, and no act of party in whose favor it is made is necessary to complete it. Coleman Production Credit Ass’n v. Mahan, Tex.Civ. App., 168 S.W.2d 903, 904. And may be shown by acts and conduct and sometimes by nonaction. Concrete Engineering Co. v. Grande Bldg. Co., 230 Mo. App. 443, 86 S.W.2d 595, 606.

Terms “estoppel” and “waiver” are not synonymous; “waiver” means the voluntary, intentional relinquishment of a known right, and “estoppel” rests upon principle that, where anyone has done an act, or made a statement, which would be a fraud on his part to controvert or impair, because other party has acted upon it in belief that what was done or said was true, conscience and honest dealing require that he not be permitted to repudiate his act or gainsay his statement. Peloso v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 102 N.J. Super. 357, 246 A.2d 52, 58.

See also Abandonment; Estoppel; Forfeiture.

Express waiver. The voluntary, intentional relinquishment of a known right.

Implied waiver. A waiver is implied where one party has pursued such a course of conduct with reference to the other party as to evidence an intention to waive his rights or the advantage to which he may be entitled, or where the conduct pursued is inconsistent with any other honest intention than an intention of such waiver, provided that the other party concerned has been induced by such conduct to act upon the belief that there has been a waiver, and has incurred trouble or expense thereby. To make out a case of implied “waiver” of a legal right, there must be a clear, unequivocal and decisive act of the party showing such purpose, or acts amounting to an estoppel on his part. Rosenthal v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 99 F.2d 578, 579.
WAIVER

Insurance law. Substance of doctrine of “waiver” in insurance law is that if insurer, with knowledge of facts which would bar existing primary liability, recognizes such primary liability by treating policy as in force, it will not thereafter be allowed to plead such facts to avoid its primary liability.

Lien waiver. See that title.

Waiver by election of remedies, doctrine of. Doctrine applies if there exist two or more coexisting remedies between which there is right of election, inconsistency as to such available remedies, and actual bringing of action or doing some other decisive act, with knowledge of facts, whereby party electing indicates his choice between such inconsistent remedies. Hertz v. Mills, D.C.Md., 10 F.Supp. 979, 981.

Waiver of exemption. A clause inserted in a note, bond, lease, etc., expressly waiving the benefit of the laws exempting limited amounts of personal property from levy and sale on judicial process, so far as concerns the enforcement of the particular debt or obligation.

Waiver of immunity. A means authorized by statutes by which a witness, in advance of giving testimony or producing evidence, may renounce the fundamental right guaranteed to him by constitutions, that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. In re Grae, 282 N.Y. 428, 26 N.E.2d 963, 966. See Immunity.

Waiver of premium clause. Provision in insurance policy providing for waiver of premium payments upon disability of insured. Commonly such waiver only takes effect after a certain time period of disability; e.g. six months.

Waiver of protest. An agreement by the indorser of a note or bill to be bound in his character of indorser without the formality of a protest in case of non-payment, or, in the case of paper which cannot or is not required to be protested, dispensing with the necessity of a demand and notice.

Waiver of tort. The election, by an injured party, for purposes of redress, to treat the facts as establishing an implied contract, which he may enforce, instead of an injury by fraud or wrong, for the committing of which he may demand damages, compensatory or exemplary.

Walapauz. In old Lombardic law, the disguising the Walensls /walen(t)sas/. In old English law, a Welsh¬ Wallscus /waliskds/. In Saxon law, a servant, or any Waleschery /welsh(s)riy/. The being a Welshman.

Walkers. Foresters who have the care of a certain space of ground assigned to them.

Walk out. An organized withdrawal of employees from their place of employment because of a labor dispute.

Wall. An erection of stone, brick, or other material, raised to some height, and intended for purposes of privacy, security or enclosure. In law, this term occurs in such compounds as “ancient wall,” “party-wall,” “division-wall,” etc. See also Spite fence.

Walla /w61(i)ya/, In old English law, a wall; a sea¬ wall; a mound, bank, or wall erected in marshy districts as a protection against the sea.

Walsh-Healey Act. Federal Act (1936) which provides that government contractors should pay not less than the prevailing minimum wage, observe the eight-hour day and the forty-hour week, employ no convict labor and no female under 18 years of age or male under 16 years of age, and allow no hazardous or unsanitary working conditions in their plants. 41 U.S.C.A. §§ 35–45.

Wampum /wompam/. Unlike France, Britain undertook no coinage for the use of her American colonies. The earliest medium of exchange for the New England settlements was wampum ordered by The General Court of Massachusetts in 1637. The court ordered that “wampampege should passe at 6 a penny for any sum under 12d.” Wampum generally consisted of shells, coon pelts and bullets and was offered in lieu of coins, which were almost non-existent. Although wampum served the purpose for average daily transactions, great confusion was experienced where larger sums were involved. With England ignoring the colonists’ need for a standard medium of exchange, the General Court in 1682 ordered the first metallic currency for the English Americans.

Wander. To ramble here and there without any certain course. In its broad sense, “wander” means to ramble without a definite purpose or objective, roam, rove, or stray, and to go aimlessly, indirectly or casually. People v. Weger, 251 C.A.2d 584, 59 Cal.Rptr. 661, 667. See Transient.

Wanlass /w61onas/. An ancient customary tenure of lands; i.e., to drive deer to a stand that the lord may have a shot.

Wantage. In marine insurance, ullage; deficiency in the contents of a cask or vessel caused by leaking.

Want of consideration. Term embraces transactions or instances where no consideration was intended to pass. Ranschenbach v. McDaniel’s Estate, 122 W.Va. 632, 11 S.E.2d 852, 854. For distinction between “failure of consideration” and “want of consideration,” see Failure of consideration.

Want of jurisdiction. Lack of jurisdiction over person or subject matter. A lack of authority to exercise in a particular manner a power which board or tribunal has; the doing of something in excess of authority possessed. Evans v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, 14 Cal.2d 563, 96 P.2d 107, 116.

Wanton. Reckless, heedless, malicious; characterized by extreme recklessness or foolhardiness; recklessly...

Wanton act. One done in reckless disregard of the rights of others, evincing a reckless indifference to consequences to the life, or limb, or health, or reputation or property rights of another, and is more than negligence, more than gross negligence, and is such conduct as indicates a reckless disregard of the just consequences. Stout v. Gallemore, 138 Kan. 385, 26 P.2d 573. A reckless or intentional disregard of the property, rights, or safety of others, implying, actively, a willingness to injure and disregard of the consequences to others, and, passively, more than mere negligence, that is, a conscious and intentional disregard of duty.

Wanton acts and omissions. Those of such character or done in such manner or under such circumstances as to indicate that a person of ordinary intelligence acteduated by normal and natural concern for the welfare and safety of his fellows whom he might be affected by them could not be guilty of them unless wholly indifferent to their probable injurious effect or consequences. Popcke v. Popcke, 102 Colo. 337, 79 P.2d 290, 292.

Wanton and reckless misconduct. Occurs when a person, with no intent to cause harm, intentionally performs an act so unreasonable and dangerous that he knows, or should know, that it is highly probable that harm will result. Donnelly v. Southern Pac. Co., 18 Cal.2d 863, 118 P.2d 465, 469, 470.

Wanton conduct. Occurs when a person though possessing no intent to cause harm performs an act which is so unreasonable and dangerous that imminent likelihood of harm or injury to another is reasonably apparent. Schorah v. Carey, Del.Super., 318 A.2d 610, 612.

Wanton injury. Injury produced by conscious and intentional wrongful act, or omission of known duty with reckless indifference to consequences. It must be predicated upon actual knowledge of another's peril and a failure to take available preventative action knowing that such failure will probably result in injury. Rainey v. State, 31 Ala.App. 271, 17 So.2d 683, 686.

Wanton misconduct. Act or failure to act, when there is a duty to act, in reckless disregard of rights of another, coupled with a consciousness that injury is a probable consequence of act or omission. Swain v. American Mut. Liability Ins. Co., C.C.A.La., 194 F.2d 886, 887. Term refers to intentional act of unreasonable character performed in disregard of risk known to him or so obvious that he must be taken to have been aware of it and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow and it is usually accompanied by conscious indifference to the consequences. Goss v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., C.A.Pa., 355 F.2d 649, 651.

Wanton negligence. Heedless and reckless disregard for another's rights with consciousness that act or omission to act may result in injury to another. Craig v. Stagner, 159 Tenn. 511, 19 S.W.2d 234, 236. See also Negligence.

Wantonness. Conscious doing of some act or the omission of some duty with knowledge of existing conditions and consciousness that, from the act or omission, injury will likely result to another. Bedwell v. De Bolt, 221 Ind. 600, 50 N.E.2d 875, 877. Conscious failure by one charged with a duty to exercise due care and diligence to prevent an injury after the discovery of the peril, or under circumstances where he is charged with a knowledge of such peril, and being conscious of the inevitable or probable results of such failure. Stout v. Gallemore, 138 Kan. 385, 26 P.2d 573. A reckless or intentional disregard of the property, rights, or safety of others, implying, actively, a willingness to injure and disregard of the consequences to others, and, passively, more than mere negligence, that is, a conscious and intentional disregard of duty.

Wapentake /wəˈpentəki/. In English law, a local division of the country; the name is in use north of the Trent to denote a hundred. The derivation of the name is said to be from “weapon” and “take,” and indicates that the division was originally of a military character. Also a hundred court.

War. Hostile contention by means of armed forces, carried on between nations, states, or rulers, or between citizens in the same nation or state. Gitlow v. Kiely, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 227, 233. A contest by force between two or more nations, carried on for any purpose, or armed conflict of sovereign powers or declared and open hostilities, or the state of nations among whom there is an interruption of pacific relations, and a general contention by force, authorized by the sovereign. West v. Palmetto State Life Ins. Co., 202 S.C. 422, 25 S.E.2d 475, 477, 478. War does not exist merely because of an armed attack by the military forces of another nation until it is a condition recognized or accepted by political authority of government which is attacked, either through an actual declaration of war or other acts demonstrating such position. Savage v. Sun Life Assur. Co. of Canada, D.C.La., 57 F.Supp. 620, 621.

Term as used in statute proscribing any claim against United States arising out of combatant activity of Military or Naval Forces or Coast Guard during time of war includes an undeclared war as well as a formally declared war. Morrison v. U. S., D.C.Ga., 316 F.Supp. 78, 79.

Articles of war. See Article.

Civil war. An internecine war. A war carried on between opposing citizens of the same country or nation.

Imperfect war. See Perfect war, infra.

Laws of war. This term denotes a branch of public international law, and comprises the body of rules and principles observed by civilized nations for the regulation of matters inherent in, or incidental to, the conduct of a public war; such, for example, as the relations of neutrals and belligerents, blockades, captures, prizes, truces and armistices, capitulations, prisoners, and declarations of war and peace; e.g. Geneva Convention.

Mixed war. A mixed war is one which is made on one side by public authority, and on the other by mere private persons.

Perfect war. Where whole nation is at war with another whole nation, but when the hostilities are limited as respects places, persons, and things, the war is termed “imperfect war.” Bas v. Tingy, 4 U.S. (Dall.) 37, 40, 1 L.Ed. 731.

Private war. One between private persons, lawfully exerted by way of defense, but otherwise unknown in civil society.

Public war. Every contention by force, between two nations, in external matters, under the authority of their respective governments. Prize Cases, 2 Black 666, 17 L.Ed. 459.

Solemn war. A war made in form by public declaration; a war solemnly declared by one state against another. Bas v. Tingy, 4 U.S. (Dall.) 37, 40, 1 L.Ed. 731.

War clauses. Art. I, § 8 (Clauses 11–16) U.S.Const., provides, inter alia, that Congress shall have power to declare war, and raise and support military forces. See War power.

War crimes. Crimes committed by countries in violation of the international laws governing wars. At Nuremberg after World War II, crimes committed by the Nazis were so tried.

Ward. Guarding, caring, protecting.

A division of a city or town for elections, police, and other purposes. A person, especially a child, or incompetent, placed by the court under the care of a guardian. A corridor, room, or other division of a prison, hospital, or asylum.

See Guardian; Guardianship.

Wardage. Money paid and contributed to watch and ward.

Ward-horn. In old English law, the duty of keeping watch and ward, with a horn to blow upon any occasion of surprise.

Ward-fee. Sax. In old records, ward-fee; the value of a ward, or the money paid to the lord for his redemption from wardship.

Ward-in-chancery. An infant who is under the superintendence of the chancellor.

Ward-mote. In English law, a court kept in every ward in London, commonly called the “ward-mote court,” or “inquest.”

Ward-penny. In old English law, money paid to the sheriff or castellains, for the duty of watching and warding a castle.

Wardship. In military tenures, the right of the lord to have custody, as guardian, of the body and lands of the Infant heir, without any account of profits, until he was twenty-one or she sixteen. In socage the guardian was accountable for profits; and he was not the lord, but the nearest relative to whom the inheritance could not descend, and the wardship ceased at fourteen. In copyholds, the lord was the guardian, but was perhaps accountable for profits. See 2 Bl. Comm. 67.

Wardship in chivalry. An incident to the tenure of knight-service.

Wardship in copyholds. The lord is guardian of his infant tenant by special custom.

Wards of admiralty. Seamen are sometimes thus designated, because, in view of their general improvidence and rashness, and though they are not technically incapable of contracting, their contracts are treated like those of fiduciaries and beneficiaries, and if there is any inequality in terms or any disproportion in the bargain or any sacrifice of rights of seamen which are not compensated by extraordinary benefits, the judicial interpretation of the transaction is that the bargain is unjust and that pro tanto, the bargain ought to be set aside as inequitable. See Garrett v. Moore-McCormack Co., Pa., 317 U.S. 239, 63 S.Ct. 246, 251, 87 L.Ed. 239.

Ward-staff. In old records, a constable's or watchman's staff.

Ward-wit. In old English law, immunity or exemption from the duty or service of ward, or from contributing to such service. Exemption from amercement for not finding a man to do ward.

Warda /ˈwɜːrda/. L. Lat. In old English law, ward; guard; protection; keeping; custody. A ward; an infant under wardship.

Warden. A guardian; a keeper. Person in primary charge of prison. This is the name given to various officers.

Warden of the cinque ports /ˈwɔr+dən əv 5ə sɪŋk ˈpɔrts/. In English law, the title of the governor or presiding officer of the Cinque Ports (q.v.).

Wards and liveries. In English law, the title of a court of record, established in the reign of Henry VIII. See Court of Wards and Liveries.

Warehouse. Structure used for the reception and storage of goods and merchandise. Carter v. Bauman, C.C.A.Cal., 19 F.2d 855, 856. The term may include any structure used to hold goods, stores or wares temporarily or for a length of time. In re Miller Land & Livestock Co., D.C.Mont., 56 F.Supp. 34, 35.

Warehouse book. A book used by merchants to contain an account of the quantities of goods received, shipped, and remaining in stock.

Warehouseman. One engaged in business of receiving and storing goods of others for compensation or profit; person who receives goods and merchandise to be stored in his warehouse for hire; one who, as a business and for hire, keeps and stores goods of others. U.C.C. § 7–102. State ex rel. and for Use and Benefit of Cawrse v. American Surety Co. of New York, 148 Or. 1, 35 P.2d 487, 491. The business is public or private as it may be conducted for storage of goods of general public or for those of certain persons. The general commercial laws governing rights and liabilities of warehousemen are provided in U.C.C. § 7–201 et seq.

Warehousemen's lien. Right of warehouseman to retain possession of goods until storage charges have been paid. See U.C.C. §§ 7–209, 7–210.

Warehouse receipt. A receipt issued by a warehouseman for goods received by him on storage in his warehouse. U.C.C. §§ 1–201(45), 7–201. It is evidence of title to goods thereby represented. Woldson v. Davenport Mill & Elevator Co., 169 Wash. 298, 13 P.2d 478, 480. For form and content of warehouse receipt, see U.C.C. § 7–202. As regards altered warehouse receipts, see U.C.C. § 7–208. See also Field warehouse receipt.

Warehouse system. A system of public stores or warehouses, established or authorized by law, called "bonded warehouses," in which an importer may deposit goods imported, in the custody of the revenue officers, paying storage, but not being required to pay the customs duties until the goods are finally removed for consumption in the home market, and with the privilege of withdrawing the goods from store for the purpose of re-exportation without paying any duties.

Bonded warehouse. Special type of private warehouse used to store products on which a federal tax must be paid before they can be sold.

Warning. A pointing out of danger. Also a protest against incurring it. The purpose of a "warning" is to apprise a party of the existence of danger of which he is not aware to enable him to protect himself against it, and where the party is aware of the danger, the warning will serve no useful purpose and is unnecessary, and there is no duty to warn against risks which are open and obvious. Wiseman v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 214 Minn. 101, 7 N.W.2d 672, 675.

Federal laws require warning labels to be affixed to potentially dangerous products, clothes, drugs, tools, and the like.

See also Caveat; Caveat emptor.

Under the old practice of the English court of probate, a warning was a notice given by a registrar of the principal registry to a person who had entered a caveat, warning him, within six days after service, to enter an appearance to the caveat in the principal registry, and to set forth his interest, concluding with a notice that in default of his doing so the court would proceed to do all such acts, matters, and things as should be necessary. By the rules under the judiciary acts, a writ of summons has been substituted for a warning.

Warnnursta /ˈwɔrnəst(ə)руː/. In old English records, garniture; furniture; provision.

Warnoth. In old English law, an ancient custom, whereby, if any tenant holding of the Castle of Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double, and, for the second failure, treble, etc.

War power. Power of federal government to wage war successfully. Brown v. Wright, C.C.A.W.Va., 137 F.2d 484, 489; United States v. Maviglia, D.C.N.J., 52 F.Supp. 946, 947. It embraces every aspect of national defense, including protection of war materials as well as members of armed forces from injury and danger; but direct interference with liberty and property and abridgement of constitutional guaranties of freedom can be justified under the "war power" only where the danger to the government is real, impending and imminent. Schueler v. Drum, D.C.Pa., 51 F.Supp. 383, 387.

While Congress has power to declare war (Art. I, § 8, U.S.Const.), the President, as Commander in Chief, has ultimate power over conduct of war including tactics and strategy (Art. II, § 1).

See also War (War clauses).

Warrant, v. In contracts, to engage or promise that a certain fact or state of facts, in relation to the subject-matter, is, or shall be, as it is represented to be.

In conveyancing, to assure the title to property sold, by an express covenant to that effect in the deed of conveyance. To stipulate by an express covenant that the title of a grantee shall be good, and his possession undisturbed.

Warrant, n. An order by which the drawer authorizes one person to pay a particular sum of money.

An authority issued to a collector of taxes, empowering him to collect the taxes extended on the assessment roll, and to make distress and sale of goods or land in default of payment.

A command of a council, board, or official whose duty it is to pass upon the validity and determine the amount of a claim against the municipality, to the treasurer to pay money out of any funds in the municipal treasury, which are or may become available for the purpose specified, to a designated person whose claim therefor has been duly adjusted and allowed. Roe v. Roosevelt Water Conservation Dist., 41 Ariz. 197, 16 P.2d 967, 970; State ex rel. Toomey v. State Board of Examiners, 74 Mont. 1, 238 P. 316, 328. A "warrant" differs from a "bond" in that a bond is a "negotiable instrument", whereas a warrant is nonnegotiable and is subject at all times to the defenses it would be were it in the hands of the original payee, which is not the case with a negotiable bond. Adams v. McGill, Tex.Civ.App., 146 S.W.2d 332, 334.

See also Land warrant; Possessory warrant; Probable cause; Search warrant; Share-warrant to bearer.

Arrest warrant. A written order which is made on behalf of the state and is based upon a complaint issued pursuant to statute and/or court rule and which commands law enforcement officer to arrest a person and bring him before magistrate. Pillsbury v. State, 31 Wis.2d 87, 142 N.W.2d 187, 190. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 4.

Form. The warrant shall be signed by the magistrate and shall contain the name of the defendant or, if his name is unknown, any name or description by which he can be identified with reasonable certainty. It shall describe the offense charged in the complaint. It shall command that the defendant be arrested and brought before the nearest available magistrate. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4(c).
WARRANT

Issuance. If it appears from the complaint, or from an affidavit or affidavits filed with the complaint, that there is probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed and that the defendant has committed it, a warrant for the arrest of the defendant shall issue to any officer authorized by law to execute it. Upon the request of the attorney for the government a summons instead of a warrant shall issue. More than one warrant or summons may issue on the same complaint. If a defendant fails to appear in response to the summons, a warrant shall issue. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4(a).

See also Arrest; Probable cause; Warrantless arrest.

Bench warrant. See Bench.

Death warrant. A warrant issued generally by the chief executive authority of a state, directed to the sheriff or other proper local officer or the warden of a jail, commanding him at a certain time to proceed to carry into execution a sentence of death imposed by the court upon a convicted criminal.

Distress warrant. See Distress.

General warrant. A process which formerly issued from the state secretary's office in England to take up from the state secretary's office in England to take up uncertainty by a vote of the House of Commons on the 22nd April, 1766.

It was declared illegal and void and publisher of such obscene and seditious libels as were specified in it. It was declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the House of Commons on the 22nd April, 1766.

Interest warrant. Order drawn by a corporation on its bank directing the bank to pay a bondholder who is entitled to interest.

Landlord's warrant. See Landlord.

Land warrant. See that title.

Outstanding warrant. An order for arrest of a person which has not yet been executed.

Search warrant. See that title.

Stock warrant. A certificate entitling the owner to buy a specified amount of stock at a specified time(s) for a specified price. Differs from a stock option only in that options are granted to employees and warrants are sold to the public. A “warrant” is an instrument issued by a corporation giving holder right to subscribe to capital stock of corporation at fixed price either for limited period or perpetually.

Warrant creditor. See Creditor.

Warrant of arrest. See Arrest.

Warrant of attorney. An instrument in writing, addressed to one or more attorneys therein named, authorizing them, generally, to appear in any court, or in some specified court, on behalf of the person giving it, and to confess judgment in favor of some particular person therein named, in an action of debt. It usually contains a stipulation not to bring any action, or any writ of error, or file a bill in equity, so as to delay him; such writing usually being given as security for obligation on which judgment was authorized, and in such procedure service of process is not essential. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Warrant of commitment. A written authority committing a person to custody.

Warrant officers. In the United States army, navy, coast and geometric survey, coast guard, marine corps and air force, these are a class of inferior officers who hold their rank by virtue of a written warrant instead of a commission.

Warrant of merchantability. Warranty that goods are reasonably fit for general purpose for which sold. Sperry Flour Co. v. De Moss, 141 Or. 440, 18 P.2d 242, 243. See also Warranty.

Warrant to sue and defend. In old English practice, a special warrant from the crown, authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend for him. 3 Bl.Comm. 25. A special authority given by a party to his attorney, to commence a suit, or to appear and defend a suit, in his behalf. These warrants are now disused, though formal entries of them upon the record were long retained in practice.

Warrantees. A person to whom a warranty is made.

Warrantia chartier /wohrânti(a) kârdiy/. In old English practice, warranty of charter. A writ which lay for one who, being enfeoffed of lands or tenements, with a clause of warranty, was afterwards impeached in an assize or other action in which he could not vouch to warranty. In such case, it might be brought against the warrantor, to compel him to assist the tenant with a good plea or defense, or else to render damages and the value of the land, if recovered against the tenant. 3 Bl.Comm. 300.

Warrantia custodiæ /wohrânti(a) kâstôwdîyi/. An old English writ, which lay for a man who had been a ward to another, in respect to lands sold to be holden by knight-service; which land, when it was bought by the ancestors of the ward, was warranted free from such thraldom. The writ lay against the warrantor and his heirs.

Warrantia diel /wohrânti(a) dielîy/. A writ which lay for a man who, having had a day assigned him personally to appear in court in any action in which he had been sued, was in the meantime by commandment, employed in the king's service, so that he could not come at the day assigned. It was directed to the justices that they might not record him in default for that day.

Warrantizare /wohrânti(a)zeriy/. In old English law conveying, to warrant; to bind one's self, by covenant in a deed of conveyance, to defend the grantee in his title and possession.

Warrantizare est defendere et acquietare tenentem, quid warrantum vocavit, in seilina sua; et tenens de re warranti exgambium habebit ad vsament /wohrânti(a)zeriy est dafenddy ed akwayatëriy tanëntem, kwây wohrântam vokvëyad, sëyëna s(y)ûwy; et âtan(d)dy dëy wohrântay eksìyam(h)am hâbiybod âd vlëshf(y)am. To warrant is to defend and insure in peace the tenant, who calls for warranty, in his seisin; and the tenant in warranty will have an exchange in proportion to its value.

Warrantless arrest. Arrest of a person without a warrant. It is generally permissible if the arresting offi-
WARRANTY

A written warranty which fails to meet one or more of the minimum standards for a "full" warranty. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2303. See Full warranty, infra. Warranty limited to labor or to materials for a specified time, commonly given by automobile dealers in connection with sale of used cars.
Third party beneficiaries of warranties. See Privity.

Warranty of title. An implied promise that the seller owns the item offered for sale. (1) Subject to subsection (2) there is in a contract for sale a warranty by the seller that (a) the title conveyed shall be good, and its transfer rightful; and (b) the goods shall be delivered free from any security interest or other lien or encumbrance of which the buyer at the time of contracting has no knowledge. (2) A warranty under subsection (1) will be excluded or modified only by specified language or by circumstances which give the buyer reason to know that the person selling does not claim title in himself or that he is purporting to sell only such right or title as he or a third person may have. (3) Unless otherwise agreed a seller who is a merchant regularly dealing in goods of the kind warrants that the goods shall be delivered free of the rightful claim of any third person by way of infringement or the like but a buyer who furnishes specifications to the seller must hold the seller harmless against any such claim which arises out of compliance with the specifications. U.C.C. § 2-312.

Written warranty. Any written affirmation of fact or written promise made in connection with the sale of a consumer product by a supplier to a buyer which relates to the nature of the material or workmanship and affirms or promises that such material or workmanship is defect free or will meet a specified period of time, or any undertaking in writing in connection with the sale by a supplier of a consumer product to refund, repair, replace, or take other remedial action with respect to such product in the event that such product fails to meet with the specifications set forth in the undertaking, which written affirmation, promise, or undertaking becomes part of the basis of the bargain between a supplier and a buyer for purposes other than resale of such product. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301. See also Express warranty, supra.

Insurance

A warranty in the law of insurance consists of a statement by insured upon the literal truth of which the validity of the contract depends. Statement, made in insurance contract by insured, which is susceptible of no construction other than that parties mutually intended that policy should not be binding, unless such statement be literally true. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Wood, Tex.Civ.App., 79 S.W.2d 665, 668.

A statement, description or undertaking on the part of insured, appearing in the policy or in another instrument properly incorporated in the policy and relating contractually to the risk insured against. Reid v. Hardware Mut. Ins. Co. of Carolinas, S. C., 252 S.C. 339, 166 S.E.2d 317, 321.

Affirmative warranty. In the law of insurance, warranties may be either affirmative or promissory. Affirmative warranties may be either express or implied, but they usually consist of positive representations in the policy of the existence of some fact or state of things at the time, or previous to the time, of the making of the policy; they are, in general, conditions precedent, and if untrue, whether material to the risk or not, the policy does not attach, as it is not the contract of the insurer.

Express warranty. An agreement expressed in a policy, whereby the assured stipulates that certain facts relating to the risk are or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the same subject have been or shall be done.

Promissory warranty. In the law of insurance, a warranty which requires the performance or omission of certain things or the existence of certain facts after the beginning of the contract of insurance and during its continuance, and the breach of which will avoid the policy. See also Promissory warranty.

Generally

Construction warranty. An undertaking or promise made by seller or building contractor of new home that such home is fit for the purpose intended; i.e. free from structural, electrical, plumbing, etc. defects. Many states have statutes which provide the purchaser with such warranty protection. See Home Owners Warranty; also, Warranty of habitability, below.

Continuing warranty. One which applies to the whole period during which the contract is in force; e.g., an undertaking in a charter-party that a vessel shall continue to be of the same class that she was at the time the charter-party was made.

Covenant of warranty. See Covenant.

Cumulation and conflict of warranties. Warranties whether express or implied shall be construed as consistent with each other and as cumulative, but if such construction is unreasonable the intention of the parties shall determine which warranty is dominant. In ascertaining that intention the following rules apply: (a) Exact or technical specifications displace an inconsistent sample or model or general language of description. (b) A sample from an existing bulk displaces inconsistent general language of description. (c) Express warranties displace inconsistent implied warranties other than an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. U.C.C. § 2-317.

General warranty. The name of a covenant of warranty inserted in deeds, by which the grantor binds himself, his heirs, etc., to "warrant and forever defend" to the grantee, his heirs, etc., the title thereby conveyed, against the lawful claims of all persons whatsoever. Where the warranty is only against the claims of persons claiming "by, through, or under" the grantor or his heirs, it is called a "special warranty."

Implied warranty. Exists when the law derives it by implication or inference from the nature of the transaction or the relative situation or circumstances of the parties. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Walker, Tex.Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 627, 632. See also this topic under Commercial Sales above.

Lineal warranty. In old conveyancing, the kind of warranty which existed when the heir derived title to the land warranted either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty.

Personal warranty. One available in personal actions, and arising from the obligation which one has contracted to pay the whole or part of a debt due by another to a third person. Flanders v. Seelye, 105 U.S. 718, 26 L.Ed. 1217.
Special warranty. A clause of warranty inserted in a deed of lands, by which the grantor covenants, for himself and his heirs, to "warrant and forever defend" the title to the same, to the grantee and his heirs, etc., against all persons claiming "by, through, or under" the grantor or his heirs. If the warranty is against the claims of all persons whatsoever, it is called a "general" warranty. See also Covenant.

Warranty deed. See that title.

Warranty of fitness. Warranty by seller that goods sold are suitable for special purpose of buyer. See also Implied warranty under Commercial Sales above.

Warranty of habitability. Every landlord of dwelling unit impliedly warrants that the premises are fit for habitation at time of letting and will remain so during term of tenancy. Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway, 363 Mass. 184, 293 N.E.2d 831.

Under "implied warranty of habitability," applicable to new housing, builder-vendor warrants that he has complied with the building code of the area in which the structure is located and that the residence was built in a workmanlike manner and is suitable for habitation. Duncan v. Schuster-Graham Homes, Inc., Colo.App., 563 P.2d 976, 977. See also Habitability.

Warranty deed. Deed in which grantor warrants good clear title. The usual covenants of title are warranties of seisin, quiet enjoyment, right to convey, freedom from encumbrances and defense of title as to all claims.

Warranty, voucher to. In old English practice, the calling a warrantor into court by the party warranted (when tenant in a real action brought for recovery of such lands), to defend the suit for him.

Warren. A term in English law for a place in which birds, fishes, or wild beasts are kept.

A franchise or privilege, either by prescription or grant from the king, to keep beasts and fowls of warren, which are hares, conies, partridges, peashants, etc. Also any place to which such privilege extends.

Free warren. A franchise for the preserving and custody of beasts and fowls of warren. 2 Bl.Comm. 39, 417. This franchise gave the grantee sole right of killing, so far as his warren extended, on condition of excluding other persons. 2 Bl.Comm. 39.

War risk insurance. See Insurance.

Warsaw Convention. Treaty concluded in Warsaw, Poland in 1929 consisting of rules, including limitation of liability, for international air travel. The United States is a party to such treaty.

Warscot /wɔːrkət/. In Saxon law, a customary or usual tribute or contribution towards armor, or the arming of the forces.

Worth. In old English law, a customary payment, supposed to be the same with ward-penny.

Wash. A shallow part of a river or arm of the sea. The sandy, rocky, gravelly, boulder-bestrewn part of a river bottom deposited on level land near mouth of a canyon representing rocks and gravel washed down by a mountain stream.

Wash bank. A bank composed of such substance that it is liable to be washed away by the action of the water thereon, so as to become unsafe to travelers on highway.

Washington, Treaty of. A treaty signed on May 8, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States of America, with reference to certain differences arising out of the war between the northern and southern states of the Union, the Canadian fisheries, and other matters.

Wash sale. The sale and purchase of the same or similar asset within a short time period. For income tax purposes, losses on a sale of stock may not be recognized if equivalent stock is purchased within thirty days before or thirty days after the date of sale. I.R.C. § 1091.

Also a fictitious kind of sale, disallowed on stock and other exchanges, in which a broker who has received orders from one person to buy and from another person to sell a particular amount or quantity of some particular stock or commodity simply transfers the stock or commodity from one principal to the other and pockets the difference, instead of executing both orders separately to the best advantage in each case, as is required by the rules of the different exchanges. U. S. v. Keough, D.C.Nev., 48 F.2d 246, 252. See also Sale.

Wash transaction. See Wash sale.

Waste. An abuse or destructive use of property by one in rightful possession. Spoil or destruction, done or permitted, to lands, houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, by the tenant thereof, to the prejudice of the heir, or of him in reversion or remainder. 2 Bl.Comm. 281. Camden Trust Co. v. Handle, 132 N.J.Eq. 97, 26 A.2d 865, 869. A destruction or material alteration or deterioration of the fabric, or of the value, or of a part thereof, by any person rightfully in possession, but who has not the fee title or the full estate. An unreasonable or improper use, abuse, mismanagement, or omission of duty touching real estate by one rightfully in possession, which results in its substantial injury. Any unlawful act or omission of duty on the part of the tenant which results in permanent injury to the inheritance. Unreasonable conduct by owner of possessorial estate that results in physical damage to real estate and substantial diminution in value of estates in which others have an interest. Pleasure Time, Inc. v. Kuss, 78 Wis.2d 373, 254 N.W.2d 463, 467. The term implies neglect or misconduct resulting in material damage to or loss of property, but does not include ordinary depreciation of property due to age and normal use over a comparatively short period of time. First Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Coffeyville v. Moulds, 202 Kan. 557, 451 P.2d 215, 220. It is the violation of an obligation to treat the premises in such manner that no harm be done to them, and that the estate may revert to those having an underlying interest, undeteriorated by any willful or negligent acts. Camden Trust Co. v. Handle, 190 N.J.Eq. 125, 21 A.2d 354, 358.
WASTE

The early English doctrine was to the effect that anything which changed the character or nature of the land, notwithstanding the fact that it was an improvement thereto, constituted "waste." The primary distinction between "waste" and "trespass" is that in waste the injury is done by one rightfully in possession. Camden Trust Co. v. Han¬ improvement thereto, constituted "waste."

construction or carrying away of something attached to the freehold, and "permissive waste" is the failure to take reasonable care of the premises. Voluntary or commissive waste consists of injury to the demised premises or some part thereof, when occasioned by some deliberate or voluntary act, as, for instance, the pulling down of a house or removal of floors, win¬ dows, doors, furnaces, shelves, or other things affixed to and forming part of the freehold. Contrasted with "permissive" waste.

Writ of waste. See that title.

Waste-book. A book used by merchants, to receive rough entries or memoranda of all transactions in the order of their occurrence, previous to their being posted in the journal. Otherwise called a "blotter."

Wastel /wóstol/. A standard of quality of bread, made of the finest white flour. Cocket bread was slightly inferior in quality. The statute of 1266 mentions seven kinds of bread.

Waste water. Water that is actually wasted or not needed by the claimant thereto; water which, after it has served the purpose of the lawful claimant thereto, has been permitted to run to waste or to escape; and water which from unavoidable causes escapes from ditches, canals, or other works of the lawful claimants.

Rock Creek Ditch & Flume Co. v. Miller,

93 Mont. 248, 17 P.2d 1074, 1077. But water is not "waste water" so long as it remains on the land of the original appropriator.

Wasting asset. A natural resource having a limited useful life and, hence, subject to amortization called depletion. Examples are timberland, oil and gas wells, and ore deposits. See also Wasting property.

Wasting property. Includes such property as leasehold interests; royalties; patent rights; interests in things the substance of which is consumed, such as mines, oil and gas wells, quarries and timberlands; interests in things which are consumed in the using or are worn out by use, such as machinery and farm imple ments. In re Pennock's Will, 285 N.Y. 475, 35 N.E.2d 177, 178.

Wasting trust. A trust in which the trustee may apply a part of the principal to make good a deficiency of income. Trust, the res of which consists in whole or in part of property which is gradually being con sumed (i.e. consisting of wasting assets).

Wasters /wéstárz/. In old statutes, a kind of thieves.

Watch, v. To keep guard; to stand as sentinel; to be on guard at night, for the preservation of security, peace and good order.

Watch, n. A division of a ship's crew. At sea, the ship's company is divided into two watches, larboard and starboard, with a mate to command each.

O'Hara v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 269 U.S. 364, 46

S.Ct. 157, 160, 70 L.Ed. 313. Also the division of the day into time periods of service of the officers and crew, and, by immemorial Anglo-Saxon maritime cus tom, the time period of a watch never exceeded four hours. The Denali, C.C.A.Wash., 105 F.2d 413, 416.

See also Lookout.

Watch and ward. "Watch" denotes keeping guard dur ing the night; "ward," by day.

Watchman. One whose general duties consist of guard ing, patrolling, and overseeing a building, group of buildings, or other property.

Water. As designating a commodity or a subject of ownership, this term has the same meaning in law as in common speech; but in another sense, and espe cially in the plural, it may designate a body of water, such as a river, a lake, or an ocean, or an aggregate of such bodies of water, as in the phrases "foreign waters," "waters of the United States," and the like.

See also Flood water; High water line or mark; Implied reservation of water doctrine; Inland waters; Intermittent stream; Low water mark; Waste water.

Backwater. See that title.

Coast waters. See that title.

Developed water. Water which is brought to the surface and made available for use by the party claiming the water.

Flood waters. Waters which escape from a water course in great volume and flow over adjoining lands in no regular channel. The fact that such errant waters make for themselves a temporary channel or follow some natural channel, gully, or depression does not affect their character as "flood waters" or give to the course which they follow the character of a natural "water course." Mogle v. Moore, Cal.App., 96 P.2d 147, 150, 151; Everett v. Davis, Cal.App., 107 P.2d 650, 654, 655. See also Flood.

Foreign waters. Those belonging to another nation or country or subject to another jurisdiction, as distinguished from "domestic" waters.

Inland waters. See Inland.

Navigable waters. See Navigable.

Percolating waters. Those which pass through the ground beneath the surface of the earth without any definite channel, and do not form a part of the body or flow, surface or subterranean, of any water-course. They may be either rain waters which are slowly infiltrating through the soil or waters seeping through the banks or the bed of a stream, and which have so far left the bed and the other waters as to have lost their character as a part of the flow of that stream. Those which ooze, seep, or filter, through the soil beneath the surface without a defined channel, or in a course that is unknown and not discoverable from surface indications without excavation for that purpose. C & W Coal Corp. v. Salyer, 200 Va. 18, 104 S.E.2d 50, 53.

Private waters. Non-navigable streams, or bodies of water not open to the resort and use of the general public, but entirely owned and controlled by one or more individuals.

Public waters. Such as are adapted for the purposes of navigation, or those to which the general public have a right of access, as distinguished from artificial lakes, ponds, and other bodies of water privately owned, or similar natural bodies of water owned exclusively by one or more persons.

Subterranean waters. Waters which lie wholly beneath the surface of the ground, and which either ooze and seep through the subsurface strata without pursuing any defined course or channel (percolating waters), or flow in a permanent and regular but invisible course, or lie under the earth in a more or less immovable body, as a subterranean lake.

Surface waters. As distinguished from the waters of a natural stream, lake, or pond, surface waters are such as diffuse themselves over the surface of the ground, following no defined course or channel, and not gathering into or forming any more definite body of water than a mere bog or marsh. They generally originate in rains and melting snows, but the flood waters of a river may also be considered as surface waters if they become separated from the main current, or leave it never to return, and spread out over lower ground. Water derived from rains and melting snows that is diffused over surface of the ground, and it continues to be such and may be impounded by the owner of the land until it reaches some well-defined channel in which it is accustomed to, and does, flow with other waters, or until it reaches some permanent lake or pond, whereupon it ceases to be "surface water" and becomes a "water course" or a "lake" or "pond," as the case may be. State v. Hiber, 48 Wyo. 172, 44 P.2d 1005, 1008, 1011.

Surplus water. Water running off from ground which has been irrigated; water not consumed by the process of irrigation; water which the land irrigated will not take up.

Territorial waters. See that title.

Tide waters. See Tide.

Water-bayley. An officer mentioned in the colony laws of New Plymouth, (A.D. 1671,) whose duty was to collect dues to the colony for fish taken in their waters. Probably another form of water-bailiff.

Water course. See that title, infra.

Water front. Land or land with buildings fronting on a body of water.

Water-gage. A sea-wall or bank to restrain the current and overflowing of the water; also an instrument to measure water.

Water-gang. A Saxon word for a trench or course to carry a stream of water, such as are commonly made to drain water out of marshes.

Water-gavel. In old records, a gavel or rent paid for fishing in or other benefit received from some river or water.

Water-logged. A vessel is "water-logged" when she becomes heavy and unmanageable on account of the leakage of water into the hold.

Water-mark. See that title, infra.

Water power. The water power to which a riparian owner is entitled consists of the fall in the stream when in its natural state, as it passes through his land, or along the boundary of it; or, in other words, it consists of the difference of level between the surface where the stream first touches his land, and the surface where it leaves it. The use of water for power according to common understanding means its application to a water wheel to the end that its energy under the specified head and fall may be utilized and converted into available force. Holyoke Water Power Co. v. American Writing Paper Co., D.C.Mass., 17 F.Supp. 895, 898.

Water rights. A legal right, in the nature of a corporeal hereditament, to use the water of a natural stream or water furnished through a ditch or canal, for general or specific purposes, such as irrigation, mining, power, or domestic use, either to its full capacity or to a measured extent or during a defined portion of the time. City of Los Angeles v. City of Glendale, Cal.App., 132 P.2d 574, 584. A usufruct in a stream consisting in the right to have the water flow so that some portion of it may be reduced to possession and be made private property of individual, and it is therefore the right to divert water from natural stream by artificial means and apply the same to beneficial use. Ronzio v. Denver & R. G. W. R. Co., C.C.A.Utah, 116 F.2d 604, 605. It includes rights to change the place of diversion, storage, or use of water if rights of other water users will not be injured. Lindsey v. McClure, C.C.A.N.M., 136 F.2d 65, 70. It was also said to be real property which may be sold and transferred separately from land on which it has been used. Federal Land Bank of Spokane v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 54 Idaho 161, 29 F.2d 1008, 1011. Waterscape. An aqueduct or passage for water.

Waters of the United States. All waters within the United States which are navigable for the purposes of commerce, or whose navigation successfully aids commerce, are included in this term. See also Territorial waters.

Water course. A running stream of water; a natural stream fed from permanent or natural sources, including rivers, creeks, runs, and rivulets. There must be a stream, usually flowing in a particular direction, though it need not flow continuously. It may sometimes be dry. It must flow in a definite channel, having a bed or banks, and usually discharges itself into some other stream or body of water. It must be something more than a mere surface drainage over the entire face of the tract of land, occasioned by unusual freshets or other extraordinary causes. Leader v. Matthews, 192 Ark. 1049, 95 S.W.2d 1138, 1139; Turner v. Big Lake Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 52 S.W.2d 491, 493.

A water course, in the legal meaning of the word, does not consist merely of the stream as it flows within the banks which form its channel in ordinary stages of water, but the stream still retains its character as a water course when, in times of ordinary high water, the stream extending beyond its own banks, is accustomed to flow down over the adjacent lowlands in a broader and still definable stream. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hadley, 168 Okl. 588, 35 P.2d 463, 466.

Water flowing underground in a known and well defined channel is not “percolating water”, but constitutes a “water course”, and is governed by law applicable to “surface streams”, rather than by law applicable to percolating waters. Bull v. Siegrist, 169 Or. 180, 126 P.2d 832, 834.

See also Ancient water course.

Natural water course. A natural stream flowing in a defined bed or channel; one formed by the natural flow of the water, as determined by the general superfluities or conformation of the surrounding country, as distinguished from an “artificial” water course, formed by the work of man, such as a ditch or canal.

Water district. Official geographical areas which are supplied water under regulation of a body of commissioners or other officials.

Watered stock. Stock which is issued by a corporation as fully paid-up stock, when in fact the whole amount of the par value thereof has not been paid in. Stock issued as bonus or otherwise without consideration or issued for a sum of money less than par value, or issued for labor, services, or property which at a fair valuation is less than the par value.

Water-mark. A mark indicating the highest point to which water rises, or the lowest point to which it sinks.

Transparent design or symbol which can be seen when paper is held up to the light and is used to identify the manufacturer of the paper or the genuineness of the document such as a check or stamp.

High-water mark. This term is properly applicable to tidal waters, and designates the line on the shore reached by the water at the high or flood tide. With reference to the waters of artificial ponds or lakes, created by dams in unnavigable streams, it denotes the highest point on the shores to which the dams can raise the water in ordinary circumstances. The high-water mark of a river, not subject to tide, is the line which the river impresses on the soil by covering it for sufficient periods to deprive it of vegetation, and to destroy its value for agriculture.

Low-water mark. That line on the shore of the sea which marks the edge of the waters at the lowest point of the ordinary ebb tide. The “low-water mark,” of a river is the point to which the water recedes at its lowest stage.

Water ordeaL. See Ordeal.

Waterway. See Water course.

Waveson /véyvsan/. In old records, such goods as, after a wreck, swim or float on the waves. See Flotsam.

Wax scot. A duty anciently paid twice a year towards the charge of wax candles in churches.

Way. A passage, path, road, or street. In a technical sense, a right of passage over land. See also Easement.

Private way. A right which a person has of passing over the land of another. In another sense (chiefly in New England) a private way is one laid out by the local public authorities for the accommodation of individuals and wholly or chiefly at their expense, but not restricted to their exclusive use, being subject, like highways, to the public easement of passage.

Right of way. See that title.

Way of necessity. Exists where land granted is completely enveloped by land of the grantor, or partially by his land and the land of strangers. The law implies from these facts that a private right of way over the grantor's land was granted to the grantee as appurtenant to the estate. It is not merely one of convenience, and never exists where person may reach highway over his own land. And it cannot legally exist where neither the party claiming the way nor owner of land over which it is claimed, nor anyone under whom either of them claim, was ever seized of both tracts of land at same time. It is not based on continuous adverse user, but arises by implication of law from necessities of case, and ceases when necessity therefor ceases. The extent of a “way of necessity” is a way such as is required for complete and beneficial use of land to which the way is impliedly attached. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Yarian, 219 Ind. 477, 39 N.E.2d 604, 606.

Way-bill. Written document made out by carrier listing point of origin and destination, consignor and consignee, and describing goods included in shipment by railroad or motor carrier. Such constitutes the written description of the shipment in the event of any claim. See also Bill of lading.

Way-going crop. A crop of grain sown by a tenant for a term certain, during his tenancy, but which will not ripen until after the expiration of his lease. In the absence of an express agreement to the contrary tenant is entitled thereto.

Wayleave. A right of way over or through land for the carriage of minerals from a mine or quarry. It is an easement, being a species of the class called “rights of way,” and is generally created by express grant or reservation.

Wayneglum /weyneyjamy/. Implements of husbandry.

Ways and means. In a legislative body, the “committee on ways and means” is a committee appointed to inquire into and consider the methods and sources for raising revenue, and to propose means for providing the funds needed by the government. Standing committee of House of Representatives responsible for supervising legislation dealing with financial matters.

W.D. An abbreviation for “Western District;” e.g. U.S. District Court for Western District of Kentucky.

Weald /wylld/. Sax. A wood; the woody part of a country.

Wealrleaf /wyylriyf/. In old English law, the robbing of a dead man in his grave.

Wealth. Large quantity of possessions, assets, securities, and the like. State of having abundant financial resources and properties. All material objects, capable of satisfying human wants, desires, or tastes, having a value in exchange, and upon which human labor has been expended; i.e., which have, by such labor, been either reclaimed from nature, extracted or gathered from the earth or sea, manufactured from raw materials, improved, adopted, or cultivated. The aggregate of all the things, whether material or immaterial, which contribute to comfort and enjoyment, which cannot be obtained without more or less labor, and which are objects of frequent sale.

Weapon. An instrument of offensive or defensive combat, or anything used, or designed to be used, in destroying, defeating or injuring a person. The term is chiefly used, in law, in the statutes prohibiting the carrying of “concealed” or “deadly” weapons. See also Dangerous weapon; Deadly weapon; Offensive weapon.

Wear, or weir /wir/ /wyr/. A great dam or fence made across a river, or against water, formed of stakes interlaced by twigs of osier, and accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill.

Wear and tear. “Natural wear and tear” means deterioration or depreciation in value by ordinary and reasonable use of the subject-matter.

Wearing apparel. As generally used in statutes, refers not merely to a person’s outer clothing, but covers all articles usually worn, and includes underclothing. Arnold v. U. S., 147 U.S. 494, 13 S.Ct. 406, 37 L.Ed. 253. All articles of dress generally worn by persons in the calling and condition of life and in the locality of the person in question. In re Steimes’ Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

Webb-Pomerene Act. Federal Act (1918) which provides a qualified exemption for an export association from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws. The Act is administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

Wed. Sax. A covenant or agreement. A pledge.

Wedbedrip. Sax. In old English law, a customary service which tenants paid to their lords, in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties; as if a covenant to reap for the lord at the time of his bidding or commanding.

Wedlock. State of marriage. As used in the phrase “born out of wedlock” in Uniform Illegitimacy Act, means the ceremony or state of marriage or status of husband and wife and is equivalent to matrimony but does not include status of wife and her paramour. State v. Coliton, N.D., 73 N.D. 582, 17 N.W.2d 546, 549.

Week. A period of seven consecutive days of time; and, in some uses, the period beginning with Sunday and ending with Saturday. See Leach v. Burr, 188 U.S. 510, 23 S.Ct. 393, 47 L.Ed. 567; Progressive Building and Loan Ass’n v. McIntyre, 169 Tenn. 491, 89 S.W.2d 336, 337. Words “two weeks” mean fourteen days. Fisher v. Booher, 269 Ky. 501, 107 S.W.2d 307, 309.

Week-work. In early English times, the obligation of a tenant to work two or three days in every week for his lord, during the greater part of the year, and four or five during the summer months.

Wehading. In old European law, the judicial combat, or duel; the trial by battel.

Weighage /wyaj/. In English law, a duty or tax paid for weighing merchandise. It is called “tronage” for weighing wool at the king’s beam, or “pesage” for weighing other avoidupois goods.

Weight. A measure of heaviness or ponderosity; and in a metaphorical sense influence, effectiveness, or power to influence judgment or conduct. The quantity of heaviness, the quality of being heavy, the degree or extent of downward pressure under the influence of gravity, or the quantity of matter as estimated by the balance or scale.

Gross weight. Of packaged goods, the total weight, including contents and packaging.

Net weight. Of packaged goods, includes only weight of contained goods. See also Net weight.

Weight of evidence. The balance or preponderance of evidence; the inclination of the greater amount of credible evidence, offered in a trial, to support one Welfare. Well-doing or well-being in any respect; the enjoyment of health and common blessings of life; exemption from any evil or calamity; prosperity; happiness. See also General welfare; Public welfare.

Welfare clause. Constitutional provision (Art. I, § 8) permitting the federal government to enact laws for the overall general welfare of the people. It is the basis for the exercise of implied powers necessary to carry out the express provisions of the Constitution.

Well, adj. In marine insurance, a term used as descriptive of the safety and soundness of a vessel, in a warranty of her condition at a particular time and place; as, "warranted well at _____ on _____."

In old reports, good, sufficient, unobjectionable in law; the opposite of "ill."

Well, n. A hole or shaft sunk into the earth in order to obtain a fluid, such as water, oil, brine, or natural gas, from a subterranean supply. Loosely, any shaft or pit dug or bored in earth, or any space so constructed as to suggest or be likened to, a well for water; a pit or hole in the ground or a hollow cylinder built in such hole; or a shaft or excavation in mining. Seismograph Service Corporation v. Mason, 193 Okl. 623, 145 P.2d 967, 970.

Well knowing. A phrase used in pleading as the technical expression in laying a scienter (q.v.).

Welshing /wel'lishing/. Receiving a sum of money or a valuable thing, undertaking to return the same or the value thereof together with other money, if an event (for example, the result of a horse-race) shall be determined in a certain manner, and at the time of receiving the deposit intending to cheat and defraud the depositor. The crime is larceny at common law.

Welsh mortgage. See Mortgage.

Wend. In old records, a large extent of ground, comprising several juga; a perambulation; a circuit.

Westuma. The purchase price of a wife among the heathen Germans.

Wera, or were /wer(a)/. The estimation or price of a man, especially of one slain. In the criminal law of the Anglo-Saxons, every man's life had its value, called a "were," or "capitis estimatio."

Weregelt thef /wирґelt-fйй/. Sax. In old English law, a robber who might be ransomed.

Weregild, or wergild /wирґild/wирґild/. This was the price of homicide, or other atrocious personal offense, paid partly to the king for the loss of a subject, partly to the lord for the loss of a vassal, and partly to the next of kin of the injured person. In the Anglo-Saxon laws, the amount of compensation varied with the degree or rank of the party slain. See Angild; Angyld.

Werelada. A purging from a crime by the oaths of several persons, according to the degree and quality of the accused.

Werp-geld. Belg. In European law, contribution for jettison; average.

Westminster. A city immediately adjoining London, and forming a part of the metropolis; formerly the seat of the superior courts of the kingdom.

Westminster Confession. A document containing a statement of religious doctrine, concocted at a conference of British and continental Protestant divines at Westminster, in the year 1643, which subsequently became the basis of the Scotch Presbyterian Church.

Westminster the First, Statute of. The statute 3 Edw. I, A.D. 1275. This statute, which deserves the name of a code rather than an act, is divided into fifty-one chapters. Without extending the exemption of churchmen from civil jurisdiction, it protects the property of the church from the violence and spoliation of the king and the nobles, provides for freedom of popular elections, because sheriffs, coroners, and conservators of the peace were still chosen by the freeholders in the county court, and attempts had been made to influence the election of knights of the shire, from the time when they were instituted. It contains a declaration to enforce the enactment of Magna Charta against excessive fines, which might operate as perpetual imprisonment; enumerates and corrects the abuses of tenures, particularly as to marriage of wards; regulates the levying of tolls, which were imposed arbitrarily by the barons and by cities and boroughs; corrects and restrains the powers of the king's escheator and other officers; amends the criminal law, putting the crime of rape on the footing to which it has been lately restored, as a most grievous, but not capital, offense; and embraces the subject of procedure in civil and criminal matters, introducing many regulations to render it cheap, simple, and expeditious. Certain parts of this act are repealed by St. 26 & 27 Vict., c. 125.

West Saxon Lage. The laws of the West Saxons, which obtained in the counties to the south and west of England, from Kent to Devonshire. Blackstone supposes these to have been much the same with the laws of Alfred, being the municipal law of the far most considerable part of his dominions, and particularly including Berkshire, the seat of his peculiar residence. 1 Bl.Comm. 65. See Mercen-lage.

Whack. To divide into shares, apportion, parcel out, make a division settlement, square accounts, or to pay.

Whale. A royal fish, the head being the king's property, and the tail the queen's.

Wharf. A structure on the margin or shore of navigable waters, alongside of which vessels can be brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded, or a space of ground, artificially prepared, for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the discharge of such vessel.
Private wharf. One whose owner or lessee has the exclusive enjoyment or use thereof. The M. L. C. No. 10, C.C.A.N.Y., 10 F.2d 699, 702.

Public wharf. One to which vessels and the public can resort, either at will or on assignment of a berth by a harbor authority. Kafline v. Brooklyn Eastern Dist. Terminal Co., 180 App.Div. 858, 168 N.Y.S. 120, 121.

Wharfinger /hˈwɜːrfɪnər/. The owner or occupier of a wharf; one who for hire receives merchandise on his wharf, either for the purpose of forwarding or for delivery to the consignee on such wharf.

Wharfing out, right of. A right to the exclusive use of submerged lands as by the affixing thereto or the establishment thereon of a permanent structure to some point within the navigable body of water, deep and wide enough to dock ocean-going vessels, and it presupposes exclusive use and to that extent may interfere with fishing or navigation. City of Oakland v. Hogan, 41 Cal.App.2d 333, 106 P.2d 987, 994.

Wharton Rule. In criminal law of conspiracy, the rule that an agreement by two persons to commit a particular crime cannot be prosecuted as a conspiracy when the crime is of such a nature as to require necessarily the participation of the two persons, e.g. adultery. It is named after the criminal law author, Francis Wharton. Iannelli v. U.S., 420 U.S. 770, 95 S.Ct. 1902, 44 L.Ed.2d 507.

Whim. Passing fancy; an impulse or caprice. Used in jury instruction in cautioning the jurors to avoid returning a verdict based on anything but the evidence and its strength, not on the personal whim or caprice of the jurors.

Whiplash injury. A snapping of the neck when a person gets his head thrown forward or back or from side to side. Breitenberg v. Parker, 237 Ark. 261, 372 S.W.2d 288, 332. It is caused by a sudden and unexpected forced movement of the neck of an individual while he is in a relaxed position and against which he cannot protect himself. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Sides, C.A.La., 320 F.2d 437, 441. It may result in several types of pathological findings, such as sprain, fracture, dislocation and so forth. Self v. Johnson, La.App., 124 So.2d 324, 325; Luquette v. Bouillion, La.App., 184 So.2d 766, 768.

Whipping-post. A post or stake to which a criminal is tied to undergo the punishment of whipping.

White acre. A fictitious name given to a piece of land for purposes of illustrating real property transactions.

Whitecaps. The name of an unlawful organization against which Tennessee in 1897 enacted a statute (Acts 1897, c. 52) entitled, "An act to prevent and punish the formation or continuance of conspiracies and combinations for certain unlawful purposes," etc., commonly known as the "Law against Whitecaps." Persons guilty of any offense under the act were rendered incompetent for jury service.

White-collar crimes. Term usually signifies law violations by corporations or individuals including theft or fraud and other violations of trust committed in the course of the offender's occupation (e.g., embezzlement, price fixing, antitrust violations, and the like). Non-violent crimes.

White mule. Corn whisky; contraband whisky.

In the legislation of the slave period, persons without admixture of colored blood, whatever the actual complexion might be.

White rents. In old English law, rents paid in silver, and called "white rents," or "redditus albi," to distinguish them from rents payable in corn, labor, provisions, etc., called "black-rent" or "black-mail." See Alba firma.

White slave. A term used in the United States statutes and in common talk (though not very appropriately) to indicate a female with reference to whom an offense is committed under the so-called Mann White Slave Traffic Act of June 25, 1910 (18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2421-2424), prohibiting the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce for immoral purposes of women and girls. See Mann Act.

White spurs. A kind of esquires.

Whitsun farthings /h(w)itsan ferdigz/. Pentecostals (q.v.).

Whittanwari /h(w)itanwēriyay/. In old English law, a class of offenders who whitened stolen ox-hides and horse-hides so that they could not be known and identified.

Whole. Hale, hearty, strong, sound; also, entire, complete.

Whole blood. See Blood relations.

Whole chest. In the tea trade, a chest containing 100 to 140 pounds or more.

Whole life insurance. See Insurance (Life insurance).

Wholesale. Selling to retailers or jobbers rather than to consumers. Stolze Lumber Co. v. Stratton, 386 Ill. 334, 54 N.E.2d 554, 558. A sale in large quantity to one who intends to resell.

Wholesale dealer. One whose business is the selling of goods in gross to retail dealers, and not by the small quantity or parcel to consumers thereof. Veazey Drug Co. v. Bruza, 169 Okl. 418, 37 P.2d 294.

Wholesale price. That which retailer pays in expectation of obtaining higher price by way of profit from resale to ultimate consumer. Guess v. Montague, D.C.S.C., 51 F.Supp. 61, 63.

Wholesaler. One who buys in comparatively large quantities, and then resells, usually in smaller quantities, but never to the ultimate consumer. He sells either to a "jobber," a sort of middleman, or to a "retailer," who in turn sells to the consumer. Fischbach Brewing Co. v. City of St. Louis, 231 Mo.App. 793, 95 S.W.2d 335, 340. See also Jobber.

Wholly. Not partially. In a whole or complete manner; entirely; completely; perfectly. Exclusively; to the exclusion of other things. Equally; totally; fully. Chicago & Calumet Dist. Transit Co. v. Mueller, 213 Ind. 530, 12 N.E.2d 247, 249.

Wholly and permanently disabled. Term within disability clause of life policy does not mean "partial" or "temporary," and is not to be construed literally so as to require condition of complete helplessness or utter hopelessness to be entitled to benefits. See also Disability; Total disability; Wholly disabled.

Wholly dependent. A person is to be regarded as "wholly dependent" upon a workman, within meaning of compensation acts, when his support is derived wholly from the workman's wages. Baker v. Western Power & Light Co., 147 Kan. 571, 78 P.2d 36, 46; Central Surety and Insurance Corporation v. Industrial Commission, 94 Colo. 341, 30 P.2d 253, 255. Person may be "wholly dependent" on workman though he may have some slight savings of his own, or some other slight property, or be able to make something by his own service. United States Coal & Coke Co. v. Sutton, 268 Ky. 405, 105 S.W.2d 173, 177.

Wholly destroyed. A building is "wholly destroyed" within the meaning of statutes permitting recovery of the full amount of a fire insurance policy, when, although some part remains standing, it can no longer be designated as a building. The words mean totally destroyed as a building, although there is not an absolute extinction of all its parts.

Wholly disabled. These words within accident policy do not mean a state of complete physical and mental incapacity or utter hopelessness but mean rather inability to do all the substantial and material acts necessary to carry on a certain business or occupation or any business or occupation in a customary and usual manner and which acts the insured would be able to perform in such manner but for the disability. Total disability. See also Disability; Total disability.

Whore. A woman who practices illicit sexual intercourse, either for hire or to gratify a depraved passion. A woman given to promiscuous intercourse. A woman who practices unlawful commerce with men, particularly one who does so for hire; a harlot; a concubine; a prostitute.

Whoremaster. Ordinarily, one who practices lewdness; also, one who keeps or procures whores for others; a pimp; a procurer.

Wic. A place on the sea-shore or the bank of a river.

Wlca. A country house or farm.

Wick. Sax. A village, town, or district. Hence, in composition, the territory over which a given jurisdiction extends. Thus, "baillwick" is the territorial jurisdiction of a bailliff or sheriff or constable. "Sheriffwick" was also used in the old books.
Wild land. Land in a state of nature, as distinguished from improved or cultivated land.

Wild animals (or animals fere nature). Animals of an untamable disposition; animals in a state of nature.

Wildcat strike. A strike called without authorization from the union or in violation of a no-strike clause in the collective bargaining agreement.

Wild land. Land in a state of nature, as distinguished from improved or cultivated land.

Wild's case, rule in. A devise to B. and his children or issue, B. having no issue at the time of the devise, gives him an estate tail; but, if he have issue at the time, B. and his children take joint estates for life.

Will, v. An auxiliary verb commonly having the mandatory sense of "shall" or "must." It is a word of certainty, while the word "may" is one of speculation and uncertainty.

Will, n. Wish; desire; pleasure; inclination; choice; the faculty of conscious, and especially of deliberate, action. When a person expresses his "will" that a particular disposition be made of his property, his words are words of command, and the word "will" as so used is mandatory, comprehensive, and dispositive in nature.

A "will" is generally defined as an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property, to take effect after his death, and which by its own nature is ambulatory and revocable during his lifetime. In re Brown's Estate, Tex.Civ.App., 507 S.W.2d 801, 803. The legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death. In re Cohen's Estate, 445 Pa. 549, 284 A.2d 754, 756.

The legal expression or declaration of a person's mind or wishes as to the disposition of his property, to be performed or take effect after his death. A revocable instrument by which a person makes disposition of his property to take effect after his death. Howard's Ex'r v. Dempster, 246 Ky. 153, 54 S.W.2d 660, 661. A written instrument executed with the formalities required by statutes, whereby a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his death.

For competency to make will, see Competent.

See also Codicil; Conditional will; Duplicate will; Last will; Lost will; Mariner's will; Mutual will; No contest clause; Nuncupative will; Publication; Reciprocal will; Revocation of will; Sailor's will; Simultaneous death clause; Witness (Witness to will).

Ambulatory will. A changeable will (ambulatoria voluntas), the phrase merely denoting the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his life-time.

Antenuptial will. See that title.

Conditional will. A conditional disposition is one which depends upon the occurrence of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take effect or to be defeated. If the happening of an event named in a will is the reason for making the will, it is "conditional"; but, if the testator intends to dispose of his property in case the event happens, the will is "conditional."

Conjoint will. See Joint will, infra.

counter wills. Another name for "double," "mutual," or "reciprocal" wills.

Double will. Called also a "counter," "mutual," or "reciprocal" will. See Double.

Estate at will. This estate entitles the grantee or lessee to the possession of land during the pleasure of both the grantor and himself, yet it creates no sure or durable right, and is bounded by no definite limits as to duration. It must be at the reciprocal will of both parties (for, if it be at the will of the lessor only, it is a lease for life), and the dissent of either determines it.

Holographic will. One that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself. Sometimes spelled " holographic." See Holograph.

Joint and mutual will. One executed jointly by two persons with reciprocal provisions, which shows on its face that the devises are made one in consideration of the other. Joint will is one in which the same paper is executed by two persons as their respective wills; mutual wills are the separate wills of two persons, more or less reciprocal in their provisions. See also Mutual will, below.

Joint will. One where the same instrument is made the will of two or more persons and is jointly signed by them. Such wills are usually executed to make testamentary disposition of joint property. A joint or conjoint will is a testamentary instrument executed by two or more persons, in pursuance of a common intention, for the purpose of disposing of their several interests in property owned by them in common, or of their separate property treated as a common fund, to a third person or persons.

Living will. A living will is a short document that basically states: “If the situation should arise in which there is not reasonable expectation of my recovery from physical or mental disability, I request that I be allowed to die and not be kept alive by artificial means or heroic measures.” A living will is not considered a legal document in the majority of states.

Mutual and reciprocal will. See Joint and mutual will, supra; also Mutual will, infra.

Mutual will. One in which two or more persons make mutual or reciprocal provisions in favor of each other. “Mutual wills” are the separate wills of two persons which are reciprocal in their provisions, and such a will may be both joint and mutual. Sometimes called a “reciprocal,” “double,” or “counter” will. See also Joint and mutual will, above.

Mystic will. See Testament.

Non-intervention will. In some jurisdictions, one authorizing the executor to act without bond and to manage, control, and settle the estate without the intervention of any court whatsoever.

Nuncupative will. See that title.

Reciprocal will. One in which two or more persons make mutual or reciprocal provisions in favor of each other. Also known as a “mutual,” “double,” or “counter” will. See Joint and mutual will; Mutual will, supra.

Renunciation of will. See Renunciation.

Self-proved wills. A will which eliminates some of the formalities of proof by execution in compliance with statute. It is made self-proved by affidavit of attesting witnesses in the form prescribed by statute. Most statutes provide that, unless contested, such a will may be admitted to probate without testimony of subscribing witnesses. See e.g. Uniform Probate Code, § 2-504.

Statute of will. See Wills Act, infra.

Unofficious will. In the civil law, testamentum inofficium. One made in disregard of natural obligations as to inheritance. 2 Bl.Comm. 502. It has no place in the common law.

Criminal Law

The power of the mind which directs the action of a man. See Intent; Motive; Willful and wanton act.

Willa /wīlə/. In Hindu law, the relation between a master or patron and his freedman, and the relation between two persons who had made a reciprocal testamentary contract.

Will contest. A proceeding sui generis, a suit in rem, having for its purpose determination of questions of construction of will or whether there is or is not a will. McCravy v. Michael, 233 Mo.App. 797, 109 S.W.2d 50, 51. Any kind of litigated controversy concerning the eligibility of an instrument to probate as distinguished from validity of the contents of the will. In re Hesse’s Estate, 62 Ariz. 273, 157 P.2d 347, 349. Will contests are commonly governed by state statutes; e.g. Uniform Probate Code § 3-407, burden of proof.

Willful. Proceeding from a conscious motion of the will; voluntary. Intending the result which actually comes to pass; designed; intentional; not accidental or involuntary.

An act or omission is “willfully” done, if done voluntarily and intentionally and with the specific intent to do something the law forbids, or with the specific intent to fail to do something the law requires to be done; that is to say, with bad purpose either to disobey or to disregard the law.

Willful is a word of many meanings, its construction often influenced by its context. Screws v. United States, 325 U.S. 91, 101, 65 S.Ct. 1031, 1035, 89 L.Ed. 1495.

The word [willfully] often denotes an act which is intentional, or knowing, or voluntary, as distinguished from accidental. But when used in a criminal context it generally means an act done with a bad purpose; without justifiable excuse; stubbornly, obstinately, perversely. The word is also employed to characterize a thing done without ground for believing it is lawful or conduct marked by a careless disregard whether or not one has the right so to act. United States v. Murdock, 290 U.S. 389, 394, 395, 54 S.Ct. 223, 225, 78 L.Ed. 381.

Whatever the grade of the offense the presence of the word “willful” in the definition will carry with it the implication that the act must have been done willingly rather than under compulsion and, if something is required to be done by statute, the implication that a punishable omission must be by one having the ability and means to perform. In re Trombley, 31 Cal.2d 801, 807, 193 P.2d 734, 739.

A willful act may be described as one done intentionally, knowingly, and purposely, without justifiable excuse, as distinguished from an act done carelessly, thoughtlessly, heedlessly, or inadvertently. A willful act differs essentially from a negligent act. The one is positive and the other negative.

Premeditated; malicious; done with evil intent, or with a bad motive or purpose, or with indifference to the natural consequences; unlawful; without legal justification.

Willful and malicious injury. For such to exist there must be an intent to commit a wrong either through actual malice or from which malice will be implied. Such an injury does not necessarily involve hatred or ill will, as a state of mind, but arises from intentional wrong committed without just cause or excuse. In re Wernecke, D.C.N.Y., 1 F.Supp. 127, 168. It may involve merely a willful disregard of what one knows to be his duty, an act which is against good morals and wrongful in and of itself, and which necessarily causes injury and is done intentionally.

Willful and wanton act. In order to constitute “willful and wanton” misconduct, act or omission must be not only negligent, but exhibit conscious disregard for safety of others. Turner v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 35 Ill.App.3d 331, 341 N.E.2d 488, 493.
Willful misconduct of employee. Under Workers’ Compensation Acts, precluding compensation, means more than mere negligence, and contemplates the intentional doing of something with knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injuries, or with reckless disregard of its probable consequences. “Willful misconduct” disqualifying claimant for unemployment compensation involves: (1) wanton and wilful disregard of employee’s interest, (2) deliberate violation of rules, (3) disregard of standards of behavior, which an employer can rightfully expect from his employee, or (4) negligence which manifests culpability, wrongful intent, evil design, or substantial disregard for employer’s interests or the employee’s duties and obligations. Wilson v. Com. Unemployment Compensation Bd. of Review, 15 Pa.Cmwlth. 314, 325 A.2d 500, 501.

Willful murder. The unlawful and intentional killing of another without excuse or mitigating circumstances. See also Murder; Premeditation.

Willful neglect. The intentional disregard of a plain or manifest duty, in the performance of which the public or the person injured has an interest.

Willful neglect suggests intentional, conscious, or known negligence—a knowing or intentional mistake. Puget Sound Painters v. State, 45 Wash.2d 819, 278 P.2d 302, 303. Within adoption statutes, is neglect that is intentional, deliberate, and without just cause or excuse. In re Adoption of P. J. K., Mo.App., 359 S.W.2d 360, 363.

Willful negligence. See Negligence.

Willfulness. See Willful.

Willful or wanton misconduct. Failure to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to a person who is actually known to be or reasonably expected to be within the range of a dangerous act being done. Georgia Power Co. v. Deese, 78 Ga.App. 704, 51 S.E.2d 724, 728. Conduct which is either intentional or committed under circumstances exhibiting a reckless disregard for the safety of others, such as a failure, after knowledge of an impending danger, to exercise ordinary care to prevent it or a failure to discover the dangers through recklessness or carelessness when it could have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care. Lewandowski v. Bakey, 32 Ill.App.3d 26, 335 N.E.2d 572, 574. An aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than degree from ordinary lack of care. Morgan v. Southern Pac. transp. Co., 37 Cal.App.3d 1006, 112 Cal.Rptr. 695, 698.

Willful or wanton negligence. Failure to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to a person who is actually known to be, or reasonably is expected to be, within range of a known danger. Barall Food Stores v. Bennett, 194 Okl. 508, 153 P.2d 106, 109, 110. See also Negligence.

Willful tort. Term implies intent or purpose to injure. It involves elements of intent or purpose and malice or ill will, but malice or ill will may be shown by indifference to safety of others, with knowledge of their danger, or failure to use ordinary care to avoid injury after acquiring such knowledge. Hillard v. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co., 68 Ohio App. 426, 34 N.E.2d 75, 77, 23 O.O. 133.

Williams Act. See Tender offer.

Willingly. Voluntarily; unreluctantly; without reluctance, and of one’s own free choice. See Willful.

As used in an instruction that one cannot invoke the doctrine of self-defense if he enters a fight willingly, it means voluntarily, aggressively, and without legal excuse.

Wills Act. In England, the statute 32 Hen. VIII, c. 1, passed in 1540, by which persons seized in fee-simple of lands holden in socage tenure were enabled to devise the same at their will and pleasure, except to bodies corporate; and those who held estates by the tenure of chivalry were enabled to devise two-thirds parts thereof.

Also, the statute 7 Wm. IV & 1 Vict., c. 26, passed in 1837, and also called “Lord Langdale’s Act.” This act permits of the disposition by will of every kind of interest in real and personal estate, and provides that all wills, whether of real or of personal estate, shall be attested by two witnesses, and that such attestation shall be sufficient. Other important alterations are effected by this statute in the law of wills.

Will substitutes. Documents which purportedly accomplish what a will is designed to accomplish, e.g. trusts, life insurance, joint ownership of property.

Winchester measure. The standard measure of England, originally kept at Winchester. 1 Bl.Comm. 274.

Winchester, Statute of. A statute passed in the thirteenth year of the reign of Edward I, by which the old Saxon law of police was enforced, with many additional provisions. It required every man to provide himself with armor to aid in keeping the peace; and if it did not create the offices of high and petty constables, it recognized and regulated them, and charged them with duties answering somewhat to those of our militia officers. The statute took its name from the ancient capital of the kingdom. It was repealed by the Statute of 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 27.

Winding-up acts. In English law, general acts of parliament, regulating settlement of corporate affairs on dissolution.

Window. An opening made in the wall of a building to admit light and air, and to furnish a view or prospect. The use of this word in law is chiefly in connection with the doctrine of ancient lights and other rights of adjacent owners.
Window tax. In England, a tax on windows, formerly levied on houses which contained more than six windows, and were worth more than £5 per annum; established by St. 7 Wm. III, c. 18. St. 14 & 15 Vict., c. 36, substituted for this tax a tax on inhabited houses.

Wind up. To settle the accounts and liquidate the assets of a partnership or corporation, for the purpose of making distribution and dissolving the concern. See Liquidation.

Wiretapping. A form of electronic eavesdropping where, upon court order, enforcement officials surreptitiously listen to phone calls. Federal (Crime Control and Safe Streets Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2510 et seq.) and state statutes govern the circumstances permitted. See also Eavesdropping.

Wish. Eager desire; longing; expression of desire; a thing desired; an object of desire. As used in wills, it is sometimes merely directory or precatory; and sometimes mandatory; being equivalent to "will," to "give" or "devise."

Wista. In Saxon law, half a hide of land, or sixty acres.

Wit. To know; to learn; to be informed. Used only in the infinitive, to wit, which term is equivalent to "that is to say," "namely," or "videlicet."

Witam /widam/. The purgation from an offense by the oath of the requisite number of witnesses.

Witan /widan/. In Saxon law, wise men; persons of information, especially in the laws; the king's advisers; members of the king's council; the optimates, or principal men of the kingdom.

Witchcraft. Under English Sts. 33 Hen. VIII, c. 8, and 1 Jac. I, c. 12, the offense of witchcraft, or supposed intercourse with evil spirits, was punishable with death. These acts were not repealed until 1736. 4 Bl.Comm. 60, 61. In Salem, Massachusetts in 1692, 20 persons were put to death by hanging for such offense. The last victims in England were executed in 1716, and the last in Scotland in 1722.

Wite /wáyt/. Sax. A punishment, pain, penalty, mule, or criminal fine.

With all faults. This phrase, used in a contract of sale, implies that the purchaser assumes the risk of all defects and imperfections, provided they do not destroy the identity of the thing sold. See also As is.

With consent. Phrase within a constitution providing that Governor shall appoint officers with consent of senate, requires confirmation by senate and appointment under such provision is ineffective until confirmed. State, ex rel. Nagle v. Stafford, 97 Mont. 275, 34 P.2d 372, 379. See also Consent.

Withdraw. To take away what has been enjoyed; to take from. To remove, as deposits from bank, or oneself from competition, candidacy, etc.

Withdrawal. Removal of money or securities from a bank or other place of deposit. Withdrawal from a conspiracy requires either making a clean breast to authorities or communicating the abandonment of the conspiracy in manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators. U. S. v. Mardian, 546 F.2d 973, 978.

Withdrawal of charges. A failure to prosecute by the person preferring charges—distinguished from a dismissal, which is a determination of their invalidity by the tribunal hearing them. See Nolle proseuqul.

Withdrawing a juror. The withdrawing of one of the twelve jurors from the box, with the result that, the jury being now found to be incomplete, no further proceedings can be had in the cause. The withdrawing of a juror is always by the agreement of the parties, and is frequently done at the recommendation of the judge, where it is doubtful whether the action will lie; and in such case the consequence is that each party pays his own costs. It is, however, WITHDRAWING RECORD. The withdrawing by a plaintiff of the nisi prius or trial record filed in a cause, just before the trial is entered upon, for the purpose of preventing the cause from being tried. This may be done before the jury are sworn, and afterwards, by consent of the defendant’s counsel.

WITHHERNAM. A taking by way of reprisal; a taking or a reprisal of other goods, in lieu of those that were formerly taken and eloned or withheld. A reciprocal distress, in lieu of a previous one which has been eloigned. 3 Bl.Comm. 148.

The name of a writ which issues on the return of elongata to an alias or pluries writs of replevin, by which the sheriff is commanded to take the defendant’s own goods which may be found in his bailiwick, and keep them safely, not to deliver them to the plaintiff until such time as the defendant chooses to submit himself and allow the distress, and the whole of it to be replevied; and he is thereby further commanded that he do return to the court in what manner he shall have executed the writ.

WITHERSAKE. An apostate, or perfidious renegade.

WITHOLD. To retain in one’s possession that which belongs to or is claimed or sought by another. To withhold.

WITHOLDING. Deductions from salaries or wages, usually for income taxes, to be remitted by the employer, in the employee’s name, to the taxing authority.

WITHOLDING OF EVIDENCE. It is an obstruction of justice to stifle, suppress or destroy evidence knowing that it may be wanted in a judicial proceeding or is being sought by investigating officers, or to remove records from the jurisdiction of the court, knowing they will be called for by the grand jury in its investigation. United States v. Perlstein, 126 F.2d 799; Commonwealth v. Russo, 177 Pa.Super. 470, 111 A.2d 359.

WITHOLDING TAX. Tax collected by deductions from employe’s wages as he is paid. See Withholding.

WITHIN. Into. In inner or interior part of, or not longer in time than. Through. Inside the limits of; during the time of.

When used relative to time, has been defined variously as meaning any time before; at or before; at the end of; before the expiration of; not beyond; not exceeding; not later than. Glenn v. Garrett, Tex.Civ.App., 84 S.W.2d 515, 516.

WITHOUT. Outside; beyond; in excess of.

WITHOUT DAY. A term used to signify that an adjournment or continuance is indefinite or final, or that no subsequent time is fixed for another meeting, or for further proceedings. See Sine die.

WITHOUT DELAY. Instantly; at once. Also, within the time allowed by law.

WITHOUT GIVING COMPENSATION THEREFOR. This phrase within automobile guest statute indicates an intention to exclude application of “guest” designation not only to one who has paid cash or equivalent for his transportation but also to one who pays such recompense as makes it worth the other’s while to furnish the ride. Duclos v. Tashjian, 32 Cal.App.2d 444, 90 P.2d 140, 143.

WITHOUT HER CONSENT. This phrase, as used in the law of rape, is equivalent to “against the will.”

WITHOUT IMPROVEMENT OF WASTE. The effect of the insertion of this clause in a lease for life is to give the tenant the right to cut timber on the estate, without making himself thereby liable to an action for waste. When a tenant for life holds the land without improvement of waste, he is, of course, dispensable for waste, whether wilful or otherwise. But still this right must not be wantonly abused so as to destroy the estate; and he will be enjoined from committing malicious waste.

WITHOUT NOTICE. As used of purchasers, etc., such language is equivalent to “in good faith.” To be a holder in due course, one must take a bill or note “without notice” that it is overdue or has been dishonored or of any defense against or claim to it on the part of any person. See U.C.C. §§ 3–302(1)(c), 3–304(3). See also Good faith; Notice.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Where an offer or admission is made “without prejudice,” or a motion is denied or a suit dismissed “without prejudice,” it is meant as a declaration that no rights or privileges of the party concerned are to be considered as thereby waived or lost except in so far as may be expressly conceded or decided. The words “without prejudice” import into any transaction that the parties have agreed that as between themselves the receipt of money by one and its payment by the other shall not of themselves have any legal effect on the rights of the parties, but they shall be open to settlement by legal controversy as if the money had not been paid. In re Bell, 344 Pa. 223, 25 A.2d 344, 350.

A dismissal “without prejudice” allows a new suit to be brought on the same cause of action. The words “without prejudice”, as used in judgment, ordinarily import the contemplation of further proceedings, and, when they appear in an order or decree, it shows that the judicial act is not intended to be res judicata of the merits of the controversy. Fiumara v. American Surety Co. of New York, 346 Pa. 584, 31 A.2d 283, 287.

WITHOUT RECOURSE. This phrase, used in making a qualified indorsement of a negotiable instrument, signifies that the indorser means to save himself from liability to subsequent holders, and is a notification that, if payment is refused by the parties primarily liable, recourse cannot be had to him. See U.C.C. § 3–414(1).

An indorser “without recourse” specially declines to assume any responsibility for payment. He assumes no contractual liability by virtue of the indorsement itself, and becomes a mere assignor of the title to the paper, but such an indorsement does not indicate that the indorsee takes with notice of defects, or that he does not take on credit of the other parties to the note.

WITHOUT RECOURSE WITHOUT RESERVE

Without reserve. A term applied to a sale by auction, indicating that no price is reserved.

Without stint. Without limit; without any specified number.

Without this, that. In common law pleading, formal words used by way of traverse, particularly by way of special traverse, importing an express denial of some matter of fact alleged in a previous pleading, including the declaration, plea, replication, etc. The Latin term is absque hoc.

With prejudice. The term as applied to judgment of dismissal is as conclusive of rights of parties as if action had been prosecuted to final adjudication adverse to the plaintiff. Fenton v. Thompson, 352 Mo. 199, 176 S.W.2d 456, 460.

With recourse. Term which may be used in indorsing negotiable instrument and by which the indorser indicates that he remains liable for payment of the instrument. See also Without recourse.

With strong hand. In common law pleading, a technical phrase indispensable in describing a forcible entry in an indictment. No other word or circumlocution would answer the same purpose.

Witness, v. To subscribe one's name to a deed, will, or other document, for the purpose of attesting its authenticity, and proving its execution, if required, by bearing witness thereto. See also Affirmation; Attest; Jurat; Verification.

Witness, n. In general, one who, being present, personally sees or perceives a thing; a beholder, spectator, or eyewitness. One who testifies to what he has seen, heard, or otherwise observed. Wigginton v. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, C.C.A.Ind., 126 F.2d 659, 666.

A person whose declaration under oath (or affirmation) is received as evidence for any purpose, whether such declaration be made on oral examination or by deposition or affidavit. Code Civ.Proc.Cal. § 1878.

One who is called upon to be present at a transaction, or the making of a will, that he may thereafter, if necessary, testify to the transaction.

See also Accomplice witness; Competent witness; Expert witness; Hostile or adverse witness; Lay witness; Prosecuting witness; Subscribing witness; Swift witness; Target witness.

Adverse witness. A witness whose mind discloses a bias hostile to the party examining him. See also Adverse witness.

Attesting witness. See Attestation.

Credible witness. See Credible.

Material witness. In criminal trial, a witness whose testimony is crucial to either the defense or prosecution. In most states, he may be required to furnish bond for his appearance and, for want of surety, he may be confined until he testifies. See also Material witness.

Witness to will. One who has attested the will by subscribing his name thereto. The trend in state statutes is to require two witnesses to attest to the signing of the will. See e.g. Uniform Probate Code § 2-502. See also Attestation clause.

Witness against himself. The federal constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case, to be a "witness against himself" must be applied in a broad spirit to secure to citizen immunity from self-accusation and provision applies to all proceedings wherein defendant is acting as a witness in any investigation that requires him to give testimony that might tend to show him guilty of crime. 5th Amend., U.S.Const. United States v. Goodner, D.C. Colo., 35 F.Supp. 286, 290. See also Immunity; Self-incrimination.

Witnessing part. In a deed or other formal instrument, is that part which comes after the recitals, or, where there are no recitals, after the parties. It usually commences with a reference to the agreement or intention to be effectuated, then states or refers to the consideration, and concludes with the operative words and parcels, if any. Where a deed effectuates two distinct objects, there are two witnessing parts.

Wittingly. With knowledge and by design, excluding only cases which are the result of accident or forgetfulness, and including cases where one does an unlawful act through an erroneous belief of his right.

Witword /witwârd/. A legally allowed claim, more especially the right to vindicate ownership or possession by one's affirmation under oath.

Wolf's head. In old English law, this term was used as descriptive of the condition of an outlaw. Such persons were said to carry a wolf's head (caput lupini); for if caught alive they were to be brought to the king, and if they defended themselves they might be slain and their heads carried to the king, for they were no more to be accounted of than wolves. "Woolferthfod."

Wong. Sax. In old records, a field.

Wood-corn. In old records, a certain quantity of oats or other grain, paid by customary tenants to the lord, for liberty to pick up dead or broken wood.

Wood-geld. In old English law, money paid for the liberty of taking wood in a forest. Immunity from such payment.

Wood leave. A license or right to cut down, remove, and use standing timber on a given estate or tract of land.

Wood-mote. In forest law, the old name of the court of attachments; otherwise called the "Forty-Days Court." 3 Bl.Comm. 71.

Wood plea court. In old English law, a court held twice in the year in the forest of Clun, in Shropshire, for determining all matters of wood and agistments.

Woods. A forest; land covered with a large and thick collection of natural forest trees. The old books say that a grant of "all his woods" (omnes boscos suos) will pass the land, as well as the trees growing upon it.

Woodwards. In English law, officers of the forest, whose duty consists in looking after the wood and venison, and preventing offenses relating to the same.

Words. Symbols indicating ideas and subject to contraction and expansion to meet the idea sought to be expressed. Such have been referred to as labels whose content and meaning are continually shifting with the times. Massachusetts Protective Ass'n v. Bayersdorfer, C.C.A. Ohio, 105 F.2d 595, 597.

As used in law, this term generally signifies the technical terms and phrases appropriate to particular instruments, or aptly fitted to the expression of a particular intention in legal instruments. See the subtitles following.

Words actionable in themselves. In libel and slander, refer to words which are libelous or slanderous per se. See Actionable per se.

Words of art. The vocabulary or terminology of a particular art or science, and especially those expressions which are idiomatic or peculiar to it.

Words of limitation. See Limitation.

Words of procreation. To create an estate tail by deed, it is necessary that words of procreation should be used in order to confine the estate to the descendants of the first grantee, as in the usual form of limitation, "to A. and the heirs of his body."

Words of purchase. See Purchase.

Work. To exert one's self for a purpose; to put forth effort for the attainment of an object; to be engaged in the performance of a task, duty, or the like. The term covers all forms of physical or mental exertions, or both combined, for the attainment of some object other than recreation or amusement. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Muscoda Local No. 123, Ala., 321 U.S. 590, 64 S.Ct. 698, 703, 705, 88 L.Ed. 949. See also Labor.

Work and labor. The name of one of the common counts in actions of assumpsit, being for work and labor done and materials furnished by the plaintiff for the defendant.

Workaway. Extra man employed on vessel as an accommodation to himself. The Tashmoo, D.C.N.Y., 48 F.2d 366, 368.

Worker. See Workman.

Workhouse. Place of confinement for persons convicted of lesser offenses. Such imprisonment is usually for a relatively short duration.

Working interest. See Royalty.

Working papers. By statute in certain states, such must be filed by one employing a minor.

Discovery. See Work product rule.

Workman. One who labors; one employed to do business for another. One employed in manual labor, skilled or unskilled; an artificer, mechanic, or artisan.

Workmen's or Workers' Compensation Acts. State statutes which provide for fixed awards to employees or their dependents in case of employment related accidents and diseases, dispensing with proof of negligence and legal actions. Some of the acts go beyond the simple determination of the right to compensation, and provide insurance systems, either under state supervision or otherwise. The various state acts vary as to extent of workers and employment covered, amount and duration of benefits, etc.

The effect of most workmen's or workers' compensation acts is to make the employer strictly liable to an employee for injuries sustained by the employee which arise out of and in the course of employment, without regard to the negligence of the employer or that of the employee. Where the Act applies, it has been uniformly held that this remedy is exclusive and bars any common-law remedy which the employee may have had, the compensation scheduled under the act being the sole measure of damage.

Federal employees are covered by the Federal Employees Compensation Act; seamen by the Jones Act; longshoremen and harbor workers by the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. Additional benefits to disabled workers are provided under Title II of the Social Security Act.

Workmen's or workers' compensation boards or courts. Such exist in many states with jurisdiction to review cases arising under workmen's or workers' compensation acts and related rules and regulations.

Workmen's or workers' compensation insurance. Insurance coverage purchased by employers to cover risks under workmen's or workers' compensation laws. Such is usually mandated by state acts, unless the employer is self-insured. See also Insurance.

Work of national importance. Under the Selective Service Act providing that conscientious objectors should be assigned to such work means word of value to the nation for the common defense and general welfare. 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix § 305(g). United States ex rel. Zucker v. Osborne, D.C.N.Y., 54 F.Supp. 984, 986, 987.

Work of necessity. As excepted from operation of Sunday closing statutes embraces all work reasonably essential to the economic, social or moral welfare of the people, viewed in light of the habits and customs of the age in which they live and of the community in which they reside. Francisco v. Commonwealth, 190 Va. 371, 23 S.E.2d 234, 236, 239.

Work product rule. A party may obtain discovery of documents and tangible things otherwise discoverable under Rule 26(b)(1) and prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial by or for another party or by or for that other party's representative (including his attorney, consultant, surety, indemnitor, insurer, or Agent) only upon a showing that the party seeking discovery has substantial need of the materials in the preparation of his case and that he is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means. In ordering discovery of such materials when the required showing has been made, the court shall protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(3). See also Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 91 L.Ed 451.
Work Product Rule

"Work product" which is protected against discovery covers material prepared by an attorney in anticipation of litigation, including private memoranda, written statements of witnesses and mental impressions of personal recollections prepared or formed by attorney in anticipation of litigation or for trial. Com. of Puerto Rico v. S S Zoe Colocotroni, D.C. Puerto Rico, 61 F.R.D. 653, 658.

Work release program. Correctional programs which allow an inmate to leave the institution for the purpose of continuing regular employment during the daytime, but reporting back to lockup nights and weekends.

Works. Sometimes, a mill, factory, or other establishment for performing industrial labor of any sort; also, a building, structure, or erection of any kind upon land, as in the civil-law phrase "new works."

New works. A term of the civil law comprehending every sort of edifice or other structure which is newly commenced on a given estate or lot. Its importance lies chiefly in the fact that a remedy is given ("denunciation of new works") to an adjacent proprietor whose property would be injured or subjected to a more onerous servitude if such a work were allowed to proceed to completion.

Public works. Works, whether of construction or adaptation, undertaken and carried out by the national, state, or municipal authorities, and designed to subserve some purpose of public necessity, use, or convenience; such as public buildings, roads, aqueducts, parks, etc. All fixed works constructed for public use. The term usually relates to the construction of public improvements and not to their maintenance or operation.

Work week. Within Fair Labor Standards Act, a week during which work is performed. 29 U.S.C.A. § 207.

World. This term sometimes denotes all persons whatsoever who may have, claim, or acquire an interest in the subject-matter; as in saying that a judgment in rem binds "all the world."

World Court. See International Court of Justice.

Worldly. Of or pertaining to the world or the present state of existence; temporal; earthly; devoted to, interested in, or connected with this present life, and its cares, advantages, or pleasures, to the exclusion of those of a future life. Concerned with enjoyment of this present existence; secular; not religious; spiritual, or holy.

Worrying cattle or sheep. Within statutes providing that any one finding a dog, not on the premises of its owner, who is worrying cattle or sheep, may kill the dog, means to run after, to chase; to bark at. Falling v. People, 105 Colo. 399, 98 P.2d 865, 867.

Worship. Any form of religious service showing reverence for Divine Being, or exhortation to obedience to or following of the mandates of such Being. Religious exercises participated in by a number of persons assembled for that purpose, the disturbance of which is a statutory offense in many states.

English law. A title of honor or dignity used in addresses to certain magistrates and other persons of rank or office.

Public worship. This term may mean the worship of God, conducted and observed under public authority; or it may mean worship in an open or public place, without privacy or concealment; or it may mean the performance of religious exercises, under a provision for an equal right in the whole public to participate in its benefits; or it may be used in contradistinction to worship in the family or the closet. In this country, what is called "public worship" is commonly conducted by voluntary societies, constituted according to their own notions of ecclesiastical authority and ritual propriety, opening their places of worship, and admitting to their religious services such persons, and upon such terms, and subject to such regulations, as they may choose to designate and establish. A church absolutely belonging to the public, and in which all persons without restriction have equal rights, such as the public enjoy in highways or public landings, is certainly a very rare institution.

Wort or worth. A curtilage or country farm.

Worth. The quality or value of a thing which gives it value. Although "worth" in some connections may mean more than pecuniary value, in law it means that sum of valuable qualities which renders a thing valuable and useful expressed in the current medium of the country. Furnishing an equivalent for. See also Net worth; Value.

Worthier title /wōrdiər tāydəl/. At common law where testator undertook to devise to an heir exactly same interest in land as such heir would take by descent, descent was regarded as the "worthier title" and heir took by descent rather than by devise. Jones v. Petrie, 156 Kan. 241, 132 P.2d 396, 398. Doctrine of worthier title provides that conveyance by grantor with limitation over to grantor's heirs creates reversion in grantor, not remainder interest in heirs, and to take by descent rather than by purchase, is said to create a worthier title. Hatch v. Riggs Nat. Bank, D.C.D.C., 284 F.Supp. 396, 397. This doctrine has been abolished in many states.

Worst of blood. In the English law of descent, a term applied to males, expressive of the preference given to them over females. See 2 Bl.Com. 234-240.

Worthless. Destitute of worth, of no value or use. Spring City Foundry Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 292 U.S. 182, 54 S.Ct. 644, 78 L.Ed. 1200. Worthless check. A check drawn on a bank account which is no longer open or on an account with funds insufficient to cover the check.
Wound, n. An injury to the body of a person or animal.

Worthy, Having worth; possessing merit; valuable;

Wound, v. To inflict a laceration, cut, fracture or wounding. An aggravated species of assault and bat¬ tery, consisting in one person giving another some dangerous hurt. 3 Bl.Comm. 121.

Would, A word sometimes expressing what might be expected or preferred or desired. Often interchangeable with the word "should," but not with "could."

Wound, n. An injury to the body of a person or animal, especially one caused by violence, by which the continuinity of the covering, as skin, mucous membrane, or conjunctiva, is broken. Gasperino v. Prudential Ins.
Co. of America, Mo.App., 107 S.W.2d 819, 827. Also injuries of every kind which affect the body, whether they are cuts, lacerations, fractures, or bruises. Any lesion of the body.

Wound, v. To inflict a laceration, cut, fracture or bruise.

Wounded feelings. Such as result from indignities to self-respect, sensibilities, or pride of a person, as distinguished from usual mental pain and suffering consequent to physical injury. See also Mental cruelty.

Wounding. An aggravated species of assault and battery, consisting in one person giving another some dangerous hurt. 3 Bl.Comm. 121.

Wraparound mortgage. A second mortgage which wraps around or exists in addition to a first or other mortgages. Form of secondary financing typically used on older properties having first mortgages with low interest rates in which a lender assumes the developer’s first mortgage obligation and also loans additional money, taking back from developer a juntior mortgage in total amount at an intermediate interest rate. ICM Realty v. Cabot, Cabot & Forbes Land

Wrath. Not merely anger, but violent anger.

Wreck. To destroy, disable, or seriously damage. To reduce to a wreck or ruinous state by any kind of violence; to overthrow, shatter, or destroy; to cause to crash or suffer ruin, synonymous with ruin, smash, and demolish. Its antonyms are save, salvage, and preserve. Destruction, disorganization, or serious injury of anything, especially by violence. Houston
Printing Co. v. Hunter, Tex.Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 312, 317.

Goods cast ashore by the sea, and not claimed by the owner within a year, or other specified period; which, in such case, become the property of the state.
The term applies to property cast upon land by the sea; to jetsam, flotsam, and ligan.

Common law. Goods cast ashore from a wrecked vessel, where no person has escaped from the wreck alive; and which are forfeited to the crown, or to persons having the franchise of wreck. But if claimed by the true owner within a year and a day the goods, or their proceeds, must be restored to him, by virtue of stat.

Maritime law. A ship becomes a wreck when, in consequence of injuries received, she is rendered absolutely unnavigable, or unable to pursue her voyage, without repairs exceeding the half of her value. A "wrecked vessel," however, in common phraseology, includes a sunken vessel. Act March 3, 1899, § 15

Wreckfree. In old English law, exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels to the king.

Wrench. Violent twist; a sprain and injury by twisting as in a joint. Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Linckeum, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 692, 695. See also Whiplash injury.

Wrinkle. A stria; furrow; channel; hollow; depression; rut; cup; pocket; dimple.

Writ. An order issued from a court requiring the performance of a specified act, or giving authority to have it done. A precept in writing, issuing from a court of justice, addressed to a sheriff or other officer of the law, or directly to the person whose action the court desires to command, either as the commencement of a suit or other proceeding or as incidental to its progress, and requiring the performance of a specified act, or giving authority and commission to have it done. See also Order; Prerogative writs; Process.

In old English law, an instrument in the form of a letter; a letter or letters of attorney. This is a very ancient sense of the word.

In the old books, "writ" is used as equivalent to "action;" hence writs are sometimes divided into real, personal, and mixed.

For the names and description of various particular writs, see the titles below.

Alias writ. A second writ issued in the same cause, where a former writ of the same kind has been issued without effect.

All Writs Act. Federal Act which permits federal appellate courts to "issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law.” 28 U.S.C.A. § 1651.

Close writ. In English law, a name given to certain letters of the sovereign, sealed with his great seal and directed to particular persons and for particular purposes, which, not being proper for public inspection, were closed up and sealed on the outside; also, a writ directed to the sheriff instead of to the lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 346.

Concurrent writs. In England, duplicate originals, or several writs running at the same time for the same purpose, for service on or arrest of a person, when it is not known where he is to be found; or for service on several persons, as when there are several defendants to an action.

Judicial writs. In English practice, the capias and all other writs subsequent to the original writ not issuing out of chancery, but from the court to which the original was returnable. Being grounded on what had passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff’s return, they were called judicial writs, in contradistinction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called original writs. 3 Bl. Comm. 282. Such writer as issue under the private seal of the courts, and not under the great seal of England, and are tested or witnessed, not in the king’s name, but in the name of the chief judge of the court out of which they issue. The word “judicial” is used in contradistinction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called original writs. 3 Bi.Comm. 282. Such original writs as issue under the private seal of the courts, and not under the great seal of England, and are tested or witnessed, not in the king’s name, but in the name of the chief judge of the court out of which they issue. The word “original” is used in contradistinction to “original;” original writs being such as issue out of chancery under the great seal, and are witnessed in the king’s name. 3 Bl. Comm. 282.

Junior writ. One which is issued, or comes to the officer’s hands, at a later time than a similar writ, at the suit of another party, or on a different claim, against the same defendant.

Original writ. In English practice, an original writ was the process formerly in use for the commencement of personal actions. It was a mandatory letter from the king, issuing out of chancery, sealed with the great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed, or was supposed to have been committed, requiring him to command the wrong-doer or accused party either to do justice to the plaintiff or else to appear in court and answer the accusation against him. This writ is now disused, the writ of summons being the process prescribed by the uniformity of process act for commencing personal actions; and under the judicature act, 1873, all suits, even in the court of chancery, are to be commenced by such writs of summons.

Patent writ. In old practice, an open writ; one not closed or sealed up.

Peremptory writ. An original writ, called from the words of the writ a “si te fecerit securum,” which directed the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gave the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. The writ was very occasionally in use, and only where nothing was specifically demanded, but only a satisfaction in general; as in the case of writs of trespass on the case, wherein no debt or other specific thing was sued for, but only damages to be assessed by a jury.

Prerogative writs. Those issued by the exercise of the extraordinary power of the crown (the court, in modern practice) on proper cause shown; namely, the writs of procedendo, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and certiorari.

Writ de bono et malo /rit di bóown ét málow/. See Assise; De Lien et de mal.

Writ de ejectione firmae /rit di ajékshiyówni fármiy/. See Ejectione firme.

Writ de heretico comburendo /rit di härédakow kémbréndow/. See De hereticum comburendo.

Writ de homine replegando /rit di hómaniy rapliyjiyéndow/. See De homine replegando.

Writ de odio et atia /rit di ówdiyow éd éysh(y)á/. See De odio et atia.

Writ de rationabili parte bonorum /rit di ráshe(y)án-éybalay párdíy bowmórám/. See De rationabili parte bonorum.

Write-off. To remove from books of account a debt which has become worthless. The worthless debt itself. See Bad debt.

Writer of the tallies /rådyár ov ðö têlyyz/. In England, an officer of the exchequer whose duty it was to write upon the tallies the letters of tellers’ bills.

Write-up. To increase the valuation of an asset in a financial statement to reflect current value.

Writing. The expression of ideas by letters visible to the eye. The giving an outward and objective form to transactions. Term includes printing, typewriting or other means of recording upon any tangible thing any form of data compilation. Fed.Evid.R. 1001(1).

“Writings” consist of letters, words, or numbers, or their equivalent, set down by handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, magnetic impulse, mechanical or electronic recording, or other means of recording upon any tangible thing any form of communication or representation, including letters, words, pictures, sounds, or symbols, or combinations thereof. Calif.Evid.Code.

Writing obligatory. The technical name by which a bond is described in pleading.

Writ of ad quod damnum /ríd av ád kwód dámnam/. See Ad quod damnum.

Writ of assistance. The name of a writ which issues from the court of chancery, in aid of the execution of a judgment at law, to put the complainant into possession of lands adjudged to him, when the sheriff
Writ of attachment. A form of process issued by an equity court to transfer the possession of lands, title or possession to which it has previously adjudicated, as a means of enforcing its decree, and performs the same office in a suit in equity as an execution in an action at law. Burney v. Lee, 57 Ariz. 41, 110 P.2d 554, 555. Its office is confined to lend aid to original equity jurisdiction, and the writ cannot be employed as a substitute for other common-law or statutory actions. Patterson v. McKay, 202 Ark. 241, 150 S.W.2d 196. It is essentially a mandatory injunction, effect of which is to bring about a change in the possession of realty—it dispossesses the occupant and gives possession to one adjudged entitled thereto by the court. Dusbabek v. Local Building & Loan Ass'n, 178 Okl. 592, 63 P.2d 756, 759.

A writ of assistance is equivalent to the writ of habere facias possessionem at law, and issues as of course without notice, so far as the parties to the record are concerned, when necessary to execute a decree.

While the office of both a writ of assistance and a writ of possession is to put the party entitled thereto into the possession of property, the former issues from equity and the latter from law. In England, an ancient writ issuing out of the exchequer. A writ issuing from the court of exchequer to the sheriff commanding him to be in aid of the king's tenants by his subordinate officers) are directed to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants; and they are required to admit the said persons into their society in order to take the assizes. 3 Bl.Comm. 59.

Writ of association. In English practice a writ whereby certain persons (usually the clerk of assize and his subordinate officers) are directed to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants; and they are required to admit the said persons into their society in order to take the assizes. See also Attachment.

Writ of capias. See Capias.

Writ of certiorari. An order by the appellate court which is used when the court has discretion on whether or not to hear an appeal. If the writ is denied, the court refuses to hear the appeal and, in effect, the judgment below stands unchanged. If the writ is granted, then it has the effect of ordering the lower court to certify the record and send it up to the higher court which has used its discretion to hear the appeal. See also Certiorari.

Writ of conspiracy. A writ which is used when a party has conspired to injure the plaintiff, under the same circumstances which would now give him an action on the case. It did not lie at common law in any case, except when the conspiracy was to indict the party either of treason or felony; all the other cases of conspiracy in the books were but actions on the case.

Writ of covenant. A writ which lies where a party claims damages for breach of covenant; i.e., of a promise under seal.

Writ of debt. A writ which lies where the party claims the recovery of a debt; i.e., a liquidated or certain sum of money alleged to be due to him.

Writ of deciet. The name of a writ which lies where one man has done anything in the name of another, by which the latter is damned and deceived.

Writ of delivery. A writ of execution employed to enforce a judgment for the delivery of chattels. It commands the sheriff to cause the chattels mentioned in the writ to be returned to the person who has obtained the judgment; and, if the chattels cannot be found, to distrain the person against whom the judgment was given until he returns them.

Writ of detinue. A writ which lies where a party claims the specific recovery of goods and chattels, or deeds and writings, detained from him. This is seldom used; trover is the more frequent remedy, in cases where it may be brought.

Writ of dower. This is either a writ of dower unde nihil habet, which lies for a widow, commanding the tenant to assign her dower, no part of which has yet been set off to her; or a writ of right of dower, whereby she seeks to recover the remainder of the dower to which she is entitled, part having been already received from the tenant. This latter writ is seldom used.

Writ of ejectment. The writ in an action of ejectment, for the recovery of lands. See Ejectment.

Writ of entry. A real action to recover the possession of land where the tenant (or owner) has been dispossessed or otherwise wrongfully dispossessed. If the disseisor has aliened the land, or if it has descended to his heir, the writ of entry is said to be in the per, because it alleges that the defendant (the alienee or heir) obtained possession through the original disseisor. If two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the per and cui, because it alleges that the defendant (the second alienee) obtained possession through the first alienee, to whom the original disseisor had aliened it. If more than two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the post, because it simply alleges that the defendant acquired possession after the original disseisin. 3 Bl.Comm. 180. The writ of entry was abolished, with other real actions, in England, by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, § 36, but is still in use in a few of the states. Under rules practice, such writ has been abolished in favor of a civil action which grants similar relief, e.g. Mass.R. Civ.P. 81(b). See also Entry, writ of.

Writ of error. A writ issued from a court of appellate jurisdiction, directed to the judge or judges of a court of record, requiring them to remit to the appellate court the record of an action before them, in which a final judgment has been entered, in order that examination may be made of certain errors alleged to have been committed, and that the judgment may be reversed, corrected, or affirmed, as the case may require. It is brought for supposed error in law apparent on record and takes case to higher tribunal, which affirms or reverses. It is commencement of new suit to set aside judgment, and is not continuation of suit to which it relates. Winchester v. Winn, 225 Mo. App. 288, 29 S.W.2d 188, 190. And unless abolished by statute, is writ of right applicable to all cases in which jurisdiction is exercised according to course of common law, but is inapplicable to cases not known to or in derogation of common law, unless otherwise provided by statute. See also Writ of error coram nobis; Writ of error coram vobis.

Writ of error coram nobis /rid av éhrar kóram nówbás/. A common-law writ, the purpose of which is to correct a judgment in the same court in which it was rendered, on the ground of error of fact, for which the statute provides no other remedy, which fact did not appear of record, or was unknown to the court when judgment was pronounced, and which, if known, would have prevented the judgment, and which was unknown, and could not have been known to the party by the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to have been otherwise presented to the court, unless he was prevented from so presenting them by duress, fear, or other sufficient cause.

An ordinary "writ of error" is brought for a supposed error in law apparent on the record, and takes the case to a higher tribunal where the question is to be decided and the judgment, sentence or decree is to be affirmed or reversed, while the "writ of error coram nobis" is brought for an alleged error in fact not appearing on the record and lies to the same court in order that it may correct the error, which it is presumed would not have been committed had the fact been brought to the court's notice in the first instance.

At common law in England, it issued from the Court of King's Bench to a judgment of that court. Its principal aim is to afford the court in which an action was tried an opportunity to correct its own record with reference to a vital fact not known when the judgment was rendered. It is also said that at common law it lay to correct purely ministerial errors of the officers of the court.

See also Coram nobis.

Writ of error coram vobis /rid av éhrar kóram vówbas/. This writ, at the English common law, is distinguished from "writ of error coram nobis," in that the former issued from the Court of King's Bench to a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, whereas the latter issued from the Court of King's Bench to a judgment of that court. See also Coram vobis.

Writ of execution. A writ to put in force the judgment or decree of a court. See Execution.

Writ of exigi facias /rid av égzajay féysh(iy)as/. See Exempt.

Writ of formedon /rid av förmedon/. A writ which lies for the recovery of an estate by a person claiming as issue in tail, or by the remainder-man or reversioner after the termination of the entail. See Formedon.

Writ of habeas corpus. See Habeas corpus.

Writ of inquiry. In common-law practice, a writ which issued after the plaintiff in an action had obtained a judgment by default, on an unliquidated claim, direct-
Writ of restitution. A writ which is issued on the occasion of the judgment to restore a party to all that he has lost by a distress, the defendant distrains again for the same rent or service, the owner of the goods is not allowed to another action of replevin, but is allowed a writ of restitution, by which he recovers the goods and damages for the defendant's contempt of the process of the law in making a second distress while the matter is sub judice.

Writ of replevin. See Replevin.

Writ of restitution. A writ which is issued on the reversal of a judgment commanding the sheriff to restore to the defendant below the thing levied upon, if it has not been sold, and, if it has been sold, the proceeds. A writ which lies, after the reversal of a judgment, to restore a party to all that he has lost by occasion of the judgment.

Writ of review. A general designation of any form of process issuing from an appellate court and intended to bring up for review the record or decision of the court below. See Writ of certiorari.

Writ of right. A writ which lay for one who had the right of property, against another who had the right of possession and the actual occupation. The writ properly lay only to recover corporeal hereditaments for an estate in fee-simple; but there were other writs, said to be "in the nature of a writ of right," available for the recovery of incorporeal hereditaments or of laims for a less estate than a fee-simple. 3 Bl.Comm. 391.

In another sense, a writ which is grantable as a matter of right, as opposed to a "prerogative writ," which is issued only as a matter of grace or discretion.

In England, the writ of right was abolished in 1833.

Writ of summons. The writ by which, under the English judicature acts, all actions are commenced.

Writ of supersedeas /rit pròw ratomow habendow/. See Supersedeas.

Writ of supervisory control. A writ which is issued only as a matter of grace or discretion, as opposed to a "prerogative writ," which is issued only as a matter of grace or discretion.

Writ of supervisory control course of litigation in trial court when necessary to prevent miscarriage of justice, and may be employed to prevent extended and needless litigation. State ex rel. Regia v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 102 Mont. 74, 55 P.2d 1295.

Function of "writ of supervisory control" is to enable Supreme Court to control course of litigation in inferior courts where such courts are proceeding within their jurisdiction, but by mistake of law, or willful disregard of it, are doing gross injustice, and there is no appeal or remedy by appeal is inadequate. State ex rel. State Bank of Townsend v. District Court of First Judicial Dist. in and for Lewis and Clark County, 94 Mont. 551, 25 P.2d 396.

Writ of trial. In English law, a writ directing an action brought in a superior court to be tried in an inferior court or before the undersheriff, under St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42. It was superseded by the county courts act of 1867, c. 142, § 6, by which a defendant, in certain cases, became enabled to obtain an order that the action be tried in a county court.

Writ of waste. The name of a writ to be issued against a tenant who has committed waste of the premises. There were anciently several forms of this writ, adapted to the particular circumstances.

Writ pro retorno habendo /rit pròw ratomow habendow/. A writ commanding the return of the goods to the defendant, upon a judgment in his favor in replevin, upon the plaintiff's default.

Written contract. See Contract.

Written instrument. Something reduced to writing as a means of evidence, and as the means of giving formal expression to some act or contract. See Instrument.

Written law. Statutory law; i.e. law deriving its force from express legislative enactment. See also Common law; Statute.

One of the two leading divisions of the Roman law, comprising the leges, plebiscita, senatus-consulta, principum placita, magistratum edicta, and responsa prudentum.

Wrong. A violation of the legal rights of another; an invasion of right to the damage of the parties who suffer it, especially a tort. State ex rel. and to Use of Donelon v. Deuser, 345 Mo. 628, 134 S.W.2d 132, 133. It usually signifies injury to person, property or relative noncontractual rights of another than wrongdoer, with or without force, but, in more extended sense, includes violation of contract. Daurizio v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co., 152 Misc. 716, 274 N.Y.S. 174. See Tort.

The idea of rights naturally suggests the correlative one of wrongs: for every right is capable of being violated. A right to receive payment for goods sold (for example) implies a wrong on the part of him who owes, but withholds the price; a right to live in personal security, a wrong on the part of him who commits personal violence. And therefore, while, in a general point of view, the law is intended for the establishment and maintenance of rights, we find it, on closer examination, to be dealing both with rights and wrongs. It first fixes the character and definition of rights, and then, with a view to their effectual security, proceeds to define wrongs, and to devise the means by which the latter shall be prevented or redressed.

Private wrong. The violation of public or private rights, when considered in reference to the injury sustained by the individual, and consequently as subjects for civil redress or compensation. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U.S. 657, 13 S.Ct. 224, 36 L.Ed. 1123. See Tort.

Public wrongs. Violations of public rights and duties which affect the whole community, considered as a community; crimes and misdemeanors. 3 Bl.Comm. 2; 4 Bl.Comm. 1.

Real wrong. In old English law, an injury to the freehold.
Wrongdoer. One who commits an injury; a tort-feasor. The term ordinarily imports an invasion of right to the damage of the party who suffers such invasion.

Wrongful abuse of process. See Abuse of process; Malicious abuse of legal process.

Wrongful act. Any act which in the ordinary course will infringe upon the rights of another to his damage, unless it is done in the exercise of an equal or superior right. Term is occasionally equated to term “negligent,” but generally has been considered more comprehensive term, including criminal, willful, wanton, reckless and all other acts which in ordinary course will infringe upon rights of another to his damage. County of DuPage v. Kussel, 12 Ill.App.3d 272, 298 N.E.2d 323, 326.

Wrongful death action. Type of lawsuit brought on behalf of a deceased person’s beneficiaries that alleges that death was attributable to the willful or negligent act of another. Such action is original and distinct claim for damages sustained by statutory beneficiaries and is not derivative of or continuation of claim existing in decedent. Barragan v. Superior Court of Pima County, 12 Ariz.App. 402, 470 P.2d 722, 724. See Kilberg doctrine.

Wrongful death statutes. Such statutes, which exist in all states, provide a cause of action in favor of the decedent’s personal representative for the benefit of certain beneficiaries (e.g. spouse, parent, children) against person who negligently caused death of spouse, child, parent, etc. Statutory provision which operates upon the common-law rule that the death of a human being may not be complained of as an injury in a civil court. The cause of action for wrongful death permitted under such statutes is for the wrong to the beneficiaries. Most such statutes are compensatory though some states retain statutes which measure damages in terms of culpability and some statutes reflect a combination of both. See also Death on High Seas Act; Lord Campbell Act; Survival statutes; Wrongful death action.

Wrongful levy. Such as will entitle the owner of property levied on to damages for wrongful execution, exists where there has been done to a third person’s personality those acts that would constitute a valid and complete levy if the debtor’s property had been seized. Farris v. Castor, 186 Okl., 99 P.2d 900, 902, 903.

Wrongful life action. In a wrongful birth or life action the parents of an unplanned child seek to shift to the defendant various costs, including medical expenses of pregnancy and delivery, pain and suffering, and the more formidable costs of rearing and educating a child. As the history of this litigation has progressed, the damages claimed have been more extensive. The litigation arises in several contexts. Malpracticed sterilization operations, including both tubal ligations and vasectomies constitute the major number of suits. Included also are failures to diagnose pregnancy in time for abortion and failures to perform successful abortions. The suits are brought mainly on the basis of negligence. Lane v. Cohen, 201 So.2d 804. However, breach of warranty, breach of contract, and misrepresentation have also been alleged as bases of liability.

A doctor whose incorrect medical advice led a couple to have a second child who died of the same hereditary disease that killed their first baby can be sued for malpractice. Park v. Chessin, 60 A.D.2d 80, 400 N.Y.S.2d 110. Also, a doctor whose negligently performed vasectomy resulted in an unwanted child may be sued for malpractice. Sherlock v. Stillwater Clinic, 260 N.W.2d 169.

Wrongfully. In a wrong manner; unjustly; in a manner contrary to the moral law, or to justice. See also Wrongful.

Wrongfully Intending. In the language of pleading, this phrase is appropriate to be used in alleging the malicious motive of the defendant in committing the injury which forms the cause of action.

Wurth /wərθ/. In Saxon law, worthy; competent; capable. Atheswurthe, worthy of oath; admissible or competent to be sworn.

Wye /wai/. As applied to a street railway, a “wye” means a track with two branches, one joining the main track from one direction and the other joining the main track from another direction.

Wyte /wai/. In old English law, acquittance or immunity from amercement.
X. In the written terminology of various arts and trades, where two or more dimensions of the same piece or article are to be stated, this letter is a well-known symbol equivalent to the word "by." Thus, the formula "3 x 5 in." will be understood, or may be explained by parol evidence, to mean "three by five inches," that is, measuring three inches in one direction and five in another.

Xenodochium /zenadokáyam/ dókiyam/. In the civil and old English law, an inn allowed by public license, for the entertainment of strangers, and other guests. Also, a hospital; a place where sick and infirm persons are taken care of.

Xenodochy /zenadókiy/*. Reception of stranger; hospitality.

Xylon /záylon/. A punishment among the Greeks answering to stocks.
Ya et nay. In old records, mere assertion and denial, without oath. See also Yea and nay.

Yard. A measure of length, containing three feet, or thirty-six inches.

A piece of land inclosed for the use and accommodation of the inhabitants of a house. Grounds of building or group of buildings.

An enclosure, with or without buildings, devoted to some work or business.

Yardland, or virgata terre /vargéyda téhriy/. A quantity of land, said by some to be twenty acres, but by Coke to be of uncertain extent.

Yea and nay. Yes and no. According to a charter of Athelstan, the people of Ripon were to be believed in all actions or suits upon their yea and nay, without the necessity of taking any oath. See also Yeas and nays.

Year. The period in which the revolution of the earth round the sun, and the accompanying changes in the order of nature, are completed. Generally, when a statute speaks of a year, twelve calendar, and not lunar, months are intended. The year is either astronomical, ecclesiastical, or regnal, beginning on the 1st of January, or 25th of March, or the day of the sovereign's accession.

The civil year differs from the astronomical, the latter being composed of three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight minutes, forty-six seconds and a fraction, while the former consists sometimes of three hundred and sixty-five days, and at others, in leap-years, of three hundred and sixty-six days.

When the period of a "year" is named, a calendar year is generally intended, but the subject-matter or context of statute or contract in which the term is found or to which it relates may alter its meaning.

See also Current year; Fiscal year; Taxable year.

Calendar year. See Calendar.

Natural year. In old English law, that period of time in which the sun was supposed to revolve in its orbit, consisting of 365 days and one-fourth of a day, or six hours.

Year and day. This period was fixed for many purposes in law. Thus, in the case of an estray, if the owner did not claim it within that time, it became the property of the lord. So the owners of wreck must claim it within a year and a day. Death must follow upon wounding within a year and a day if the wounding is to be indicted as murder. Also, a year and a day were given for prosecuting or avoiding certain legal acts; e.g., for bringing actions after entry, for making claim for avoiding a fine, etc. See also Year and a day rule.

Year Books. Books of reports of cases in a regular series from the reign of the English King Edward I, inclusive, to the time of Henry VIII, which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the crown, and published annually; whence their name, "Year Books."

Year, day, and waste. In English law, an ancient prerogative of the king, whereby he was entitled to the profits, for a year and a day, of the lands of persons attainted of petty treason or felony, together with the right of wasting the tenements, afterwards restoring the property to the lord of the fee. Abrogated by St. 54 Geo. III, c. 145. See An, jour, et waste.

Year of Our Lord. In England the time of an offense may be alleged as that of the sovereign's reign, or as that of the year of our Lord. The former is the usual mode. Hence there "year" alone might not indicate the time intended, but as we have no other era, therefore, any particular year must mean that year in our era. The abbreviation A.D. may be omitted; and the word year is not fatal.

Year to year, tenancy from. This estate arises either expressly, as when land is let from year to year; or by a general parol demise, without any determinate interest, but reserving the payment of an annual rent; or impliedly, as when property is occupied generally under a rent payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly; or when a tenant holds over, after the expiration of his term, without having entered into any new contract, and pays rent (before which he is tenant on sufferance). See, also, Tenant, subtitle Tenant from year to year.

Years, estate for. See Estate for years.

Year and a day rule. At common law, death could not be attributed to defendant's wrongful conduct unless it occurred within a year and a day of the conduct. The rationale for this rule was the lack of medical precision in determining cause after such a long period of time, coupled with the very real probability of an intervening cause being responsible for the death. In view of the medical advances of the twentieth century, it can be argued that the year and a day rule is obsolete and should be discarded. Although some jurisdictions have done this either by legislation or judicial decision, most jurisdictions have not. See Elliott v. Mills, Okl.Cr.App., 335 P.2d 1104.

Yearly. See Annual; Annually.

Year of mourning. The Roman "annus luctus" (q.v.).

The reason for the widow’s year of mourning has been stated as follows: "But if a man dies, and his widow soon after marries again, and a child is born within such a time as by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband, in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate; for he may, when he arrives at years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases. To prevent this, the civil law ordained that no widow should marry for one year, and the same constitution was probably transmitted to our ancestors from the Romans, during their stay in Britain, for we find it established under the Saxon and Danish governments.” 1 Bl. Comm. 456.

Year to year tenancy. See Tenancy.

Yeas and nays. The affirmative and negative votes on a bill or measure before a legislative assembly. "Calling the yeas and nays" is calling for the individual and oral vote of each member, usually upon a call of the roll.

Yellow dog contract. A contract by which employer requires employee to sign an instrument promising as condition that he will not join a union during its continuance, and will be discharged if he does join. Denver Local Union No. 13 of International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen, and Helpers of America v. Perry Truck Lines, 106 Colo. 25, 101 P.2d 436, 443. Such contracts are prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act, the Norris LaGuardia Act and the Railway Labor Act.

Yellow journalism. Type of journalism which distorts and exploits the news by sensationalism in order to sell copies of the newspapers or magazines.

Yeeme /'yi:m/. In old records, winter; a corruption of the Latin “hiems”.

Yeoman /'y6m'n/. In English law, a commoner; a freeholder under the rank of gentleman. A man who has free land of forty shillings by the year; who was ancetantly thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is probus et legalis homo. 1 Bl.Comm. 406, 407.

This term is occasionally used in American law, but without any definite meaning, except in the United States navy, where it designates an appointive petty officer who performs clerical duties usually associated with office workers.

Yeomanry /'y6m'nrrl//. The collected body of yeomen.

Yeomen of the guard. Properly called “yeomen of the guard of the royal household;” a body of men of the best rank under the gentry, and of a larger stature than ordinary, every one being required to be six feet high.

Yeven, or yeoven /'yi:v/. Given; dated.

Yick Wo doctrine. Doctrine which takes its name from the case of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 6 S.Ct. 1064, 30 L.Ed. 220, to the effect that a law or ordinance which gives a person or body of persons absolute discretion to give or withhold permission to carry on a lawful business is in violation of the 14th Amendment, U.S.Const.

Yiddish. A Middle High German dialect, or number of dialects, spoken by Jews, containing a large number of Germanized Hebrew words, and using Hebrew characters for its literature.

Yield. To give up, relinquish, or surrender. Term also refers to a return from an investment or expenditure. The dividends or interest paid by a company expressed as a percentage of the current price. See also Net yield; Yield upon investment.

In old English law, to perform a service due by a tenant to his lord. Hence the usual form of reservation of a rent in a lease began with the words “yielding and paying.”

Yielding and paying. In conveyancing, the initial words of that clause in leases in which the rent to be paid by the lessee is mentioned and reserved.

Yield upon investment. Proportionate rate which the income upon an investment bears to the total cost, taking into consideration the time when the investment may be outstanding before being paid off. Baltimore Mail S. S. Co. v. United States, D.C.Md., 7 F.Supp. 651, 653.

Yokelet /'y6kldt/. A little farm, requiring but a yoke of oxen to till it.

Yom Kippur. Day of Atonement; is the most sacred and solemn holiday in the Jewish calendar, a day on which Jews throughout the world, after a period of fasting, congregate together at their respective synagogues to worship and pray and ask divine forgiveness for sins committed during the year. Hoffman v. Graber, Mo.App., 153 S.W.2d 817, 818.

York-Antwerp rules /'y6rk '4ntwpr ruluiz/. Certain rules relating to uniform bills of lading and also governing settlement of maritime losses among the several interests such as ship owners, cargo owners, etc. These rules are commonly incorporated in contracts of affreightment. They are the result of conferences of representatives of mercantile interests from several countries, in the interest of uniformity of law. They have no statutory authority.

York, Custom of. A custom of the province of York in England, by which the effects of an intestate, after payment of his debts, were in general divided according to the ancient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis; that is, one-third each to the widow, children, and administrator. 2 Bl.Comm. 518.

York, Statute of. An important English statute passed at the city of York, in the twelfth year of Edward II, containing provisions on the subject of attorneys, witnesses, the taking of inquests by nisi prius, etc.

Youth. This word includes children and young persons of both sexes.

Youthful offenders. Those youths who are treated as delinquents and not as criminals in the juvenile courts. The qualifying age differs from state to state.
Zamindar. See Zemindar.

Zanja /sánha/. Span. A water ditch or artificial canal, and particularly one used for purposes of irrigation.

Zanjero /sanherow/. Span. A water commissioner or superintendent, or supervisor of an irrigation system.

Zealous witness. An untechnical term denoting a witness, on the trial of a cause, who manifests a partiality for the side calling him, and an eager readiness to tell anything which he thinks may be of advantage to that side.

Zeir /yir/. O. Sc. Year. “Zeir and day.”

Zemindar /zamindar/ /zéman/ /zéman/. In Hindu law, landkeeper. An officer who under the Mohammedan government was charged with the financial superintendence of the lands of a district, the protection of the cultivators, and the realization of the government’s share of its produce, either in money or kind.

Zetetic. Proceeding by inquiry.

Zone of employment. Within which injuries to employees are compensable under workmen’s compensation acts, is the place of employment and the area therein, including the means of ingress thereto and egress therefrom under the control of the employer. Merz v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 134 Ohio St. 36, 15 N.E.2d 632, 633, 11 O.O. 414. It implies reasonable proximity to place of employment. Evans v. Workmen’s Compensation Commissioner, 124 W.Va. 336, 20 S.E.2d 172, 173.

Zone theory. In law of trespass and nuisance, flights above one’s property may be actionable depending upon whether they are in the airspace of the lower zone or in the zone beyond the owner’s “effective possession”. Smith v. New England Aircraft Co., 270 Mass. 511, 170 N.E. 385.

Right of privacy is primarily restraint upon unwarranted governmental interference or intrusion into areas deemed to be within protected “zones of privacy.” Industrial Foundation of the South v. Texas Indus. Acc. Bd., Tex., 540 S.W.2d 668, 679.

Zoning. The division of a city by legislative regulation into districts and the prescription and application in each district of regulations having to do with structural and architectural designs of buildings and of regulations prescribing use to which buildings within designated districts may be put.

See also Buffer-zone; Cluster zoning; Comprehensive zoning plan; Conforming use; Land use planning; Master plan; Official map; Planned unit development; Special exception; Special use permit; Spot zoning; Variance.

Aesthetic zoning. Zoning regulations designed to preserve the aesthetic features or values of an area.

Cluster zoning. Zoning regulations and laws designed to provide no greater residential density than the basic minimum lot size zoning district.

Conditional zoning. The imposition of specific restrictions upon the landowner as a condition of full realization of the benefit of rezoning.

Contract zoning. Rezoning of a property to a less restrictive zoning classification subject to an agreement by the landowner to observe certain specified limitations on the uses and physical development of the property that other properties in the zone are not required to observe. This device is used particularly in dealing with property located in a more restrictive zone but on the borderline of the less restrictive zone, for which classification the rezoning is sought.

Density zoning. Type of cluster zoning which regulates open spaces, density of population and use of land. Chrinco v. South Brunswick Township Planning Board, 77 N.J.Super. 594, 187 A.2d 221. Density zoning requires state enabling legislation. Under this device, the city council determines what percentage of a particular district must be devoted to open space and what percentage may be used for dwelling units. The task of locating in the particular district the housing and open spaces devolves upon the planning commission working in conjunction with the developer. The latter will submit a series of plans and seek approval to go forward at each stage. See also Planned Unit Development.

Euclidean zoning. Type of zoning based on district and-use. It envisions the specification of determined geographic areas separated according to zoning districts with the uses permitted in each district set forth in the ordinances. Thus, a property owner could from the zoning map determine in what type of district the property was located and by reference to the district’s restrictions what uses are permitted. Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114, 71 L.Ed. 303.

Exclusionary zoning. Type of zoning which has been challenged on the grounds that it serves to erect exclusionary walls on the municipality’s boundary.
according to local selfishness for socially improper goals which are beyond the legitimate purpose of zoning. The trend in the courts is to strike down such zoning.

Floating zone. In an attempt to avoid the inflexibility of mapped districts, some communities have created exceptional use districts to allow small tracts for such uses as shopping centers, garden type apartments or light industry. At time of ordinance approval the district is unlocated.

Spot zoning. Changing the zoning of a particular piece of land without regard to the zoning plan for the area. See also Spot zoning.

Zoning map. The map created by a zoning ordinance which displays the various zoning districts.

Zygocephalum. In the civil law, a measure or quantity of land. As much land as a yoke of oxen could plow in a day.

Zygostates. In the civil law, a weigher; an officer who held or looked to the balance in weighing money between buyer and seller; an officer appointed to determine controversies about the weight of money.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

PREAMBLE

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. [1] The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

[2] No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

[3] Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to chuse three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

[4] When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

[5] The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. [1] The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

[2] Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the Second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

[3] No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

Blacks Law Dictionary 5th Ed.—48
1491
[4] The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

[5] The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President prò tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

[6] The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

[7] Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust, or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment, and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4.  [1] The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

[2] The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. [1] Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

[2] Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

[3] Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

[4] Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. [1] The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

[2] No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. [1] All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

[2] Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to the House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by Yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return in which Case it shall not be a Law.

[3] Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. [1] The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform through¬ out the United States:

[2] To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

[3] To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

[4] To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

[5] To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

[6] To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

[7] To Establish Post Offices and Post Roads;

[8] To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Dis¬ covers;

[9] To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

[10] To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

[11] To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concern¬ ing Captures on Land and Water;

[12] To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

[13] To provide and maintain a Navy;

[14] To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

[15] To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

[16] To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for govern¬ ing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;
[17] To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

[18] To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

Section 9. [1] The Migration or Importation of Such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

[2] The privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

[3] No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

[4] No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

[5] No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

[6] No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

[7] No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

[8] No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

Section 10. [1] No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

[2] No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

[3] No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE II

Section 1. [1] The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows:

[2] Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

[3] The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States the Representation from each State having one Vote; A quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greater Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice President.

[4] The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

[5] No person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

[6] In case of the removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

[7] The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

[8] Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. [1] The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the Executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

[2] He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur: and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law; but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

[3] The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

ARTICLE III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. [1] The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;—to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under the Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

[2] In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be a Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

[3] The trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. [1] Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levy of War against them, or, in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

[2] The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attained.

ARTICLE IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general
UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. [1] The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

[2] A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

[3] No Person held to Service or Labour in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labour, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labour may be due.

Section 3. [1] New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

[2] The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

ARTICLE V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE VI

[1] All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

[2] This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.
[3] The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

ARTICLE VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

ARTICLES IN ADDITION TO, AND AMENDMENT OF, THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PROPOSED BY CONGRESS, AND RATIFIED BY THE LEGISLATURES OF THE SEVERAL STATES PURSUANT TO THE FIFTH ARTICLE OF THE ORIGINAL CONSTITUTION.

AMENDMENT I [1791]

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

AMENDMENT II [1791]

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

AMENDMENT III [1791]

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

AMENDMENT IV [1791]

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

AMENDMENT V [1791]

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

AMENDMENT VI [1791]

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

AMENDMENT VII [1791]

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

AMENDMENT VIII [1791]

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

AMENDMENT IX [1791]

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

AMENDMENT X [1791]

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

AMENDMENT XI [1798]

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

AMENDMENT XII [1804]

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate:—The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

AMENDMENT XIII [1865]

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

AMENDMENT XIV [1868]

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.
No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

AMENDMENT XV [1870]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.
Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XVI [1913]

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII [1913]

[1] The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

[2] When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

[3] This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XVIII [1919]

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XIX [1920]

[1] The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

[2] Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XX [1933]

Section 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If the President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

Amendment XXI [1933]

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXII [1951]

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXIII [1961]

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous state; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the states, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a state; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV [1964]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV [1967]

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration and the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the power and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.
Sections 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Proposed Constitutional Amendment *

Section 1. For purposes of representation in Congress, election of the President and Vice President, and Article V of this Constitution, the District constituting the seat of government of the United States shall be treated as though it were a State.

Section 2. The exercise of the rights and powers conferred under this article shall be by the people of the District constituting the seat of government and shall be as provided by Congress.

Section 3. The twenty-third Amendment to the Constitution is hereby repealed.

Section 4. This article shall be inoperative, unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

* Congress submitted this proposed amendment to the states for ratification in August, 1978.
TIME CHART OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

The following table is designed to aid the user in identifying the composition of the Court at any given time in American history. Each listing is headed by the Chief Justice, whose name is italicized. Associate Justices are listed following the Chief Justice in order of seniority. In addition to dates of appointment, the table provides information on political party affiliation. Following each Justice is a symbol representing his party affiliation at the time of appointment:

- F = Federalist
- DR = Democratic Republican (Jeffersonian)
- D = Democrat
- W = Whig
- R = Republican
- I = Independent

* Rutledge was a recess appointment whose confirmation was rejected by the Senate after the 1795 Term.
 Upon the death of Catron in 1865 and Wayne in 1867 their positions were abolished according to a congressional act of 1866. The Court's membership was reduced to eight until a new position was created by Congress in 1869. The new seat has generally been regarded as a re-creation of Wayne's seat.
 According to Professor Henry Abraham, "Many—and with some justice—consider Brandeis a Democrat; however, he was in fact a registered Republican when nominated." Freedom and the Court 455 (3d ed., 1977).
